batant and as a loyal citizen, and it does not matter whether he was or was not loyal, he should not have his property confiscated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does the Senator think he entered into the butchering business, supplying——

Mr. SPOONER. I will get to that. There is no question of confiscating his property. The question I put to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming is whether, having acquired the property in violation of the nonintercourse act, he had any property in it in law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if Warren Mitchell had stayed, after he bought that cotton, south of the line and had claimed that that was his residence, and it was a mere matter of a statement or choice for him where he selected and designated, there would have been no question about his receiving the money for the cotton.

Mr. SPOONER. This claim has been pushed and pushed. It was once rejected by the Senate, three times adversely reported by the Committee on Claims, once by Senator Angus Cameron, once by Senator Jackson, of Tennessee, afterwards an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, one of the ablest jurists who ever sat upon that bench, and one of the most faithful men who ever served in this Chamber.

Mr. WARREN. It was also reported favorably——

Mr. SPOONER. I was going to say that.

Mr. WARREN. By former Senator Gray, who is also a distinguished member of the United States circuit court, and by other distinguished Senators.

Mr. SPOONER. I was going to say that. Once there was a minority report signed by Senator HOAR, Senator Dolph, and myself.

One of the last reports I made before I left the Senate was a minority report, and an elaborate one, the result of very careful investigation, in which Senator HOAR concurred.

I assert, without fear of successful contradiction anywhere, Mr. President, that so far as the law is concerned, as settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, Warren Mitchell had no title whatever to this cotton, no matter who else may have.

It was contraband of war. He had acquired it in violation of the nonintercourse act, and it was seized at Savannah. Senators say that he went South simply to collect some debts. I ask the attention of the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 6758) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I understand that the bill which has been before the Senate can not be passed without considerable more debate.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from North Dakota is correctly informed.

Mr. MCCUMBER. So I suppose we may as well go on with the unfinished business.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, my speech is to be continued at our next session at which this subject comes up.

Mr. WARREN. I have no wish to displace the appropriation bill, if I had the power. It has been perfectly apparent from the first that the time until 2 o'clock would be consumed in the debate. Of course, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the bill must be laid aside for the present.

MINERAL LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 13298) to amend section 2327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to lands, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that that bill may be taken up for present consideration and passed. The Sen te has passed a bill similar in almost every respect to that bill, and if the House bill is passed by the Senate I will withdraw the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It will be read.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2327. The description of vein or lode claims upon surveyed lands shall designate the location of the claims with reference to the lines of the public survey, but need not conform therewith; but where patents have been or shall be issued for claims upon unsurveyed lands, the surveyors-general, in extending the public survey, shall adjust the same to the boundaries of said patented claims so as in no case to interfere with or change the true location of such claims as they are officially established upon the ground. Where patents have issued for mineral lands, those lands only shall be segregated and shall be deemed to be patented which are bounded by the lines actually marked, defined, and established upon the ground by the monuments of the official survey upon which the patent grant is based, and surveyors-general in executing subsequent patent surveys, whether upon surveyed or unsurveyed lands, shall be governed accordingly. The said monuments shall at all times constitute the highest authority as to what land is patented, and in case of any conflict between the said monuments of such patented claims and the descriptions of said claims in the patents issued therefor the monuments on the ground shall govern, and erroneous or inconsistent descriptions or calls in the patent descriptions shall give way thereto."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3596) to amend section 2327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning mineral lands.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The bill (H. R. 12647) to establish a supreme court for the Indian Territory and to provide for additional United States judges therein, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. On last Monday the Senate passed a bill on the same subject, and at the same time the House passed a bill. The House bill has come over here and our bill has gone to the House. I ask that the bill be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and to substitute for it the bill which we passed in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and to substitute the bill as it passed the Senate.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and insert the following:

That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, four additional judges of the United States court in the Indian Territory, one for the northern district, one for the western district, one for the central district, and one for the southern district. And said judges shall have all the authority, exercise all the powers, perform like duties, and receive the same salary as other judges of said court, and shall each serve for a term of two years from date of appointment, and shall be members of the court of appeals for the Indian Territory: Provided, That none of said judges shall have power to appoint clerks of courts, United States commissioners, or United States constables.

Mr. TELLER. Before that is done, I move an amendment to the bill if I am in order to move it now. I do not know whether I should wait until the substitute is adopted and then amend the amendment, or whether I should move to amend the bill as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be entirely in order to amend the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Then I move to add as an additional section the following:

That an additional recording district in the Indian Territory is hereby established, with a United States court at Wapanucka. The boundaries of said recording district shall be fixed by the judge of the central district of Indian Territory, who shall also have authority to appoint a commissioner and constable for said district.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I hope the Senate will not assent to this amendment. I will state the difference between the House bill and the Senate bill. The Senate bill is for the appointment of four judges in the Indian Territory, who shall serve two years and who shall be members of the court of appeals. That is all there is of the Senate bill. The House bill provides for the appointment of three judges in the Indian Territory to serve four years, who shall not be members of the court of appeals, and they have added a provision for the making of five or six new recording districts there.

Now, the Senator from Colorado proposes to provide for the making of a new recording district, and wants to attach it as an amendment to the substituted Senate bill. I think it will embarrass us very much when we come into conference if we have added a recording district here. I do not think myself there ought to be any legislation on that subject, and if the conferees find that the Senate has provided for one recording district we can not very well say that the House bill should not be adopted in that respect. I do not think we ought to act on the subject of recording districts upon this bill. Now, that is all I desire to say about it.

Mr. TELLER. The question whether there are to be recording districts or not will not be the main question in controversy between the two Houses. It will be as to the judges. The House has put in a provision for recording districts. They ought to have put in another for which I think there has been a good deal more demand than for those they put in. The matter will be in conference as to whether there shall be any new recording districts. If we put in this provision, it can be treated with the others and no harm can possibly come by our saying, "If you are going to make any recording districts, you should make this one." The population and everything else demands that if they make any they should make this district. If we fail to put it in now, there will be no opportunity to get it in during the present session. The committee of conference will have the matter before it. If the other body objects, they can drop it out. There can no harm come by putting it in, I am sure.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. What is the regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pension appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. I will not shut off the Senators if the matter up can be got out of the way, but I do not consent that the regular order, an appropriation bill, shall be long suspended. I will withhold the call for a few moments.

Mr. TELLER. Can the bill be objected to now?

Mr. HALE. It is up only by unanimous consent.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator from Connecticut ought to consent to this amendment. I do not think that he should take up the bill now and cut us out of an opportunity to have the amendment considered.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If that claim is made, of course I will not take the time of the Senate to obstruct or endanger the bill by further discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill (S. 4316) providing for the appointment of additional judges in the Indian Territory.

The motion was agreed to.

TIMBER AND STONE ACT.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit me to have two bills stricken from the Calendar, so as to dispose of them?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the bill (S. 2860) to further amend an act to amend an act approved January 21, 1903, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the use of timber and stone for domestic and industrial purposes in the Indian Territory,' approved June 6, 1900," be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PIPE LINES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the bill (S. 2302) to amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes," be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pension appropriation bill is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6578) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment.

The amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, line 2, to increase the appropriation for army and navy pensions from $136,800,000 to $137,010,600.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota as to the amendment of the committee on page 2. Why has an increase been made there over the bill as it came from the House of Representatives to the Senate? I should like the Senator to explain that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will do that, Mr. President. On account of Order No. 78 made by the Commissioner of Pensions, on account of the general demand for a service pension, and on account of the prominence that has been given to the Pension Bureau in the debate in this body during the last two or three weeks, it seems to me appropriate when bringing this bill before the Senate for consideration to discuss the bill very briefly, and also the order which has been many times referred to in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. President, this bill as it passed the House of Representatives recommended the following items of appropriation:

Title of expenditure.	Recommended for 1905.
Payment of pensions	$136,800,000
Fees of examining surgeons	800,000
Salaries of agents	72,000
Clerk hire at agencies	430,000
Stationery and other necessary expenses	35,000
Rent	10,600
Examination of pension agencies	2,500
Total	138,150,100

The Pension Committee has favorably reported Senate bill No. 671, to increase the pensions of those who have lost both eyes or have become totally blind from causes occurring in the naval or military service of the United States. That bill has since become a law. The total number of persons affected by that particular act are 600, and the necessary amount to raise their pensions from $72 per month, that they are now receiving, to $100 per month, the amount provided in the bill, will be $201,600. That would make a total recommended by the committee at the time the report was made and the bill was reported to the Senate of $138,351,700. That addition is the amendment to which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has referred. It simply adds that amount, as that bill was not taken into consideration when the estimates were made upon which the House based their appropriation.

This sum of $138,351,700 is, of course, exclusive of the sums paid for the support of the Pension Bureau and the Soldiers' Homes. The number of pensioners upon the roll on July 1, 1903, including all of the wars and including widows and minor children, dependent parents, etc., was 996,545. The average value of each pension under the general law is $176.16. The average value of each pension under the act of June 27, 1890, is $108.82.

Mr. President, measured by the pensions granted by any other nation of the world, these pensions may be considered extremely liberal; but measured by any other war of modern history, we believe that justice demands liberality in favor of the survivors of the war of the rebellion.

It is true that not only by successive laws, but also by the orders of the Department, the pensions under the old law have gradually been raised for many disabilities; also the amount that is being allowed from day to day at the present time is greater than the amount that was allowed under the same law for the same disabilities ten, fifteen, or twenty-five years ago. But there are reasons for this, Mr. President. No other war in the history of this nation, in my humble opinion, has ever called for such courage, such self-sacrifice, such patriotic devotion on the part of soldiers as was exhibited by the soldiers of the war of the rebellion.

In the Revolutionary struggle our forefathers were called upon to do battle, not against another colony which had grown up under like conditions, but against a country which, in a certain sense and to a certain degree and extent, had become foreign to them. A century and a half, Mr. President, of life, separated by 3,000 miles of sea, without that communication which to-day brings all the nations together in neighborly fellowship, had developed on this side of the Atlantic Ocean practically a separate nation.

No such condition, Mr. President, confronted the veterans of the civil war. The soldiers of one State were summoned to do battle against the people of an adjoining State, against those of the same blood, against those of the same history, the same character, the same fighting qualities—men endeared to each other, Mr. President, by the memory of the wars wherein they had fought side by side and had won great victories by land and sea. Therefore it was not a slight demand when the northern soldier was called to a death struggle with the brave armies of the South.

Mr. President, the world at large has never, I believe, fully appreciated the deep devotion to the cause of the Union of our soldiers. When the soldiers of the civil war were summoned they knew they were called upon to fight not an inferior race, not even a different nation, but brothers of their own blood, men of their own fighting tenacity and character. They knew that they were called upon to meet an army as well armed, as well provided, as well commanded as were they themselves. They knew, Mr. President, that the chances of victory or defeat were nearly equally balanced. In the very beginning of the conflict they knew that the advantage must be necessarily with their opponents. The forts and the arsenals were in their hands; the skilled generals for the most part were on their side; the climatic conditions were favorable to the defenders and were unfavorable to the northern soldiers. They also knew that all along the line they must be the aggressors, and that aggression meant multiplied and disproportionate danger. It required patriotism and love of country and a conviction of right to face those conditions. They were not ordinary conditions.

Let us take, for example, the conditions in the State of Kentucky alone, where 80,000 men from that State joined the armies of the Confederacy and about 80,000 men from the same State joined the armies of the North. Those men, therefore, were required to fight, not against a foreign foe, not against an invader, but son against son and parent against his children.

This was a condition, I say, that appealed especially to patriotism and love of country. Well might the northern men have said, "These are of our own blood; these are our brothers; let them go out of the Union." There was a case entirely different from where a foreign force is upon our own soil. The case is entirely different from that where our armies are sent abroad to face their enemies. The case was one that called, as I say, for national patriotism; and the love of country was so deep in the hearts of all the American soldiers of the North that they laid aside all other sentiments.

Therefore, Mr. President, if the country is paying liberal pensions, it is paying also for a patriotism and for a duty performed toward itself that has never been exhibited in the history of any country or in any civil war.

The nation has not been ungrateful, Mr. President, for the sacrifices of that war. If our debt of gratitude has been great beyond measure, so, too, have we responded beyond measure to the patriotic impulses of the American people to pay so far as in our power we could pay that debt, by caring for every soldier, for his widow, and his children, whether the distress results from service, hardship, exposure, wounds, from the natural ills of life, from declining vigor, or from financial destitution. Under our liberal pension laws all alike may call upon the nation for assistance and protection, and the country regards it as a sacred duty, Mr. President, to respond to that call.

In no other country and to the soldiers of no other war has the generosity of an appreciative people been bestowed with such lavish hand as upon the soldiers of the Union; and if we point to the enormous sum of nearly $3,000,000,000 paid for pensions since 1861, we do it with a sense of pride and not of regret. We feel that it reflects the character of a people who are grateful to their benefactors, who have never forgotten and who will never forget their protectors.

While, on the whole, Mr. President, the pension laws have operated in the past with as little impartiality or injustice as could be expected, as the added years—nearly forty since the close of that war—have sapped the strength and vigor of those engaged in the conflict it has become more difficult to prove the service origin of any disability. It is becoming more and more apparent that our pension laws may be properly revised to meet present conditions. The many enactments out of harmony with each other, and not always so clearly expressed as to leave no doubt of their meaning, emphasize the propriety of a revision of our pension legislation.

In the year 1890 the number of cases of destitution in the ranks of the Army which had fought the civil war had become so marked that the act of June 27, 1890, was enacted, which allowed a pension of not to exceed $12 per month to every soldier who served ninety days and who was honorably discharged and suffering from permanent disability incapacitating him for manual labor and sufficient to render him unable to earn a support.

This was done, Mr. President, without any reference to the service origin of his disability. It was granted to his widow and to his children under 16 years of age. About three-fifths of all of our pensioners on the roll are receiving their pensions under this act.

The fourteen years which have elapsed since that act of 1890 added to the lives of these men, many of whom were at an advanced age even at that time, have increased the cases of destitution to such an extent as to render $12 per month inadequate to shield these defenders of the country from want. The result has been a greatly increased number of applications for private pension bills. The growth of this character of legislation in the last six years, Mr. President, is something of a prophecy of its continued growth for the next few years; and I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the encroachment of the Pensions Committee upon the Bureau of Pensions in granting the great number of invalid pensions, and possibly to suggest a remedy.

The number of pension bills reported favorably and enacted by special legislation from 1898 to 1903, inclusive, is as follows: 1898, 394; 1899, 300; 1900, 684; 1901, 707; 1902, 1,114; 1903, 1,057.

So far in any one session before the present session we have not passed the 1,150 limit. The number of pension bills reported favorably in both Houses during the present session up to the present time is 1,832, an increase of about one-third over that of any previous session. I think over 1,500 have already passed both Houses.

All of this suggests, Mr. President, at least to me, that we are reaching that period when a general service-pension bill should be considered by Congress.

I deem it proper at this time, Mr. President, to present in a very brief form a statement which will at a glance enlighten any Senator as to the present condition of our service pension. I have quoted copiously from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, and yet I place it in such form that he who runs may read and understand at a glance the present status of our pension laws and the conditions in the Pension Bureau.

The number of pensioners, June 30, 1893:

Soldiers and sailors	729,356
Widows and dependents	267,189

Under the act of June 27, 1890:

This leaves for all soldiers, sailors, widows, and dependents under all other wars, 390,583.

Civil-war invalids	703,546
Widows of civil-war invalids	248,390
Total	951,936

There has been a loss to the rolls during the year, by death, remarriage, limitation, failure to claim, and other causes, 47,388.

There has been a net gain as follows:

By act of the Bureau of Pensions	44,256
By special act of Congress	231

This seeming discrepancy, Mr. President, between the gain by special act (231) and the number of special acts (1,057) is explained by the fact that all the special acts, except these 231, were for increase of pensions and not for original pensions.

It is estimated that the death rate of pensioners for the ensuing year will be about 45,000 and the loss from other causes 6,000, or a total of 51,000.

Let us consider a moment what we have paid out for pensions. The total paid out for pensions for the year ending June 30, 1903, was $137,757,652; the cost of maintaining the Bureau of Pensions, $3,791,179; or a total of $141,148,832.

The average annual value of each pension was $133.49; the average annual value under the general law, $176.16; the average annual value under the law of 1890, $108.82; the average annual value, war with Spain, $137.25. More than one-half of the pensions paid out are at the rate of $10 and under.

The cost of the pension system since the beginning of the Government up to June 30, 1903, amounts to $3,134,271,254.87. The total amount paid out for pensions since 1866 is $2,942,178,145.93. This is exclusive, as I have stated, of Soldiers' Homes.

The cost of pension per capita of population in 1903 was $1.75. The aggregate wealth of the United States in 1903 was placed at $107,200,000,000. Then the cost of the pension per thousand dollars in 1903 was $1.32. The cost of pensions per thousand in 1893 was $2.24, or a decrease of almost $1 per thousand in ten years—nearly one-half.

I especially call the attention of Senators to the fact that while our pension appropriations may have increased the population and wealth of the country has so increased during that time that the amount per capita is much less, and the amount per each thousand dollars of wealth is only a little more than half what it was ten years ago.

Here is a matter of importance to consider. The total number of cases pending before the Pension Bureau, including minors and dependents and the war with Spain, was, on July 1, 1903, 120,729. That number has been reduced very materially, and this fact enters into consideration in the call of an extra two and a half million dollars to be added to the present pension appropriation.

The number of Spanish-war pensioners of all classes on June 30, 1903, was 12,862.

A word about the unknown army. It is estimated that this army numbers from two hundred to two hundred and twenty-five thousand. It is now applying for pensions at the rate of over 14,000 per annum.

The number of soldiers of the civil war was 2,213,363.

I referred, Mr. President, a moment ago to the fact that we were nearing a period when we should consider the matter of a general service pension, not only because of the forty years which have elapsed since the civil war, but for the other causes which I mentioned. A brief statement, therefore, of the precedents for service pensions in other wars would be appropriate here.

First, of the Revolutionary war. I want to take up now the acts that were passed and applied to soldiers of that war and to the subsequent wars. The following acts were passed:

The act of March 13, 1818—thirty-five years after the termination of the Revolutionary war—was the first act. The beneficiary under this act must have been in indigent circumstances and in need of assistance.

Second, the act of May 1, 1820. This was known as the "alarm act," and required pensioners to schedule property, and in some cases, where the property was shown to amount to $150, the claimant was dropped from the rolls.

The third act was that of May 15, 1828, forty-five years after the termination of the Revolutionary war. This act applied only to those who served to the end of the war. So up to this time we had not had a complete service pension.

The fourth act was that of June 7, 1832, forty-nine years after the close of the war. Under this act pensions were granted to those who had served not less than six months. This was practically the first general service-pension act of the Revolution.

The next act was that of July 4, 1836, fifty-three years after the war. This act granted pensions to Revolutionary war widows who were married before the close of the war.

It may be therefore said that the first general service-pension bill for Revolutionary soldiers was enacted forty-nine years after the close of that war.

Now as to the war of 1812. The first act was that of February 14, 1871—fifty-six years after the close of the war. This act required sixty days' service.

The next act was that of March 9, 1878, or sixty-three years after the war. This act reduced the period of service to fourteen days.

War with Mexico: The act of January 29, 1887—thirty-nine years after the close of the war—was the first service act. That act required sixty days' service and that the claimant should be 62 years of age or that he should be disabled or dependent.

Indian wars: On July 27, 1892—fifty years and over after the wars mentioned—service pensions were granted. Mr. President, to those who served thirty days in the Black Hawk, the Creek, the Cherokee, and the Seminole wars, and on July 27, 1893, the benefits of this act were extended to soldiers of other Indian wars.

Recapitulating, these service pensions were granted for service in the several wars and after the close of such wars as follows: Revolution, forty-nine years thereafter; war of 1812, fifty-six years thereafter; war with Mexico, thirty-nine years thereafter; Indian wars, fifty years and upward thereafter; average limitation, forty-eight years after the close of the war.

As indicating the life of the pensioners for any particular war it may not be uninteresting, Mr. President, to make record of the fact, very little known generally through the country, that we are now carrying upon our rolls two widows of Revolutionary war soldiers, two daughters of soldiers of that war, and, from information obtained from the secretary of the Association of the Daughters of the American Revolution, I find that there are 293 real daughters of soldiers of the Revolution who are members of that order.

It is fair to say that there are about an equal number of sons of veterans of the Revolutionary war. This would make of survivors, then, about 600 sons and daughters of real soldiers of the American Revolution.

Widows and daughters, of course, are carried on the pension rolls a great deal longer than survivors of the wars. It is perhaps a little strange to note that there is but one survivor of the war of 1812 upon the pension list; but there are 1,115 widows of soldiers of that war.

Mr. President, I think this presents as briefly as I can present it the matter of the present condition in the Pension Bureau. I however desire at this time to consider very briefly some suggestions relative to order No. 78, which has received so much attention in the Senate. I wish to call attention, in the first instance, to two general laws under which nearly all of the pensions are granted. The first is section 4692 of the Revised Statutes, which provides:

SEC. 4692. Every person specified in the several classes enumerated in the following section, who has been since the 4th day of March, 1861, or who is hereafter disabled under the conditions therein stated shall, upon making due proof of the fact, according to such forms and regulations as are or may be provided in pursuance of law, be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States and be entitled to receive, for a total disability or a permanent specific disability, such pension as is hereinafter provided in such cases; and for an inferior disability, except in cases of permanent specific disability, for which the relative pension is expressly provided, an amount proportionate to that provided for total disability.

Now, this is what is known as the general law. I wish to call attention to the similarity between this law and the law of 1890. It provides:

All persons who served ninety days, etc., and who are now or may hereafter be suffering from any mental or physical disability or disabilities of a permanent character, not the result of their own vicious habits, which so incapacitates them from the performance of manual labor as to render them unable to earn a support shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States and be entitled to receive a pension not exceeding $12 per month and not less than $6 per month, proportionate to the degree of inability to earn a support.

Now, the first point of similarity to which I wish to call attention, and I direct attention to it because I desire to apply rule 78 to both cases, is the very important fact that a pension is granted only for physical disability. Whether under the general law or under the law of 1890, the question is whether the claimant is suffering physical disability. It makes no difference what his mental qualifications are. The question of the physical disability is considered as bearing only upon his ability to perform manual labor. So under either of these laws the real question is whether the claimant is disabled to perform manual labor. The law which I first quoted, the general law, provides that these facts shall be established according to such forms and regulations as may be provided in pursuance of law.

The law of 1890 provides that the claimant shall receive a pension upon making due proof of the fact, according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide. So, whether under one law or the other, the proof must be made according to regulations wh ch are provided by the Secretary of the Interior. Under the general law relief will be granted in sums ranging from $8 to $30. Under the law of 1890 the relief will be granted in sums ranging from $6 to $12, and in either instance it will be granted upon due proof under such rules and regulations as may be provided.

Several other sections of the law fix the amount that will be allowed for specific disabilities. Under the provisions of section 492 the Department has fixed rates independent of those that are fixed by law, covering some 51 different classes. I wish to ask Senators upon the other side of the Chamber who claim that order No. 78, of March 15, is an infringement of the right of the Congress of the United States to pass laws and an assumption upon the part of the Bureau not only to pass the laws, but to grant the pensions thereunder, whether or not if that be true, it has not existed for from thirty to forty years; and if it be true, why it is that in this year 1904, just before a general election, just before a Presidential campaign, it is suddenly found that this act on the part of the Bureau is a law, and not a mere rule, and that the Bureau is usurping the power of Congress.

Let me call attention to just a few of the amounts that have been fixed by the Bureau under the general law. You will notice, in the first instance, that the law simply grants a pension for disability. It does not decide what the disability is. It leaves the Pension Bureau to determine the amount of the disability and what shall be allowed therefor; and in pursuance of that the Bureau has fixed a number of rates. They were introduced the other day by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], but what I especially wish to call attention to is the fact that these same items have been changed by a rule of the Commissioner from three to five times since they were first adopted.

Taking as a basis anchylosis of shoulder, elbow, knee, ankle, and wrist, thus:

Anchylosis of shoulder carries	$12
Anchylosis of elbow	10
Anchylosis of knee	10
Anchylosis of ankle	8
Anchylosis of wrist	8
Loss of thumb	8
Loss of thumb and little finger	10
Loss of thumb and index finger	12
Loss of sight of one eye	12
Loss of one eye	17
Slight deafness of both ears	6
Severe of one ear and slight of the other	10
Nearly total deafness of one ear and slight of the other	15

These rates have been fixed by the Bureau and not by any law. There is no law fixing these several amounts. They are determined arbitrarily by a rule which has been in force ever since 1861. They are presumptions of disability fixed by a rule and based upon common experience. Let us take the one instance of the amount that is allowed for the loss of an eye. That was raised, in the first instance, from $4 to $8, and then from $8 to $12, and from $12, where there is deformity, to $17. Where did you get the law for that? Where did you get the law to make it $8 or to make it $12, and if it was legal to declare that that was a disability for which a pension of $4 a month should be allowed by the Bureau, under what authority would the Commissioner of Pensions change that rule, make a new rule, and change it from $4 to $8 for the same disability? I repeat, it is under the general law which gives him the authority to determine by rules and regulations the amount that shall be allowed in any specific case.

In 1893, at the time when the Lochren order was carried into effect, which fixed the maximum rate of $12 per month which should be granted when a claimant had reached the age of 75 years, there were very few soldiers who had reached the age of 62. The average age at that time was 53. While he fixed 65 years of age as evidence of such a degree of disability as would decrease the earning capacity of the average man one-half and would give him a rate of $6, he did not at that time have a sufficient number of those cases before him to justify that rule as establishing the particular age which should govern all future cases.

Since that time a majority have passed beyond 62 years of age, or more than one-half of them have passed beyond that age. More than a thousand of those applications are considered every day. After considering such applications for three hundred days in the year, is it surprising that the Commissioner of Pensions should arrive at the conclusion that 65 years of age is too high a term to be fixed as a basis for a decrease of one-half the physical ability to earn a support? Is it not natural that he should find that, and is not his conclusion correct?

Let us see how this matter is considered before the Bureau of Pensions. An application comes before that Bureau. There are, say, a thousand of them considered before that Bureau at one time by three or four hundred clerks. It goes to one clerk. He finds that the claimant is 65 years of age. He finds that he has a certain number of disabilities, or that his neighbors testify that he is unable to perform manual labor. He passes it at $6. It goes up one degree higher. It is taken then by a reviewer. He passes upon it, and he places it at $8. Another reviewer places it at $10. It goes finally to the last one, and he reduces it down to $6. Now, there will be, of course, a divergence running all the way from $6 up to $10, but in 99 per cent of the cases, we will say, it is found that when a man has reached the age of 62 years his ability to perform manual labor is decreased one-half.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit me?

Mr. McCUMBER. With the greatest pleasure.

Mr. MALLORY. As I understand it, every one of these applicants under the act of 1890 bases his application on the fact that he is disabled from performing manual labor.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is absolutely true in both cases under both laws.

Mr. MALLORY. I am speaking now with reference to the act of 1890.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct; that is a part of the law.

Mr. MALLORY. If that is true, I do not understand how the Senator can reach the conclusion that because the Pension Office has a great number of such cases, all claiming to be disabled, to examine during a year or two years or three years, the Pension Office can reach as an average the conclusion that 62 years of age is a criterion whereby you can determine that a man is to a certain degree—that is, one-half or one-quarter—disabled.

Every one of those applicants comes before the Pension Office with the prima facie showing on his part, so far as he can, that he is disabled. It is not like taking a body of healthy men and striking an average as to their disability. It is taking a body of men who claim to be disabled and who probably are more or less disabled. Therefore I do not exactly see how the Senator can claim, as has been claimed here by others, that the Pension Office has a better opportunity for deciding on this point than we have in our common observation of the workings of life.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is simply because the Pension Office officers are taking evidence daily upon that specific disability, a disability which will decrease the amount of manual labor a man can perform, and if they find by the testimony in 99 cases out of 100 that a man 62 years of age is disabled one-half, they can take that as a criterion, as a presumption from experience, from facts which have been investigated for thirty or forty years, that when a man who has been a soldier has reached the age of 62 years he is disabled one-half simply because nearly all the cases so indicate.

Allow me to go a step further. He finds it by the same reasoning that the Senator himself would find from actual observation, that when any man has reached the age of 80 he is unable to perform any manual service at all whereby he may earn a living.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not know that the Senator has answered the point I endeavored to make. The point I make is that the Pension Office is not in a position to determine the question, because the only men whom it examines are men who themselves claim to be disabled. It does not examine men who are not disabled or who, at least, claim not to be disabled or who are in a normal condition. The men whom the Pension Office examines are generally in an abnormal condition.

Mr. McCUMBER. If we have 800,000 of those cases, it seems to me there are enough on whom to base a general opinion. There were over a million Union soldiers in the war of the rebellion, and there are about 700,000 of them living at the present time. That seems to me to be enough of an army for the Pension Commissioner to form a correct opinion as to what age will limit the ability to perform manual service. It seems to me the opportunities are very good, and they are opportunities that no Senator can have, because the Commissioner has the cases constantly before him. We could not do it any more than we could form an opinion on any disease as well as could a physician who is engaged daily in considering that disease.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit me for a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator's phrase, "performing manual service," is not nearly so strong as the law. The law speaks of a disability from earning support by manual labor. That makes a difference.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is what I meant. It is the same thing. If they are unable to perform any service of that character, of course they necessarily could not earn a living.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. Is this a presumption of law or a presumption of fact, as the Senator understands?

Mr. McCUMBER. It certainly can only be a presumption of fact.

Mr. McLAURIN. Is it not a rule of law that presumptions of fact are to be drawn by the trier of the question of fact and not by him who lays down the rule of law?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes, certainly; but what is the fact? The fact to be determined is whether a person who is an applicant is incapable of performing manual labor, and if so, to what degree? The presumption of that will follow from another fact, and that fact may be either his age or any other disability. It is a fact which follows as a presumption from a previously established fact.

Now, what may be the authority of the Commissioner under this law, which states that the proof may be made under rules and regulations? What may the rules and regulations cover? First, they may cover the manner, and, secondly, they may cover the sufficiency of the evidence. Under a rule you determine how the evidence may be introduced, in what form it will be received; and under these regulations you determine or may determine the sufficiency of evidence, or the amount of evidence, that will be required to prove a given fact.

Let us take the case as it exists in the Bureau to-day. For instance, the Senator might claim that when a person has proved by his testimony alone that he was wounded in a certain battle it would be sufficient. But the Department requires him to go further. The Department has heretofore required other evidence than that of the claimant. It has required the corroborating testimony of two comrades in many cases. This was all under the regulations of the Department.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator allow me to read from section 43 of 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, Lewis's edition? In speaking of presumptions of fact he says:

> They differ from presumptions of law in this essential respect, that while those—

That is, presumptions of law—> are reduced to fixed rules, and constitute a branch of the particular system of jurisprudence to which they belong, these—

Presumptions of fact—> merely natural presumptions are derived wholly and directly from the circumstances of the particular case——

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN (reading)—

> by means of the common experience of mankind without the aid or control of any rules of law whatever.

Mr. McCUMBER. Sure.

Mr. McLAURIN. Then it is to be left in each individual case to the trier.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is just exactly what I have been claiming.

Mr. McLAURIN. I did not so understand.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is just exactly the proposition that I made, and I certainly do not go back on it. I said that under this we can establish not only the manner of introducing the evidence, but the sufficiency of the evidence. Now, how may any fact be proven? Not alone by a statement directly bearing upon it, but by other facts and circumstances from which the particular fact will be deduced. That is the method adopted in this Bureau.

Let us suppose, now, that the Government takes all the testimony in a given case together. The claimant is not there, and for that reason alone it is absolutely necessary, I repeat, to have some kind of a rule that will apply in every case. Let us take the age of 62. If you leave it to a dozen or fifteen or twenty clerks, unless they followed some known rule established in all cases, they would be entirely at a loss. There would be no such thing as uniformity. There would be a greater amount granted in one case than would be allowed in another. If you make a rule that consumption shall be rated at a certain degree, you will have to apply that rule in every one of the cases. If you make a rule that the loss of a thumb in one case shall be rated at one-fourth, then the loss of thumbs in every case must be rated at one-fourth. Otherwise you would have as many different ratings as you would have different claimants.

Now, a rule is necessary because the claimant is not present. When a man is present, you may not need to ask his age. You may not need to ask anything concerning his physical powers. You may tell by his voice. You may tell by his demeanor. You may tell by the vigor and elasticity of his step just about what his physical condition is. But he is not present before the Bureau. He can not be seen. These conditions can not be explained in writing or by any document that may be furnished by the examining physician, but they can be fixed by a general rule, and under the general rule you may know what the disability is and its proper rating.

Suppose you do not consider age at all. What would the result be? The Senator can see in a moment that one of the fundamental facts necessary to establish not only uniformity, but to determine the degree of disability, would be left out. While under the law you are to take into consideration every disability, according to the statement of the Senator you would not be allowed to take the disability of age into consideration. If, on the other hand, you say that it may be taken into consideration in a special case, for what purposes will it be taken into consideration?

Mr. McLAURIN. My contention is that this is executive legislation, and I believe all those who deny the right of the Secretary of the Interior to make this order contend that it is executive legislation, and that the Secretary of the Interior has no legal authority so to legislate. Does the Senator contend that the Secretary of the Interior could have fixed 52 years instead of 62 as the limit when the physical disability would attach?

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. McLAURIN. Why not?

Mr. McCUMBER. I assume that the Commissioner is a man of intelligence, of reason, one who will weigh the facts which are before him, and will therefore take into consideration what is reasonable and not what is unreasonable. The law must vest a certain amount of discretion in the mind of every Commissioner of Pensions.

The law itself can not fix rates for every man. It must leave the disability to be determined by rules, by regulations, by experience, by the common knowledge of humanity applied to the conditions as they exist.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator allow me, after premising, to ask another question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. The Senator must admit that all men's reasoning does not lead to the same conclusion. For instance, I believe the order of Judge Lochren is taken as an exemplar by Senators who contend for the legality of this order. Therefore they must defend that order, because if it is not such an order as ought to be followed, then it ought not to be cited as an exemplar for the action of the Secretary of the Interior in this case. Judge Lochren thought 75 years the age of disability; Mr. Ware thought 62 years. Now, supposing that the reasoning of the Secretary of the Interior and his judgment upon the facts should have led him to the conclusion that 53 years was the age at which disability would attach. It must be conceded that a man is not as able to work at manual labor at the age of 53 years as at the age of 21, and it has been argued that because he is not as capable of doing manual labor at 62 as at 21 it justifies this order.

Now, suppose this had led the Secretary of the Interior to the conclusion that 53 years was the age at which the disability obtained. Would he then have had the right to make this order?

Mr. McCUMBER. I assume that he has a right to make the order. If you give him the right to act upon the subject-matter at all, under rules and regulations he would have the right to make the order, though it might be an unreasonable order. Of course he might have a right to make an order that if the claimant was 25 years of age he was disabled from manual labor. That order would not stand, because it would not appeal to reason, simply because sensible men would not follow it.

Mr. McLAURIN. There would be only nine years between 53 and 62. Now, if he had a right to make the order fixing disability at 53 years, that in 1900, when the act was last amended, would have taken in every man who was 18 years of age at the conclusion of the war. So when the Congress of the United States did not see proper to say that every man would be considered disabled, then according to the Republican Senators the Secretary of the Interior had a right to supplement the legislation of Congress and to enact by order. Every soldier who was in the war at any time was to be considered disabled unless the Government proved him able.

Mr. McCUMBER. The mortuary tables show that the death rate for 62 years and up is much more rapid than it is from 53 up to 62.

I now place the matter directly to the Senator so that he can test this question. If the Senator claims that this is a law, or an attempt to make a law by the Commissioner of Pensions, he can test that matter very quickly.

The Commissioner of Pensions has no authority to make a law, and if he usurps the authority of Congress and assumes to make a law and pays out money under that law, you can reach him by an injunction. I am pretty sure that if a client would come to any Senator, as an attorney, and ask his legal advice as to whether he could sustain an injunction against the Commissioner of Pensions enjoining him from paying out any money under this order No. 78, there is not a Senator here who would advise that client that he could sustain it. If you claim that it is legally wrong, then certainly you would have to claim that you could sustain an injunction for that purpose.

I speak of the reasonableness of this order. We can not go beyond certain ages to draw certain reasonable conclusions. The Senator will remember in Holy Writ where Solomon at one time determined to which of two women a certain babe belonged. He ordered that the child should be cut in two in the presence of the two women. He knew then by their demeanor as a presumption of fact which was the real mother and which was not. Now, there was no extrinsic fact outside of the fact which every man knows and feels and comprehends. Let us suppose that the Senator himself was sitting upon the golden throne of Solomon and two women were claiming to be the mother of a babe; that one woman was 25 years of age and the other woman was 80 years of age, to which one would he award the babe without any other fact to guide his decision?

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Would he award it to the younger? Not because he could fix a time when it would be impossible that the child might be a babe of the older, but because there is a reasonable time known to everyone, and experience and observation teach us about what that age is, and so near that we can formulate a reasonable judgment upon it.

Now, that is just what is done by the Commissioner of Pensions. With all these cases before him he is able to determine to a reasonable certainty just what effect 62 years of age has upon the physical ability of any man who served in the Army of the United States. I will listen to the Senator now.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I merely wanted to answer the question the Senator propounded. I would do the very best I could to ascertain to which one the child belonged, but I would not undertake to lay down any rule to guide anybody else in determining a fact of that kind. I would leave them to judge presumptions of fact, just as is laid down in the law books for each trier to judge according to his own experience as to the facts when they come before him.

Mr. McCUMBER. Suppose you had no other facts?

Mr. McLAURIN. The conclusion reached by the courts and put down in the law books as a principle of law is that presumptions of law are laid down by the court, by those who give rules, but the presumptions of fact are left in every instance to the trier—for instance, to the jury, if it is tried by a jury; to the chancellor, if it is tried by a chancellor; to the commissioner, if it is tried by a commissioner.

Whoever tries the question of fact must in that particular case apply presumptions of fact arising from his knowledge and his experience; but if he were sitting as a judge submitting the trial of a question of fact to somebody else he would not have any authority to lay down any rule governing it. So says Mr. Greenleaf in the section from which I read. In the case put by the Senator the trier would consider the age, just as the age of 62 years ought to be considered by the trier of the disability of the applicant for a pension, without any dictation to his judgment by any authority except the law. But by this legislative order the trier is not permitted to consider the extent of disability produced by sixty-two years, as the law says he shall, but the order concludes that arbitrarily.

Mr. McCUMBER. Just as the Senator says, it would be tried by a jury, it would be tried by a court commissioner if referred to a court commissioner, and it would be tried by the Commissioner of Pensions if referred to the Commissioner of Pensions.

But what I insist is that the jury would take into consideration the evidential fact of age. The commissioner would take that into consideration. The Commissioner of Pensions must be human and must take the same thing into consideration.

Now, if you admit that it is to be regarded as an evidential fact, it must be regarded as a fact for some purpose. For what purpose? For the purpose of determining disability. If you admit that it is for the purpose of determining disability, then you must admit that it must be given some value; and if it is given some value, what value shall be given to it? Experience has determined that the value should be one-half of the ability to perform manual labor. That is all there is to it.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, doubtless every trier of the question of the disability of the applicant would take into consideration in connection with all other testimony the age of the applicant.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is just what I was going to say.

Mr. McLAURIN. Wait a moment. He would take that into consideration if it was shown in evidence in connection with other evidence of his disability. But the objection to this law enacted by the Secretary of the Interior is that it does not propose to take the age of the applicant into consideration in connection with evidence of other disability, but proposes to fix that as establishing absolutely in every case the disability of the applicant.

Mr. MALLORY. The fact that he is one-half disabled.

Mr. McLAURIN. Yes; one-half disabled. It must be a presumption of fact, then. The Commissioner or the Secretary of the Interior has no right to lay down presumptions of fact. He has no right to fix a rule of law, because the making of the law pertains to Congress. The legislative power is in Congress, and it can not be delegated to the Secretary of the Interior. It can not be delegated to courts; it can not be delegated to any other authority. But the presumption of fact is for the trier of the question in each particular case. You can not lay down any rule of presumptions of fact. They depend for their worth upon the case in hand and before the trier of the particular case, whether it is a jury or any other trier.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then the position of the Senator will be that when the Commissioner of Pensions makes an order that the loss of one eye diminishes the ability one-half to perform manual labor he is not justified in so doing, and he would also hold the position that the loss of both eyes as constituting a disability to perform any manual labor was not justified.

Now, Mr. President, the Commissioner has a right to take that into consideration in connection with others.

Mr. McLAURIN rose.

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment, if the Senator please. I will make this matter perfectly clear before I get through.

The Senator has contended, and contended incorrectly, that this was the only evidence that would be considered. It is not true. It is not the case. The Commissioner of Pensions simply provides that it shall be considered as an evidential fact.

Mr. SPOONER. Rebuttable.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes, rebuttable; and if the contrary does not appear he will accord a certain presumption to that age, just the same as he allows a presumption of amount of disability from the loss of a thumb. All these things are taken into consideration. The Senator forgets that there is another portion of the law which the Commissioner can not refuse to consider, and it is this:

> And in determining such inability each and every infirmity shall be duly considered and the aggregate of the disabilities shown be rated, etc.

Can the Senator contend that with that law upon the statute books the Commissioner of Pensions can simply pay no attention to it—that he can disregard it? On the contrary, he must take into consideration all disabilities, whether they be from affection of lungs or heart or otherwise. But he also takes into consideration this other evidential fact and gives that evidential fact a certain value, so that the value may be the same in every case and before every clerk of the Department.

We know that the very foundation of the right of a pension under this law is disability, partial or complete, to perform manual labor. We must not forget that foundation. Any disease or failure of the vital organs affecting the physical ability must be considered. If it is found that the heart is weak, a presumption of fact arises from that finding. If it is found that the lungs are partially destroyed, a presumption of fact arises from that finding. If it be established that the stomach is impaired, a presumption of disability follows from that.

Now, a certain value is given to every one of those; and yet the Senator would say old age, which affects every one of these vital organs, which tends to destroy and weaken every one of them, shall not be taken into consideration. Mr. President, it should be taken into consideration.

Again, I put to the opposite side of the Chamber this proposition: If they maintain that this rule is an encroachment upon the authority of Congress and that it is in effect making a departmental law, then I submit that the Department can not make a law; it can pay nothing under that law, and any person can enjoin the payment of money under it.

But I do not believe there is a Senator here who is so firm in his position and attitude that he believes under this rule any action could be maintained to enjoin the Commissioner of Pensions from making payments thereunder. If he does the opportunity is open, and no doubt Congress and the Pension Bureau also would be desirous to learn the limit of their authority.

Mr. ELKINS and Mr. SCOTT addressed the Chair.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not concluded, but I will yield the floor, so far as making any remarks are concerned, to the Senator from West Virginia, who desires to bring up some matter this afternoon that is quite urgent.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the pension appropriation bill be laid aside temporarily, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14754, the emergency river and harbor bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I had hoped that the Senator from North Dakota would yield to me a moment, I being a member of the Pension Committee, before yielding to my colleague, that I might say a word on the matter of pensions, but, of course, if he has yielded to the senior Senator from West Virginia, I must submit.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield to whoever the Chair recognizes first. I have no choice in the matter of yielding.

Mr. ALGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes any Senator who rises and addresses the Chair and has an appropriation bill in charge.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that the present order of business be laid aside temporarily, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14754.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asks that the pension appropriation bill be laid aside temporarily and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14754. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14754) providing for the restoration or maintenance of channels or of river and harbor improvements, and for other purposes; which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it then be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. The Chair hears no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That," to strike out "the sum of $3,000,000 be, and the same is" and insert:

> In view of the fact that no general river and harbor bill is to be enacted during the present session, and in view of the necessity of temporary provision for the preservation of existing work, the following sums be, and the same are.

So as to read:

> That, in view of the fact that no general river and harbor bill is to be enacted during the present session, and in view of the necessity of temporary provision for the preservation of existing work, the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, for the following purposes and under the limitations herein set forth, to wit, etc.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill give some explanation as to why it is that this extraordinary provision should be inserted in the bill:

> In view of the fact that no general river and harbor bill is to be enacted during the present session, and in view of the necessity of temporary provision, etc.

I ask the Senator from West Virginia why it is that no general river and habor bill can be considered at this session? We were a few moments ago considering a bill appropriating $138,000,000, and we find another on our desks, the general deficiency appropriation bill, which appropriates $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 more on account of pensions and various other things. Why is it that we can not consider and deal with the question of the improvement of the great harbors of the country?

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, this is a House bill. It came to the Senate from the House appropriating $3,000,000 for certain purposes recited in the act. The Committee on Commerce, to which the bill was referred, agreed with the House bill with a few additional amendments providing for surveys. It did not feel authorized to bring in a general river and harbor bill, especially after the action of the House. It did not think it could pass. That is the reason why the Committee on Commerce limited itself to the bill almost as it came from the House.

Mr. GORMAN. I do not quite understand the Senator from West Virginia. The Senator from West Virginia, I understand, simply says the only reason is because the bill comes here in a form appropriating $3,000,000 to be expended in the discretion of the Department. Do I understand him to say that that is the only reason why this bill can not be amended in the Senate?

Mr. ELKINS. I said further it was the judgment of the committee, in the condition of the public business and having regard to appropriations heretofore made and the condition of the Treasury, that we were not authorized to go further than the action of the House, except the few amendments which the Committee on Commerce adopted.

Mr. GORMAN. Do I understand the Senator to say that the condition of the Treasury would not warrant an appropriation for the great improvements that are so absolutely necessary?

Mr. ELKINS. I do not know whether it would warrant it or not. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that I would be very glad to have a general river and harbor bill at this session if we could have it, but speaking for myself, I found that we could not, and we thought we would take the present measure as it came from the House with the amendments I referred to.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator, I trust, will make it a little clearer to me why we could not have a river and harbor bill. I should like to know the reason why we can not have it. Why is it?

Mr. ELKINS. This is an emergency bill simply to keep in repair improvements already made and to maintain existing improvements. There is sufficient money, we know, to carry on the work to this extent.

Mr. GORMAN. What works? I should like to understand it. For instance, I should like to inquire of the Senator from West Virginia——

Mr. ELKINS. The bill as it came to the Senate is one "providing for the restoration or maintenance of channels, or of river and harbor improvements, and for other purposes." It relates to existing improvements. No new work is undertaken here.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit me, I suppose it was not the intention of the committee—the bill using this language—to prevent the Senator from Maryland from offering an amendment to the bill increasing an appropriation here proposed, or making a new one, as he sees fit.

Mr. ELKINS. Not at all.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask my friend from Rhode Island whether he will be prepared to vote for any amendment looking to the improvement of New York Harbor?

Mr. ALDRICH. Probably not.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand perfectly, then, the situation. The Senator from West Virginia is not inclined to give a positive answer, but it is the determination on the part of our friends on the other side of the Chamber, as it has been intimated elsewhere by a distinguished gentleman, that we are to pursue unto the end of this session the policy that has been inaugurated, I assume, as a party matter.

It is decided that we shall place in the hands of an executive officer a given amount of money to be expended at his discretion, limited only to expenditures on improvements heretofore authorized, and in no case, as the bill came to us, shall a greater sum than $50,000 be expended on any one improvement; and, as proposed to be amended by the Senate Committee on Commerce, no greater sum than $100,000 shall be expended on any one improvement.

It is true, I believe, that on one or two occasions in an emergency, at the end of a Congress, when we had no time for the consideration of a river and harbor bill, a gross amount has been appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

If there were now an emergency, if there were a question of time, if Congress were about to expire by limitation of the Constitution, I could understand that it might be well to give such discretion as to a limited amount. But the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] was good enough to inform me—for I take it that is what this action means—that there is no intention on the part of the majority to consider, to give a day, or a week, if so much time should be necessary, to the great improvements in all the harbors in the United States. We have reached a point where party necessity, I take it, Mr. President, and party policy require that this Congress shall adjourn without giving these matters of internal improvement consideration.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg to assure the Senator from Maryland that this Congress will stay here as long as he is desirous that it shall stay here to deal with this matter or any other matter of public necessity. If he desires to go into an extension or an enlargement of the appropriations for rivers and harbors, I have no doubt the Senate will give respectful consideration to his views, whether it takes one day, one week, one month, or a year to do so.

Mr. GORMAN. Of course, Mr. President, the Senate is always very kind to every Senator in giving him all the time he desires; but, after all, the Senator from Rhode Island can not escape responsibility by such a reply.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no disposition to escape responsibility. The Representatives of the people, who originate bills of this character, have sent us a bill here appropriating $3,000,000 for the preservation of existing works on rivers and harbors, and the Committee on Commerce, as I understand, by the unanimous vote of that committee, have recommended a concurrence, with minor amendments, in that policy. I assume that that is the wish not only of the House of Representatives, but of the Senate. If the Senator from Maryland has any other proposition to make or if he desires to change this policy, of course he has a right to try to do so; and if his judgment is concurred in by a majority of the Senate, it will stand.

Mr. GORMAN. Well, Mr. President, without the cooperation of my friend from Rhode Island I have no idea of the possibility of getting a majority of the Senate to agree with me. That distinguished Senator, I know, speaks by authority of the majority of the Senate on matters of policy.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am afraid not; but, in any event, the Senator from Maryland knows as well as I that any member of the Senate or anyone else who undertakes to prevent liberal appropriations for rivers and harbors is certainly doomed to defeat, and very properly so, because the sentiment of the country and the sentiment of this body is always in favor of liberal appropriations for river and harbor improvements.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; I have no doubt that is true, and I have no doubt that the business interests of the country and the people of the country are very anxious for proper appropriations on this account. I have no doubt of the necessity for such appropriations, and I have no doubt that that policy is favored by the Committee on Commerce, of which you, sir [Mr. FRYE in the chair], are the honored chairman. I have said on many occasions, in this Chamber and out of this Chamber, that the country is more indebted to you than to any other man for the broad and liberal policy which has increased the commerce of the country to a greater degree than has been done by any other appropriation that is made by the Government. You inaugurated the system which has proved of great economy and which is far-reaching in its importance of providing for the great improvements in the harbors and rivers of the country by contracts binding Congress to appropriate a sufficient amount to complete such improvements. That has been the work, sir, of you and your committee.

But for the decree coming from a source all powerful in your party you could have and you would have taken this matter up, deliberated upon it, and prepared a bill to continue these improvements. I have no doubt that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and the committee itself would have taken up the improvements at New York, at Baltimore, at Galveston, at Charleston, as well as at the interior ports on the Lakes and the ports on the Pacific, and made ample provision for them.

It is known to all men, and perfectly so to the members of that committee, that with the enlargement of the ships that are being used in commerce there is scarcely a port upon the Atlantic or on the Pacific that is in condition to accommodate the traffic.

So when the Senator from Rhode Island suggests that I should frame a bill or offer amendments he knows perfectly well that that is not feasible in our system of legislation, and that it would not be wise even if it were permissible.

I believe that all of these appropriations should have, as the rule of the Senate provides, careful scrutiny, after the estimates are made by the executive branch of the Government, by an honorable committee of this body and then be reported.

But, sir, from the explanation I have received from the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and the frank statement of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], I suppose we are compelled to accept the situation and to permit this bill to go through as it is, placing in the hands of an executive officer $3,000,000, to be expended without any limitation, except as to the amount of $50,000 as provided by the House or $100,000 as the Senate committee recommends, on one particular work, and that is only to preserve improvements heretofore made.

In addition to the amount contained in the great bill which we have just passed for continuing work under the contract system, with $700,000,000 practically to be provided for and appropriated at this session of Congress for other work; $100,000,000 for the Army, $100,000,000 for the Navy, and $140,000,000 for pensions, making practically $350,000,000 on account of expenditures growing out of the maintenance of the Army and the Navy, including pensions—such expenditures being largely increased on account of the new possessions of ours—we are to have liberal appropriations for every other object except this one which looks to the increase of the commerce of the country.

That having been determined upon, as I am now informed, and it being the policy to hurry away, with no intention to consider these matters so vital to our commerce, there is nothing, Mr. President, that can be done on this side, as suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island, except to enter a protest against a policy of this narrow character.

I would not offer amendments to the bill if that could properly be done, but under the rules it can not be. If the Senator from

Rhode Island intends to convey the impression that he would be glad to see it done—if he will say to me that he and other Senators on that side will vote for a motion to recommit this bill to the Committee on Commerce with instructions to bring in a regular river and harbor bill—I shall be very glad to unite with him; but I know it is useless to even make such a suggestion.

Mr. President, I suppose the decree has gone forth that only $3,000,000 shall be expended this year under the provisions of this bill for these great improvements, and that the country must be satisfied with the hundreds of millions of dollars expended for other purposes while we are to have only this meager appropriation for the benefit of the commerce of the country.

Mr. ELKINS. I will state for the satisfaction of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] that under advices from the War Department this $3,000,000 is considered to be sufficient to maintain the existing works, to keep them in good order and preservation, and that it is about as much moneya s can be economically expended until we make the regular appropriations for two years, which will come at the next session of Congress, when it is believed that a regular river and harbor bill will be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the committee, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, on page 2, line 7, after the word "improvements," to insert "$3,000,000;" so as to read:

For the restoration or maintenance of channels, or of river and harbor improvements, established or made by the Government, where the usual depth of such channels or customary use of such improvement has become, or may be, impaired and there is no sufficient fund available for such restoration or maintenance, with a view to preserve in their normal condition of efficiency existing channels and improvements, $3,000,000, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 2, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred:" and in line 18, after the word "navigation." to insert "or to protect and preserve any existing Government work done on any river or harbor;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That no single channel or improvement shall be allotted a sum greater than $100,000, nor any portion of the said appropriation, unless the same is necessary in the interest of navigation or to protect and preserve any existing Government work done on any river or harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 2, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That for preliminary examinations and surveys, $100,000: Provided, That no preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate for new works other than those designated in this or some other act or resolution shall be made.

Mr. ELKINS. I move to strike out the word "That." at the beginning of section 3, and to make the letter "f," in the word "for," a capital letter.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 3, after line 7, to insert the following:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of War is authorized to make such modification of the project for the improvement of New Haven Harbor, New Haven, Conn., adopted in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, and extended in the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, so as to make the channel in Quinnipiac River from Tomlinson Bridge to Ferry Street Bridge 20 feet: Provided, That the cost of completing the project as fixed by the said act of March 3, 1899, shall not be increased by reason of such modification.

That the Secretary of War is authorized to make such modification of the project for the improvement of Bridgeport Harbor, Bridgeport, Conn., adopted in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, as in his judgment the commercial interests of the harbor require: Provided, That the cost of completing the project as fixed by the said act shall not be increased by reason of such modification.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, on page 4, after line 2, to insert:

That the unexpended balance of the amount authorized for improving Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, by the river and harbor act of June 3, 1896, is hereby made available for the project contained in House Document No. 108, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, which was approved in the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, after the amendment last adopted, to insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to utilize the unexpended balance of the appropriation made in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 76, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, and contained in the act approved June 13, 1902, in dredging and otherwise improving the mouth of the Puyallup River, in the Tacoma Harbor, State of Washington, in a manner calculated to meet the demands of commerce within the limits of said unexpended balance, which is, inasmuch as an emergency exists, hereby made immediately available.

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation made by the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, for improving Pagan River, Virginia, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in improving the said river by excavating a channel having an available width of not less than 40 feet and such depth as may be obtained without exceeding the said balance.

That the appropriation of $20,000 for improving Norfork Harbor, Virginia, and its approaches, continuing improvement made by act approved June 13, 1902, shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 74, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session.

That in order to repair the damage caused by the flood of 1903, and to restore and continue the progress of improvement in the levee system of the Mississippi River interrupted by that flood, the Secretary of War may, as recommended by the Mississippi River Commission, make contracts for $1,000,000 worth of levee work upon the Mississippi River between Cairo and the Head of the Passes, to be executed during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, but to be paid for out of the appropriation for that stretch of the river, authorized by the river and harbor act of 1902, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, when the appropriation for the last-named fiscal year shall become available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 16, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 5. That no appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for improving harbors and deepening channels shall be used for the construction of Government dredges for use on the Great Lakes unless there shall be a specific appropriation for that purpose, designating the kind of dredge to be constructed and the place for use: Provided, however, That this provision shall not apply to the dredge now being constructed for use in Lake Michigan.

Mr. GORMAN. In my judgment, section 5, which limits the Department to an expenditure on account of these dredges to specific appropriations, is a very wise provision; but I should like to have inserted after the words "Great Lakes" the words "and on the North Atlantic coast." so as to embrace both.

Mr. ELKINS. What is the amendment proposed by the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 20, after the words "Great Lakes," it is proposed to insert "and on the North Atlantic coast;" so as to read:

SEC. 5. That no appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for improving harbors and deepening channels shall be used for the construction of Government dredges for use on the Great Lakes and on the North Atlantic coast, unless there shall be a specific appropriation for that purpose, designating the kind of dredge to be constructed and the place for use, etc.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not know that there is any distinct point on the map to indicate exactly where the North Atlantic ends. I am opposed to such a provision applying to the South Atlantic or to the Gulf; but if the Senator will limit the amendment more definitely, I shall not object to it.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well; I will modify the amendment so as to read "and on the Atlantic coast north of Cape Henry."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 20, after the words "Great Lakes," it is proposed to insert "and on the Atlantic coast north of Cape Henry."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARD. I move to further amend section 5 by adding at the end of line 24 the words "or in San Pedro Harbor, California."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, section 5, at the end of the section, it is proposed to insert the words "or in San Pedro Harbor, California."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 5, after line 24, to insert the following:

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause preliminary examinations or surveys to be made at the localities named in this section as hereinafter provided. In all cases, unless a survey or estimate is herein expressly directed, a preliminary examination shall first be made, which shall embrace information concerning the commercial importance, present and prospective, of the river or harbor mentioned, and a report as to the advisability of its improvement. Whenever such preliminary examination has been made, in case such improvement is not deemed advisable, no survey thereof or estimate therefor shall be made without the direction of Congress; but in case the report shall be to the effect that such river or harbor is worthy of improvement, the Secretary of War is hereby directed, at his discretion, to cause surveys to be made and the cost of improving such river or harbor to be estimated and to be reported to Congress: Provided, That in all cases preliminary examinations, as well as surveys, provided for in this act shall be examined and reviewed by the board provided for in section 3 of the act approved June 13, 1902, to wit:

Mr. ELKINS. I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment. On page 6, lines 3 and 4, I move to strike out the words "unless a survey or estimate is herein expressly directed."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, section 6, line 3, after the word "cases," it is proposed to strike out "unless a survey or estimate is herein expressly directed:" so as to read:

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause preliminary examinations or surveys to be made at the localities named in this section as hereinafter provided. In all cases a preliminary examination shall first be made, which shall embrace information concerning the commercial importance, present and prospective, of the river or harbor mentioned, and a report as to the advisability of its improvement, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. BERRY. I suggest to the Senator that if his amendment is not to one already pending it would be better for him to wait. Are the committee amendments disposed of, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are not.

Mr. BERRY. I think we should dispose of the committee amendments first, and unless the Senator's amendment is to an amendment of the committee I suggest that he defer offering it until the committee amendments are acted on.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is not an amendment to an amendment. I will wait, as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas.

deep and of such increased width as may be desirable and practicable,

I ask that those words may be inserted. The amendment was put in as it was in the original bill in the Senate, but those words were suggested by the engineers of the War Department, and when the bill passed were in it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, after line 15, before the subhead "Oregon," it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Meherrin River, North Carolina, between the town of Murfreesboro and the mouth of said river, with a view of removing the obstructions to navigation therein and of securing a depth of water 9 feet and of the necessary width, and to report the same on or before December, 1904, with the cost thereof.

Mr. ELKINS. I think it would be best to omit when the report shall be made.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ELKINS. I would suggest that the general heading applies, and that the first words of the amendment are unnecessary.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to their omission, just so there is a provision for a survey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can strike out the first two lines, "That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made," and commence "Meherrin River, North Carolina."

Mr. ELKINS. And leave out the date when the report shall be made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; that will be stricken out. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, at the end of line 24, it is proposed to insert:

Or any other dredge now being constructed for the Government.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LATIMER. I desire to offer an amendment on page 11, line 14, after the words "Wateree River," to insert "also Congaree River from its mouth to the city of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. ELKINS. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not offer any more amendments. We have tried to divide this among the States evenly. We do not want to load down the bill with amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator will permit me to offer another amendment, and then I will stop.

Mr. ELKINS. I think the Senator's State has been treated with fairness and consideration.

Mr. SIMMONS. There are only three surveys authorized for North Carolina——

Mr. ELKINS. I make the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not yet offered the amendment. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the word "channel," in line 9, page 10, it is proposed to insert:

Pamlico and Tar rivers, with a view of securing an uninterrupted channel below the town of Washington of a depth of 10 feet at mean low water and 200 feet wide, and to determine whether there should be a change from the location of the channel for a distance of from 1 to 5 miles immediately below the town of Washington; also with a view of securing a channel in Tar River above the town of Washington and below the town of Greenville, inclusive, of a depth of 5 feet and a width of 100 feet, and to make report of such examination and survey with the estimated cost of such improvement.

Mr. ELKINS. I suggest to the Senator to strike out one of those amendments and leave one in—the one he wants most. I wish he would make a selection.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is very hard to make a choice between them, as they are both so meritorious. I did not go before the committee, because the committee acted so expeditiously that I did not know they were considering the bill until they were through with it.

Mr. ELKINS. Notices were given to Senators, and it was intended that every Senator should have one.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was one of the unfortunate Senators who did not get a notice. This is a small matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I wish to amend the bill on page 8, at the conclusion of the provision in reference to Georgia.

I ask to be allowed to put in the RECORD a table of figures which shows the increases which have been made by the various ports of the United States in their commerce. I call attention to the fact that the increase in the port of Savannah was $35,000,000, and that there was but one Atlantic seaport which increased more than the city of Savannah, and that was the city of New York. The city of New York and the city of Galveston are the only two Atlantic and Gulf ports which exceeded Savannah in the amount of increase. I trust that it may be allowed to go in and also a short article on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Sun.]

a Decrease.

[From Savannah Morning News, March 29, 1904.]

A GRATIFYING PORT EXHIBIT.

In another column we publish some figures of exports by principal ports of shipment during the year 1903, showing increases and decreases as compared with the figures of 1893. The figures are from a report of the United States Department of Commerce and Labor, and are official. They show that at the port of Savannah the increase in the ten-year period amounted to the very handsome sum of $35,000,000. With the exception of New York, no other Atlantic port shows so large an increase. New York, New Orleans, and Galveston alone, of all American ports, show larger increases than Savannah. This is, indeed, a most gratifying exhibit.

In connection with this comparison of figures it is not out of place to direct attention to the fact that while there are ports where a great deal of money has been spent by the Government to secure deeper water, none has been spent at any port that can show greater results for the outlay than Savannah. In some places the expenditures have been followed by no marked improvements in rivers and harbors, and in other places the Government's work has produced good results in so far as deeper water is concerned, but no increase in the volume of commerce has followed. But what has been expended on the improvements for Savannah has given all that the engineers' estimates called for, and the figures of the Department of Commerce and Labor show that a large increase in the business of the port has followed. The forecast of greater commerce to result from river and harbor improvements has been fulfilled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

Savannah River and harbor, with the view of obtaining a channel of 30 feet at mean low water from the upper wharves of the city to the sea.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARD. To relieve the bill of unnecessary matter, I wish to withdraw the amendment I proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What amendment is that?

Mr. BARD. On page 5, line 24.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator withdraws the words "or in San Pedro Harbor, California."

Mr. BERRY. On page 6, just before the word "California," in line 21, I move to insert "Arkansas and Missouri" and then the matter I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, after line 20, insert:

ARKANSAS AND MISSOURI.

That part of the St. Francis River between the Missouri and Arkansas State line and its mouth, with a view of widening, deepening, and cleaning out the channel and permanently improving the same for the purposes of commerce, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvements.

Mr. BERRY. It is a survey simply.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6758) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have here an estimate which has been prepared by the Commissioner of Pensions, showing the surviving soldiers of the civil war on July 1, 1904, etc. I ask that it may be inserted as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The estimate referred to is as follows:

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the committee has reported an amendment calling for $4,000,000 in addition to what was reported before, and that those $4,000,000 may be available for the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1904. I wish to give a little explanation concerning this amendment. It is estimated that by reason of Order No. 78, between this time and the 1st of July, 1904, there will be required an additional sum to pay the claims that are now being considered, and upon which but little additional proof will be required, of $1,500,000. An estimate has been made of this, and it will be required this year, for the reason that nearly every claimant who has reached the age of 62 years and who has been granted a pension of less than $6 will individually make a reapplication, and in fact since the order of March 15 they have been making a great number of applications.

The Commissioner of Pensions is disposing of those cases very rapidly, and in order not to be behind in the payments he requires the additional sum of $1,500,000.

In addition to that, there have been passed in previous years and in recent years a number of what may be called special pension acts, covering certain classes of claimants. These could not be estimated for at the time the bills were passed. They were passed at divers times from 1893 to 1903, inclusive. The previous estimates have been found to be low, and therefore there will be a deficiency for the year ending June 30, 1904, in the Pension Bureau, of an estimated amount of $2,500,000, and therefore this amendment, which has been reported by the Committee on Pensions, is asked to be inserted in the bill. The amendment provides as follows:

For paying any deficiency which may arise during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, by reason of recent pension legislation, the sum of $4,000,000, which sum shall become immediately available.

This is necessitated by reason of the following laws, which I think should be made note of so that Senators may understand why this extra amount is required. Otherwise, it might be assumed that it was required on account of the new pension order.

These laws are, first, pensions to those who heretofore served in the Confederate army or deserted from the Union Army, but afterwards served in the Union Army. There were but few of the Confederates who afterwards served in the Union Army until 1898, when we had our war with Spain. Therefore, since that time there have been placed upon the pension rolls a large number of these soldiers, and this requires an amount which was not estimated for.

The second is the adding of certain organizations to the pension rolls, as, for instance, those who served in a number of Indian wars. This law was passed in 1902, and includes several Indian wars.

Third, the increasing of pensions for total deafness. This was increased to a considerable extent this year.

Fourth, the restoration of widows, dependent mothers or dependent sisters, and those who had remarried and who had become widows afterwards.

Fifth, the increase of pensions to those who lost limbs in the service of the United States. That was increased from seventy-two to one hundred dollars a month.

Sixth, the increase of pensions to Mexican-war survivors, which passed last year, when the amount was raised from eight to twelve dollars per month.

Seventh, a very large number of special acts bearing higher rates of pensions.

In addition to the foregoing, the Bureau is doing much more work than usual, and the result is a great many more rejections and a great many more additions and certificates. This increase in the amount of work in the Bureau accomplishes the finishing of a large amount of delayed and accumulated business.

So it is thought it will be necessary to provide two and a half million dollars more this year in the appropriation bill which may be immediately available. Also one million and a half on account of the extra number of applications which followed as a result of this order. I will now yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator from West Virginia proceeds, I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question. Does the bill which the Senator reports, through any appropriation carrying out order 78 apply to the time between now and July 1, the beginning of the next fiscal year?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; $1,500,000 is required by reason of the order and the extra number of cases by those who have reached 62 years of age, who have made new application, and whose applications will be passed upon and pensions allowed thereunder undoubtedly before the 1st of July.

Mr. HALE. The reason I ask is that in the House bill providing for deficiencies, this $1,500,000 has been inserted and has been reported by the committee of the Senate as a part of the bill. But if the Senator has included that in this bill, which should strictly be a bill for the next year and not covering deficiencies, I will make no question with him. It does not belong in this bill; but if it passes, then of course I shall move to strike that item out of the deficiency bill. Regular appropriation bills carry the estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year beginning with July 1.

The business of a deficiency bill is to provide items for the rest of the year up to the beginning of the next fiscal year. I shall make no question with the Senator because he has put a deficiency item in this year's bill, if he has the language sufficient, and I shall not ask to pass a duplicate bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the amount of the deficiency will be about $4,000,000 for all these cases, and the deficiency bill calls for only $1,500,000. Now, it is just as necessary to have the $2,500,000 on account of the recent laws as it is to have the $1,500,000.

It seems to me more appropriate that we should keep these pension appropriations upon the pension bill, and the amendment simply provides for $4,000,000 and does not designate the purpose in detail, although, of course, the report shows what it is for, except as I have stated, "for paying any deficiency which may arise during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, by reason of recent pension legislation, the sum of $4,000,000, which sum shall become immediately available."

Mr. HALE. I did not know. I will withdraw what I said. But that process, carried out, would entirely abolish the deficiency appropriations. The deficiency bill is a bill that of itself, not for one Department, but for pensions, for the Navy and the Army, and every branch of the Government, takes into consideration the question whether the appropriations for the past are sufficient to run the rest of the year. If the Senator takes the ground that on an annual appropriation bill covering a fiscal year he should put in everything that is a deficiency, that is the end of the scrutiny that deficiency appropriations now receive. If the Senator does that, I shall certainly make a point of order that the amendment is not in order on this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. It does not make the slightest difference to me whether this is allowed upon the pension bill or whether the amount is put in the deficiency bill. I supposed it would receive the same consideration upon the pension bill as upon the deficiency bill, and from the fact that the deficiency bill as reported by the House covered only one item, when there were expenses that related to many items and which increased the sum, I thought it best to do one of two things, either to consider the whole upon the pension bill or else to ask the Senator in charge of the deficiency bill to amend that bill so as to provide for $4,000,000 instead of $1,500,000.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator had examined the deficiency bill he would have seen that that is just what it does provide for—the whole $4 000.000 of which a million and a half is to carry out order 78. While I have no question of priority or jealousy, I can not consent, and I do not suppose the Senate will consent, that the whole system shall be changed, and that in an appropriation bill for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1904, the Senator should put on items which are strictly deficiencies, and which are provided for in a deficiency bill that has been originated in the popular branch and sent over to us. They have put on the $4,000.000. It is on the deficiency bill as reported to the Senate. And under these circumstances I think the Senator had better strike that item out of his bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator desires to raise the point of order, and if the matter is taken care of in the deficiency bill, I certainly shall not have the slightest objection to its being stricken out.

Mr. HALE. It is taken care of. The provision in the deficiency bill is for $4,000,000.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understood it was only $1,500,000.

Mr. HALE. No, it is for $4,000,000. The Commissioner of Pensions went before the House committee on the deficiency bill—I am not speaking for the committee here, but it is due to the House—and they put in the $4,000,000 altogether, including the one million and a half. It is in the bill already reported.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask in this connection whether it is a matter upon which a point of order could be raised that you are in a general appropriation bill making some of the money appropriated immediately available.

Mr. HALE That is another thing.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all there is in this.

Mr. HALE. You make it available, but you have items which are not in themselves annual appropriations, but which are deficiencies, and which have always been considered as deficiencies and are considered by the House of Representatives as deficiencies and are in the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can see that they could be placed upon the deficiency bill, but I can not see any real objection to their being upon this bill.

Mr. HALE. Then there would be no deficiency bill as to this service.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. That is not the habit or the practice. It is not the basis upon which appropriation bills are run. The House of Representatives does not make up its bill in that way. It sends this bill in. It did not put this item on the pension bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say to the Senator I am not trying to make a new rule at all. I am perfectly willing, if the Senator considers that a point of order will lie upon the amendment, that he shall make the point of order.

Mr. HALE. Well, I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair observes but one amendment to the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is an amendment which has been reported, if the Chair please.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been offered.

Mr. McCUMBER. It has not been heretofore offered, but is offered at this time.

Mr. HALE. The Senator, then, can settle the whole matter by not offering it, or I can make the point of order when he offers it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will offer the amendment which has been reported and allow the Senator to make the point of order.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that it is a deficiency not to be provided for in the regular appropriation bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, page 2, after the word "dollars," insert:

For paying any deficiency which may arise during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, by reason of recent pension legislation, the sum of $4,000,000 which sum shall become immediately available.

Mr. HALE. It is even stronger than I supposed. It states that it is a deficiency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I desire to detain the Senate for only a moment to make a few observations on the bill and on the question that has been raised before the Senate.

I am very sorry indeed that the chairman of our committee felt it necessary to defend the action of the Department in granting pensions under the recent order of the Pension Bureau. My position is that every soldier who served his country from the year 1861 to 1865—and there was not one boy who was not needed—and who served, it may be, for only thirty days, it may be four years, and received an honorable discharge, is entitled to a pension under the understanding with this Government when the soldiers were called into service.

I speak of my friend here, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who carried a knapsack like some of the rest of us, who did not wear epaulettes and a sword dangling by his side for honor. We went to the defense of our country because we believed it was our duty. The Senator here was wounded and imprisoned. He served his country for $13 a month. Does any Senator on the floor of the Senate believe that he went into the service of his country to get $13 a month?

No, Mr. President, the country said to him when he enlisted, "We will take care of you, your widow, and your orphan;" and it is the duty of the American people to-day to care for the widows and orphans of the men who enlisted in the service of their country in 1861 to 1865.

Mr. President, we all know the inducements that were held out when we were told in mass conventions and meetings—the young men 18, 19, and 20 years of age, my friend here being 19 when he enlisted—that this Government would care for the soldier and care for his mother and care for his widow—if it might be that he had a wife—and his children. It is our duty to-day to do that which the Government then promised.

It does not make a particle of difference whether the deficiency is $4,000,000 or $400,000,000; I am for the soldier and his widow and his orphans that they shall be cared for.

Who saved this country? Just such men as my friend here from Minnesota and my friend the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who put their knapsacks on their backs and placed muskets on their shoulders and went to the front to defend their country. Those are the men—others like them—who are entitled to-day to the sympathy and the care of this great country of ours.

Mr. President, if my vote would carry it, every soldier to-day who can show that he had an honorable discharge would get $25 a month pension, whether he was a poor man, a rich man, or whether his widow or his orphan children were in need or not.

Mr. President, these pension laws of ours are a delusion and a snare. Nothing but red-tapism stands or has stood between the just claim of the soldiers of the Union and granting to them and to their widows and orphans their just rights.

It is all nonsense to say that the Government of the United States took into its service a man who was a wreck, who was an invalid at the time he enlisted. Every one of us was examined, as I can appeal to my friend from Minnesota here. We went through a rigid examination. Why should we be compelled to prove that we were healthy and strong and in good physical condition when we enlisted? If we were not, why were we accepted?

Mr. President, I tell you upon this subject I have no patience with this paring process. I say to my friends on the floor of the Senate that to the men who volunteered, to the men who carried knapsacks, to the men who had hardtack in their haversacks and a piece of salt meat, this country is to-day under obligation for the saving of our Union and our position as a power in the world's history.

Mr. President, I think that the pension laws to-day should be revised. As I stated in my remarks when I set out, I believe that every man who served his country, it does not matter whether for five days, five months, or five years, is entitled to a pension. The Scriptures tell us that the man who entered into the vineyard at the last hour is entitled to just as much pay as the man who went in and bore the heat and burden of the day.

I have no patience, Mr. President, with those who are continually talking about 62 years of age, 68 years of age, 70 years of age, or any other age. Any man who served his country faithfully and was honorably discharged should be entitled to a pension, and neither the Senate nor the House of Representatives should hesitate to appropriate a sufficient amount of money so that every one of them shall receive a pension.

Now, another consideration enters into this matter. As a member of the Committee on Pensions we are often confronted with the fact that some widow owns a house and lot, and consequently she is not entitled to a pension. The house she lives in is a home, to be sure, but it does not secure to her a maintenance or an income. And yet under the ruling of the Pension Bureau she is refused a pension. That is all wrong, Mr. President.

I do hope that the Senate will be generous and liberal in the construction of the laws and in appropriating money to the payment of pensions.

Mr. President, when the orators stood before us in the little country village, in the red schoolhouse, they told us what glory there was in front of us and what we were expected to do in defense of our country and what great heroes we would be if we enlisted. We went up and signed our names, and we were examined and mustered into the service of the United States. We know what it cost us to bid good-by to the old mother. We know what it cost many of us to say good-by to the little sweetheart.

I say we should not be disappointed. We expected this great country of ours to provide for us and those whom we left dependent. I thank God that I do not need personally anything from the Government of the United States, but I feel from the fullness of my heart that every man who served his country should be properly cared for, and that his widow and orphans should be properly cared for.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print in two volumes, instead of one, a comprehensive index of Government publications, 1881 to 1903.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print and bind 12,000 copies of the proceedings attending the unveiling of the statue of Gen. William T. Sherman.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print and bind in one volume, in cloth, 17,000 copies of the three separate memorial addresses on Abraham Lincoln, James A. Garfield, and William McKinley; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 10018) granting to the State of North Dakota 640 acres of land, embracing the White Stone Hills battlefield and burial ground of soldiers killed in that engagement;

A bill (H. R. 10670) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 11518) to authorize the holding of a regular term of the district court of the United States for the western district of Virginia in the city of Bigstone Gap, Va.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15054, the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15054) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I wish to announce that to-morrow morning, after the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to continue the consideration of this bill.

UNRESERVED LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. DIETRICH. I am authorized by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14826) to amend the homestead laws as to certain unappropriated and unreserved lands in Nebraska, to report it with amendments, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 1, page 2, line 18, after the word "irrigate," to strike out "by means of water conducted from natural streams by gravity" and to insert "under the national irrigation law or by private enterprise;" and in line 23, after the word "aforesaid," to strike out "through operations under the national irrigation law or by private enterprise;" so as to make the section read:

That from and after sixty days after the approval of this act entries made under the homestead laws in the State of Nebraska west and north of the following line, to wit, beginning at a point on the boundary line between the States of South Dakota and Nebraska where the first guide meridian west of the sixth principal meridian strikes said boundary; thence running south along said guide meridian to its intersection with the fourth standard parallel north of the base line between the States of Nebraska and Kansas; thence west along said fourth standard parallel to its intersection with the second guide meridian west of the sixth principal meridian; thence south along said second guide meridian to its intersection with the third standard parallel north of the said base line; thence west along said third standard parallel to its intersection with the range line between ranges 25 and 26 west of the sixth principal meridian; thence south along said line to its intersection with the second standard parallel north of the said base line; thence west on said standard parallel to its intersection with the range line between ranges 30 and 31 west; thence south along said line to its intersection with the boundary line between the States of Nebraska and Kansas, shall not exceed in area 640 acres, and shall be as nearly compact in form as possible, and in no event over 2 miles in extreme length: Provided, That there shall be excluded from the provisions of this act such lands within the territory herein described as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior it may be reasonably practicable to irrigate under the national irrigation law or by private enterprise; and that said Secretary shall, prior to the date above mentioned, designate and exclude from entry under this act the lands, particularly along the North Platte River, which in his opinion it may be possible to irrigate as aforesaid, and shall thereafter, from time to time, open to entry under this act any of the lands so excluded, which, upon further investigation, he may conclude can not be practically irrigated in the manner aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 13, after the word "entered," to insert "but final entry shall not be allowed of such additional land until five years after first entering same;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That entrymen under the homestead laws of the United States within the territory above described who own and occupy the lands heretofore entered by them may, under the provisions of this act and subject to its conditions, enter other lands contiguous to their said homestead entry, which shall not, with the land so already entered, owned, and occupied, exceed in the aggregate 640 acres; and residence upon the original homestead shall be accepted as equivalent to residence upon the additional land so entered, but final entry shall not be allowed of such additional land until five years after first entering same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 22, after the word "Provided," to strike out:

That a former homestead entry shall not be a bar to the entry under the provisions of this act of a tract which, together with the former entry, shall not exceed 640 acres.

And insert:

That the former homestead entryman within the area above described who yet owns and occupies such former entry shall not by reason of such former entry be barred from an entry under the provisions of this act of a tract which, together with the former entry, shall not exceed 640 acres.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the fees and commissions on all entries under this act shall be uniformly the same as those charged under the present law for a maximum entry at the minimum price. That the commutation provisions of the homestead law shall not apply to entries under this act, and at the time of making final proof the entryman must prove affirmatively that he has placed upon the lands entered permanent improvements of the value of not less than $1.25 per acre for each acre included in his entry: Provided, That a former homestead entryman within the area above described who yet owns and occupies such former entry shall not by reason of such former entry be barred from an entry under the provisions of this act of a tract which, together with the former entry, shall not exceed 640 acres.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Is there a report with the bill? I do not know what it is. I never heard of it before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report.

Mr. DIETRICH. I will state that the bill was recommended unanimously by the Public Lands Committee in the House; it passed the House unanimously, and it has been favorably reported by the Public Lands Committee of the Senate. It is a bill which applies alone to the arid lands of Nebraska. We still have in Nebraska about 9,000,000 acres of land, mostly sand hills, where it is impossible for a family to make a living upon 160 acres. The object of the bill is simply to increase the homestead privilege in that portion of the State to 640 acres. I assure the Senate that any 40 acres in the eastern part of the State have more value than any 640 acres still remaining unappropriated.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to ask a question for information. Is the bill as reported by the committee, with the amendments, the same bill that passed the House yesterday?

Mr. DIETRICH. It is the same bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly the same?

Mr. DIETRICH. The amendments have been made to conform——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have not had time or opportunity to examine it. Then, if we pass the bill with the amendments, as reported, it would simply be concurring in the action of the House?

Mr. DIETRICH. We are concurring in the action of the House with the exception of the amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator what will be the effect of the amendments? I could not catch them, there was so much noise in the Chamber. The bill has not been printed as proposed to be amended.

Mr. DIETRICH. The amendments that have been added require that persons must live upon the land five years before they can secure title, and they must also place permanent improvements thereon to the extent of a dollar and a quarter an acre.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That provision was in the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. DIETRICH. Yes; but not the proviso that they must live five years upon the land.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to know whether the bill applies to any section except Nebraska?

Mr. DIETRICH. It applies to no section except Nebraska, and, as described in the bill, only to a portion of Nebraska, the extreme western part.

Mr. TELLER. I dislike to interfere with a bill of this kind, local in its character.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 22, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

THURSDAY, April 21, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

AFFECTING MANNER OF IMPORTATION.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up the privileged bill (S. 2816) to amend section 3095 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to manner of importation, which I shall send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3095 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3095. Except in the districts on the northern, northwestern, and western boundaries of the United States, adjoining to the Dominion of Canada, or into the districts adjacent to Mexico, no merchandise of foreign growth or manufacture subject to the payment of duties shall be brought into the United States from any foreign port in any other manner than by sea, nor in any vessel of less than 0 net register tons, or landed or unladen at any other port than is directed by law, under the penalty of seizure and forfeiture of all such vessels and of the merchandise imported therein, laden or unladen in any other manner."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect one month after its passage.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear some explanation of the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the present law regulating the importation of goods into the northwestern sections of our country was passed prior to the creation of the Puget Sound district. The language in the law at present is "except into the districts hereinbefore described," and that description, therefore, did not cover the Puget Sound district. The creation of the Puget Sound district brings about this strange condition of facts, that the law is different, or rather, there is no law at all regulating this question in the matter of importations into that district. The Treasury Department asks that we make the present law conform to the present conditions of the districts in the Northwest.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. The bill comes from the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It comes with a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means, and is recommended by the Treasury.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, does it affect the imports from abroad?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly not, because they can not do that. This is a simple change in the language of the present law. It strikes out the words "hereinbefore described" and puts it in the form as read by the Clerk.

Mr. LIND. It does not affect the bonding privilege?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all. It simply conforms the law to the new condition of the districts.

Mr. PAYNE. It makes it the same as it is with Canada and Mexico.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It makes the law exactly as it is with Canada and Mexico; it makes a uniform operation throughout that whole section of the country.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

UNANIMOUS CONSENTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House that he has memoranda from many Members asking for the passage of court and bridge bills and bills that probably would not be objected to if the House would take the time to ascertain what they are. It is the desire of many Members that these requests shall be submitted to the House for unanimous consent. Of course each Member has the right, as gentlemen understand, to object to the consideration of any bill, or the consideration of all bills can be cut off by demand for the regular order. If such is the pleasure of the House, the Chair will devote one to two hours this morning in laying these matters before the House for unanimous consent, after having made this statement.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER AT LEXINGTON, MO.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 15195, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15195) authorizing the construction of a wagon, toll, and electric-railway bridge over the Missouri River at Lexington, Mo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill of which the Clerk has reported the title?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, with committee amendments thereto, in full.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAMLIN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10018. An act granting to the State of North Dakota 640 acres of land, embracing the White Stone Hills battlefield and burial ground of soldiers killed in that engagement;

H. R. 11518. An act to authorize the holding of a regular term of the district court of the United States for the western district of Virginia in the city of Bigstone Gap, Va.; and

H. R. 10670. An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 11676. An act to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation in Montana, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 10101. An act for the cession of 120 acres of land to the Beecher Island Battle Memorial Association.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5597. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents;" and

S. 5475. An act granting a pension to Mary M. Rice.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 5597. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents"—to the Committee on Printing.

S. 5475. An act granting a pension to Mary M. Rice—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

INDIANS ON SHOSHONE RESERVATION, WYO.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 13481) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians residing on the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will explain that his only reason for asking for objection before the reading of the bill was that when a bill is lengthy it may be well that the objection, if any, should be stated before time has been spent in the reading. The Chair can see the propriety in a case of this kind of asking for the reading of the bill before the question of unanimous consent is determined.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the preamble of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the residue of the bill; which, in its entirety, is as follows:

Whereas Messrs. Joseph H. Brigham and Charles H. Merillat, two members of a commission consisting of Messrs. John D. Woodruff, Joseph H. Brigham, and Charles H. Merillat, did on the 2d day of October, 1891, conclude an agreement with the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians residing on the Shoshone Indian Reservation in the State of Wyoming, which said agreement is in words and figures as follows, to wit:

Articles of agreement made and entered into at Fort Washakie, in the State of Wyoming, on the 2d day of October, 1891, by and between John D. Woodruff, Charles H. Merillat, and Joseph H. Brigham, commissioners on the part of the United States, and the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians in the State of Wyoming.

ARTICLE I.

For the consideration hereinafter named the said Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians hereby cede, convey, transfer, relinquish, and surrender, forever and absolutely, subject to certain conditions hereinafter named respecting the right of individual Indians to retain allotments heretofore taken on the ceded part of the reservation, all their right, title, and interest of every kind and character in and to the lands and the water-rights appertaining thereunto, embraced in the following-described tract of country in the State of Wyoming:

All that portion of the Shoshone Reservation lying north and east of the following described lines, to wit: Beginning in the mid-channel of the Big Wind River at a point where the river crosses the western boundary of the reservation; thence in a southeasterly direction, following the mid-channel of the Big Wind River to a point known as the Wood Flat Crossing; thence in a line due east to the eastern boundary of the reservation; then, beginning where the line run due east from Wood Flat Crossing intersects the Big Wind River; thence in a line due south to the southern boundary of the reservation.

ARTICLE II.

In consideration for the lands ceded, sold, relinquished, and conveyed, as aforesaid, the United States stipulates and agrees to pay to the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians the sum of $600,000 to bear interest until paid at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, and to be expended for the benefit of the Indians in the manner hereinafter described.

ARTICLE III.

Of the said $600,000, $170,000 is hereby set apart as a cattle fund, the interest on which, at 5 per cent per annum, shall be annually expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the purchase, maintenance, and support of a herd of cattle, to be held in common for the benefit of said Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians. The Indian agent shall select an appropriate and legal brand for the cattle, and it shall be his duty to see that all the cattle delivered at the agency for the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians are suitably branded before being turned on the range. The Indian agent shall have full jurisdiction over the management of said herd of cattle. It shall be his duty to employ all necessary help and he shall have power to discharge said help at any time.

The range management of the herd shall be intrusted to the Indian or half-breed member of either of the tribes whom the Indian agent shall select as the person best qualified for the purpose: Provided, however, That if it be deemed advisable at any time for the proper care of said cattle the agent shall have power to employ a well-qualified white man as foreman. The employees under this foreman shall be selected from the Indian and half-breed members of the tribes. The foreman and herders shall furnish their own ponies, and shall receive a reasonable compensation, to be fixed by the agent and paid out of the money available each year for the running expenses of the cattle herd. The Indian agent alone shall have power to sell cattle from said Indian herd, under the following restrictions: No cattle bearing said Indian brand shall be sold or transferred in the State of Wyoming except for immediate slaughter. All cattle so sold or transferred shall be delivered by the Indian agent at some agreed-upon corral, and no claim or title of any individual, company, or corporation to any of said brand of cattle running upon the open range can be acquired or shall be recognized. The Indian agent, however, shall have power to ship beef cattle to eastern markets for sale whenever in his opinion such shipment would be to the advantage of the Indians. All sales of cattle shall be for cash, and the proceeds shall be turned into what shall be known as the Shoshone and Arapahoe cattle fund, and held by the agent for pro rata distribution to the Indians whenever said fund reaches an amount equal to $2 per capita.

Any unauthorized person found in possession of cattle from the Indian herd shall be liable to prosecution under the laws of the United States, and on conviction may be fined not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment for not exceeding three years in the discretion of the court. The penalties provided for defacement of the Government brand on cattle shall apply to cases of defacement of the brand selected for cattle belonging to the Indian herd. Each year it shall be the duty of the Indian agent to make and forward to the Secretary of the Interior a careful estimate of the running expenses of the herd for the coming season, and the amount so estimated shall be reserved from the annual fund and the balance used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, in the purchase of stock cattle.

ARTICLE IV.

The further amount of $80,000 is hereby set apart as an irrigation fund, the interest on which, at 5 per cent per annum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be annually expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in building dams, constructing ditches and canals for irrigation within the diminished reservation, and in the maintenance, enlargement, repair, and management of such system of irrigation as may be established: Provided, That in the employment of persons for work, Indians, members of the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes, shall be employed whenever practicable, and shall be paid the average wages paid to white laborers for the same service rendered.

ARTICLE V.

The further amount of $270,000 is hereby set apart as a general welfare and improvement fund, the interest of which, at 5 per cent per annum, shall be annually expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the civilization, industrial education, comfort, and improvement of the Indians, the money to be expended in the purchase of such articles and for such purposes as the Indians may request, and the Secretary of the Interior approve: Provided, however, That a reasonable amount of money may be expended each year in the erection, repair, and maintenance of bridges needed on the reservation, and in conducting an experimental farm on the reservation for the benefit of the Indians.

ARTICLE VI.

"All lands, except coal and mineral lands remaining undisposed of six years after the said ceded lands shall be open for entry, shall be sold by the Secretary of the Interior to the highest bidder, at not less than $1 per acre, and all lands, except coal and mineral lands, remaining unsold ten years after the opening of said lands to entry, shall be sold by the Secretary of the Interior for the best price obtainable."

"SEC. 6. That this amended agreement with the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians in the State of Wyoming shall be in force and take effect when a majority of the adult males of the said tribes shall have agreed to the same."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] whether this bill does not provide that it shall not take effect until its provisions are ratified by the Indians to be affected.

Mr. MONDELL. One of the committee amendments provides that the amended treaty shall not be in force until ratified by the Indians.

Mr. FINLEY. I will ask the gentleman from Wyoming whether the appropriations contained in this bill are made in order to carry out the provisions of the enabling act admitting Wyoming into the Union.

Mr. MONDELL. The appropriations are for surveys; and per capita payments are to be made, which are reimbursable.

Mr. FINLEY. Then, as I understand, no appropriation is made directly from the Treasury.

Mr. MONDELL. No, sir.

Mr. FINLEY. I should like a word of explanation with reference to the school lands.

Mr. MONDELL. The bill originally provided for the purchase of the school lands at $1.25 an acre. As the bill now stands, that provision is made; but I propose to offer an amendment striking out all the provisions with regard to school lands. That will leave the State with the right under her constitution to take lieu lands; but the Government does not pay for those lands.

Mr. FINLEY. Is that because the enabling act admitting the State of Wyoming into the Union does not provide that sections 16 and 36 be set apart?

Mr. MONDELL. No; the enabling act authorizes the State to take lieu lands. While the bill originally provided that the State should take lands on the reservation, the amendment which will be offered strikes out those provisions and makes no provision at all with regard to school lands, leaving the State authorized under the enabling act to take lieu lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is perhaps proper that I should state that the amendment referred to has been authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs. The bill was reported unanimously from that committee, with the understanding that the amendment should be offered on the floor.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the situation.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of page 12 after the word "lands," in line 22.

After the word "dollars," in line 11, page 13, insert "of the moneys derived from land sales."

On page 14, line 13, after the word "dollars," insert "of the moneys derived from land sales."

On page 17, after the word "agreement," in line 1, strike out the following: "Except sections 16 and 36 in each township, which shall be disposed of for the benefit of the common schools of Wyoming in accordance with the laws of said State."

On page 19 of the bill, line 14, strike out the following words: "one hundred and twenty" and insert in lieu thereof "eighty-five."

On page 19, beginning on line 15, strike out the following: "Or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, for sections 16 and 36 of each township within the ceded territory granted to the State of Wyoming, as provided in section 2 of this act," and in lieu thereof insert the following: "To make the per capita payment provided in article 8, section 1, of this act, the same to be reimbursed from the first moneys received from the sale of the lands herein ceded and relinquished."

Page 20, after the word "described," on line 5, strike out the words "except sections 16 and 36, or the equivalent in each township."

The amendment of Mr. MONDELL was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time: and it was accordingly read the third time.

The preamble was then agreed to.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MONDELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

And any changes in said bridge which the Secretary of War may at any time deem necessary, and order in the interests of navigation, shall be made by the owners thereof at their own expense.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7, page 1, strike out the words "a navigable stream, 40 feet above low-water mark."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RESURVEY IN CERTAIN TOWNSHIPS IN ROUTT AND RIO BLANCO COUNTIES, COLO.

Mr. HOGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2382.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2382) providing for the resurvey of certain townships in Routt and Rio Blanco counties, in the State of Colorado.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be made a resurvey of the lands in Routt and Rio Blanco counties, in the State of Colorado, embraced in and consisting of townships 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and fractional township 12 north, of ranges 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, and fractional range 104 west, including a retracement of the base line and resurvey of the first and second correction lines north, through ranges 92 to 104 west, inclusive, and the eleventh auxiliary guide meridian west, the twelfth guide meridian west, and the twelfth auxiliary guide meridian west, from the base line to the north boundary of Colorado through townships 1 to 12 north, all of the sixth principal base and meridian; and all rules and regulations of the Department of the Interior requiring petitions from all settlers of said townships asking for resurvey and agreement to abide by the result of the same so far as these lands are concerned are hereby abrogated: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the present bona fide claim of any actual occupant of any of said lands to the lands so occupied. And for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, including office work and an examination of said resurveys in the field, there is hereby appropriated $120,000 out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all of the act after the word "occupied" in line 12, page 2.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado a question with reference to this matter.

Mr. HOGG. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask whether the Secretary of the Interior may not now have these surveys made without a special act of Congress?

Mr. HOGG. No; the law relating to this requires data of certain residents, and they can not do it as to all of them. The condition there is one of a great deal of danger to those occupying the lands. The survey made twenty years ago was very inaccurate and has resulted in a good deal of trouble between the settlers, and it is liable to produce a great deal more if it is not corrected. A railroad is going through there now, which is causing the country to be settled up very rapidly and makes this all the more important.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am not opposed to the bill, but I wanted to know whether it required a special act.

Mr. HOGG. It requires a petition of the residents.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I had occasion recently to make an inquiry into a similar matter in Oklahoma and New Mexico.

Mr. HOGG. I will say to the gentleman that the bill is recommended by the Department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Understand, I have no objection. I simply wanted to make an inquiry as to whether or not the Secretary can now have this work done.

Mr. HOGG. No. That law, if you will examine it, provides otherwise.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOGG, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE NAVIGABLE WATERS OF ST. ANDREWS BAY.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 15165.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Birmingham, Columbus and St. Andrews Railroad Company, a corporation duly created and existing, is hereby authorized to build and maintain a railroad bridge across the navigable waters of St. Andrews Bay, in Washington County, Fla., at or near a point on the north arm of said bay known as Gipsy Point, on North Bay, the said bridge to be so constructed as not to interfere with the navigation of said navigable waters.

SEC. 2. That any bridge constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of the navigation of said navigable waters as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and to secure that object the said company shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the proposed bridge and a map of the location, giving, for the space of at least one-half mile above and one-half mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the arm of the bay, the shore lines at high and low water, and the direction and strength of the current and the soundings accurately showing the bed of the stream, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction or after its completion such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That the bridge constructed under this act shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transportation over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for transportation of said mails, troops, and munitions over the railroads and public highways leading to said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for a postal telegraph across said bridge; and said structure shall be so kept and managed at all times as to afford reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said bridge; and for the safety of vessels passing at night there shall be displayed on said bridge, from sunset to sunrise, at the expense of the owners thereof, such lights and other signals as may be prescribed by the Light-House Board; and the said bridge shall be changed or altered at the cost and expense of the owners thereof from time to time, as the Secretary of War may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river.

SEC. 4. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the approval of this act.

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

On page 1, in line 8, strike out the word "Gipsy" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Grassy."

On page 2, in line 24, after the word "bridge," add the following: "and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies."

After section 3 add section 4, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains over the same, and the approaches thereto, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use, or, in case of disagreement, upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties in interest."

Renumber section 4 to section 5 and section 5 to section 6.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A bill (H. R. 14533) to change and fix the time for holding the district and circuit courts for the northern division of the eastern district of Tennessee.

Be it enacted, etc., That the term of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the northern division of the eastern district of Tennessee, held at Knoxville, Tenn., shall commence on the first Monday in March of each year instead of the second Monday in March, as is now provided by law; and said term shall continue as long as the presiding judge may deem it necessary.

SEC. 2. That no action, suit, proceeding, information, indictment, recognizance, bail bond, or other process in either of said courts shall abate or be rendered invalid by reason of the change of time in the holding of the term of said courts, but the same shall be deemed to be returnable to, pending, and triable at the term herein provided for.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws conflicting with this act be, and are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SELECTION OF CERTAIN LANDS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4474) to authorize the governor of the State of Mississippi to select certain lands in part satisfaction of its grant for university purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the governor of the State of Mississippi be, and he is hereby, authorized, in part satisfaction of the grant heretofore made to said State by act of Congress approved June 20, 1894, entitled "An act to supply a deficiency in the grant of public lands to the State of Mississippi for the use of the State university," to select, under the provisions of said act, the lands formerly reserved for naval purposes, situated on Back Bay, west of the city of Biloxi, in the State of Mississippi, which were restored to disposition under the town-site laws under the act of Congress approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to certify to the Secretary of the Interior, for restoration to the public domain, lands in States of Alabama and Mississippi not needed for naval purposes," and so much of the second proviso of said act of March 2, 1895, as may prevent such selection is hereby repealed.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"Provided, That this act shall not invalidate or impair in any way the rights of bona fide settlers on the said land."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman give some explanation of this bill.

Mr. CANDLER. This bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Public Lands, and I have called it up at the request of my colleague, Mr. MCLAIN, who introduced the bill. The lands involved were in 1832 reserved for naval purposes by virtue of section 3 of the act of March 3, 1827.

Mr. SULZER. Let me ask the gentleman right there: Does this public land belong to the Government of the United States or to the State of Mississippi?

Mr. CANDLER. Well, I will tell you in just a moment, if you will just wait. It was restored to the public domain under the act of March 2, 1895, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to certify such lands as were not needed for naval purposes for restoration to the public domain. Under that act it was certified by him and restored to the public domain, but was reserved by a proviso in the act for disposition under the town-site law. Under act of Congress of June 20, 1894, the governor of the State of Mississippi was authorized to select certain agricultural lands for the university of the State.

Under that act, he, on March 5, 1895, selected some lands and included in his selections these lands, but as they were reserved under the town-site law it was held by the Department they were not agricultural lands and therefore were not subject to selection under this act by the governor of the State in accordance with the terms prescribed therein. As a matter of fact——

Mr. SULZER. Let me ask the gentleman how many acres are there?

Mr. CANDLER. Three hundred and seventy-seven acres. As a matter of fact these lands are agricultural lands and should never have been reserved under the town-site law, and this is simply for the purpose of giving the governor of the State of Mississippi the right to select these lands along with the other agricultural lands selected by him, it being the same character of land as the other selections made.

Mr. SULZER. I want to ask the gentleman if this land is near the Tombigbee River?

Mr. CANDLER. It is not near the Tombigbee River; if it was it would be much more valuable. Being near the Tombigbee adds beauty, charm, and value to anything which is so fortunately situated, for it is a most beautiful river, and when improved by the Government, which it will be, it will be one of the greatest commercial waterways in this magnificent country of ours, and this Congress is being unjust to the Government and the country at large in delaying the improvement of this river. But it is coming, for it is right, and right is mighty and will prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. SULZER. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANDLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BULL RUN FOREST RESERVE, OREG.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent to call up the bill S. 3036.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3036) for the protection of the Bull Run Forest Reserve and the sources of the water supply of the city of Portland, State of Oregon.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date of the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, except forest rangers and other persons employed by the United States to protect the forest, and Federal and State officers in the discharge of their duties, and the employees of the water board of the city of Portland, State of Oregon, to enter, for the purpose of grazing stock, upon any part of the reserve known as the Bull Run Forest Reserve, in the Cascade Mountains, in the State of Oregon, which reserve was established by proclamation of the President of the United States in 1892, as provided by section 24 of an act of Congress entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, and which reserve includes within its area the water supply of the city of Portland, State of Oregon; and any person or persons, save those hereinbefore excepted, who shall engage in grazing stock, or who shall permit stock of any kind to graze within said Bull Run Forest Reserve, or who shall enter upon said forest reserve, or be found therein or in any part thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in the district court of the United States for the district of Oregon shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, in the discretion of the court. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to enforce the provisions of this act by all proper means at his command, and to exclude from said forest reserve stock of all kinds and all persons, save as hereinbefore excepted.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all between the word "shall," in line 3, on page 2, and the word "shall," in line 9, on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the words "knowingly trespass thereon."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a slight amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is it an amendment to the committee amendment or an additional amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. It is an amendment to another portion of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

And the failure to make such request shall not create any presumption against the party so charged, and such failure shall not be referred to by counsel or the court during any proceedings.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SELECTION OF LANDS BY THE ABSENTEE WYANDOTTE INDIANS.

Mr. BOWERSOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2268) to authorize the Absentee Wyandotte Indians to select certain lands and for other purposes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That each living adult Absentee Wyandotte Indian whose name appears upon a census roll of Absentee Wyandotte Indians made by Special Agent Joel T. Olive, as approved by the Secretary of the Interior December 7, 1896, may select in person, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, from the public domain, 80 acres of agricultural land wherever there may be such lands subject to entry; and the heirs of any deceased Absentee Wyandotte Indian so enrolled may in like manner select a like quantity of land in the name of their deceased ancestor, and the natural or legal guardian of any minor Absentee Wyandotte so enrolled may in like manner select 80 acres of agricultural land for his ward, and when lands shall have been so selected by any person entitled to make such selection and such selection is approved by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause a patent to issue in the name of the enrolled Absentee Wyandotte by or for whom such selection has been made, which patent shall contain the condition that the lands covered thereby shall not be aliened without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That as soon as any such selection has been made and approved the pro rata share of the Indian by or for whom such selection was made in the funds provided in the acts of August 15, 1894, and March 2, 1895, shall thereby become relinquished to the United States and shall be covered into the Treasury as proceeds of the sales of public lands: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may add to the said census roll the names of such persons, not exceeding seventeen in number, as he may find properly to have been entitled to enrollment by said special agent, Joel T. Olive.

The following committee amendments were read:

In line 8, page 1, after the word "the" at the end of said line, add the word "surveyed."

In line 9, page 1, after the word "public," add the word "nonmineral."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

HOMESTEAD SETTLEMENTS OF ROUND VALLEY INDIAN RESERVATION, CAL.

Mr. BELL of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15011) to open to homestead settlement and entry the relinquished and undisposed-of portions of the Round Valley Indian Reservation, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXAMINATION AS WITNESS OF HUSBAND OR WIFE OF DEFENDANT IN CRIMINAL CASES.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I again ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10142) authorizing the examination as a witness of husband or wife of a defendant in criminal cases, which was objected to a few moments ago by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will state that I am willing to withdraw my objection, provided a full statement of the purposes of the bill be made. My objection was based upon the ground that here was a bill relating to practice in Federal courts and not a bill of personal or private nature. If a full statement is made of the bill, I have no objection to it.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Mr. Speaker, I shall reserve the right to object until I hear the statement.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I will make a brief statement, with the permission of the Chair. In 1878 a statute was passed changing the common law and allowing a defendant in criminal cases to testify in his own behalf. In the Graves case (150 U. S.) it was held that this law did not authorize the defendant to call the husband or wife of the defendant, as the case might be, as witness for the defense. Under this system we have the strange condition that the person who is principally interested is now a competent witness, but the person who is indirectly interested is not a competent witness. In practically every State in this Union the husband or wife of the defendant is a competent witness in behalf of a defendant, and this bill simply provides that the husband or wife of a defendant in a criminal case may be called by the defendant, but not by the State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BREAZEALE. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to do so, but I have some very strong objections to the general policy of such a bill, and I must object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT EAGLE HARBOR, KEWEENAW POINT, MICHIGAN.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12044) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at or near Eagle Harbor, Keweenaw Point, Michigan, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish a life-saving station at or near Eagle Harbor, on Keweenaw Point, Michigan, in such locality as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

SEC. 2. That the character of the equipments and appliances of the station, the number of men constituting its crew, and the portion of the year during which it shall be maintained shall be determined by the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all of section 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chairs hears none. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read the bill as amended by the committee, in the nature of a substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the Government is hereby given to the Ox Bow Power Company, of South Dakota, its successors or assigns, to construct across the Missouri River, from lot 3, in section 26, township 14 north, range 3 west, of the Montana meridian, to the opposite bank of the same river, to be approved by the Secretary of War, a dam, causeway, and the appurtenances thereof, for water power and other purposes: Provided, That the plans for the construction of said dam and appurtenant works shall be submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before the commencement of construction, and when so approved no change shall be made in said plans without the prior approval of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the said company shall construct and maintain, in connection with said dam, a suitable boom and log sluice; that suitable fishways, to be approved by the United States Fish Commissioner, shall be constructed and maintained at said dam by said corporation, its successors or assigns; and shall obtain and convey to the United States, whenever requested to do so by the Secretary of War, clear title to such land as in his judgment may be required for constructions and approaches to said dam for transferring boats and freight around the same, and shall grant to the United States a free use of water power for operating such construction work; and to insure compliance with these conditions the said company shall execute and deliver to the Secretary of War a proper bond in such amount as may be fixed by him: And provided further, That the said company shall be liable for any damage to private property resulting from the construction and operation of said dam and appurtenant works, either by overflow or otherwise, and proceedings to recover compensation for such damage may be instituted either in the State or Federal courts.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the structures herein authorized shall be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The question was taken; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. BENNY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13472) to bridge the Newark Bay, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read, and also send with it certain amendments proposed by my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], to which I have agreed as a condition precedent for his withdrawal of opposition to the present consideration of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as amended by the committee, in the nature of a substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the boards of chosen freeholders of the counties of Hudson and Union, in the State of New Jersey, or the legally constituted authorities of the city of Bayonne and the city of Elizabeth, as has been or may be determined by the legislature of the State of New Jersey, and when authorized by said legislature and subject to any limitations or conditions imposed by said legislature, shall be, and they are hereby, authorized to locate, build, maintain, equip, and operate a bridge across Newark Bay, in the State of New Jersey, between the city of Elizabeth, in the county of Union, and the city of Bayonne, in the county of Hudson, in such manner and position that the portion of the bridge herein authorized shall, between the pierhead lines established or to be established by the Secretary of War, be distant at least 2,000 feet from any other bridge: Provided, That the bridge herein authorized shall be built for a distance of at least 3,000 feet over the deep-water portion of Newark Bay, to be designated by the Secretary of War, upon permanent stone piers to be placed at least 150 feet apart, which piers shall be in line with the current and except at the draw shall not be more than 10 feet wide at right angles with the current, and said bridge shall contain a draw or draws with two openings of at least 100 feet each in the clear, said draw or draws to be constructed at right angles to the channel in said bay, and said bridge shall be located and built in such manner and under such regulations for the security of navigation as the Secretary of War may prescribe; and to secure that object the parties proposing to build said bridge shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the bridge and a map of the location, and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built; and should any change be made in the plans of said bridge during the progress of its construction such changes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War: Provided also, That the draw or draws of said bridge shall be promptly opened, upon reasonable signal, for the passage of vessels and boats; and the owners of said bridge shall maintain thereon, from sunset to sunrise, such lights and other signals as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

SEC. 2. That if at any time hereafter the interests of navigation shall require that the said bridge be lengthened or raised or the clear width of the openings of the draw, or draws, in said bridge be increased, or the nature or method of operating said draw, or draws, be changed, the Secretary of War after hearing may order such increase of length or height or such other changes as he finds necessary, which shall be made by the owners of said bridge at their expense: Provided, That no greater headroom over the waters of said bay shall be required in said bridge or width of openings (measured at right angles to the current) at the draw, or draws, than is required in any other bridge crossing Newark Bay.

SEC. 3. That the said bridge shall be a public highway and no railroad shall be laid thereon except passenger street railroads constructed and operated so as not to interfere with ordinary road travel under regulations established by the Secretary of War. All rates of toll charged upon said bridge shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and after twenty years from the approval of this act no tolls for ordinary road travel shall be charged.

SEC. 4. That all street railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of cars over same and over the approaches thereto upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use, and in case the owners of said bridge and any street railroad company desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sums to be paid or the conditions to be observed, all matters at issue shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to telegraph and telephone companies: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the said counties of Union and Hudson from lawfully building, maintaining, and operating a street passenger railway on said bridge, under regulations approved by the Secretary of War, to the exclusion of all other street railways.

SEC. 5. That the bridge constructed, maintained, and operated under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transportation over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for such transportation over the railroad and public highways leading to said bridge, and the United States shall have the right of way for a postal telegraph across said bridge.

SEC. 6. If the persons authorized by said legislature to build said bridge shall make proper agreement therefor with the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey for the rebuilding of their railroad bridge in such manner as to fulfill the conditions of this act and to afford the highway facilities herein provided for, either above, below, or alongside of said Central Railroad, then, upon the filing of a copy of such agreement with the Secretary of War, the construction of such highway on said bridge of said railroad company is authorized hereby instead of on a separate bridge, the construction and operation whereof shall be subject to the conditions herein provided for such separate bridge, and in such case no separate bridge shall be constructed.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the approval of this act.

SEC. 8. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The following amendments proposed by Mr. BENNY were read:

1. Amend section 1, page 3, lines 10 to 14, by striking out the words "or the legally constituted authorities of the city of Bayonne and the city of Elizabeth, as has been or may be determined by the legislature of the State of New Jersey, and when authorized by said legislature," and insert in lieu thereof the words "when authorized by the legislature of said State."

2. In section 1, page 3, lines 24 and 25, and page 4, line 1, strike out the words "a distance of at least 3,000 feet over the deep-water portion of Newark Bay, to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "such distance over Newark Bay as will."

3. On page 4, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "at least 100 feet each in the clear" and insert in lieu thereof the words "such width in the clear as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

4. In section 2, page 5, lines 10, 11, and 12, strike out the words "or width of openings (measured at right angles to the current) at the draw or draws than is," and insert in lieu thereof the words "than is or shall be."

5. In section 4, page 6, line 9, after the word "Hudson," insert the words "themselves without assignment or permit to others by lease, sale, or otherwise."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I shall make no objection if the amendments just read be adopted.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BENNY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REISSUE OF A LOST CHECK.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2034) directing the issue of a duplicate of a lost check, drawn by Arthur J. Pritchard, pay director of the United States Navy, in favor of the Davis Coal and Coke Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears that Arthur J. Pritchard, pay director of the United States Navy, did, on the 20th day of October, 1902, issue a check, No. 3341, upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at Baltimore, Md., in favor of the Davis Coal and Coke Company, of West Virginia, for the sum of $2,725.79, in payment for coal delivered to the bureaus of yards and docks and construction and repair, United States Navy-Yard, at Brooklyn, N. Y.; and

Whereas the said check was duly received at the offices of the said Davis Coal and Coke Company, No. 1 Broadway, New York, on October 27, 1902, and the same was forwarded immediately upon receipt to Arthur Lee, treasurer of the said Davis Coal and Coke Company, at Elkins, W. Va.; and

Whereas the said Arthur Lee, treasurer of the said Davis Coal and Coke Company, does not acknowledge the receipt of said check at the office of the said company at Elkins, W. Va., and which said check is alleged to have been lost in transmission through the United States mails, and the said check not having been presented to the said assistant treasurer of the United States at Baltimore, Md., for payment; and

Whereas the provisions of the act of February 16, 1885, amending section 3646, Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing United States disbursing officers and agents to issue duplicates of lost checks, apply only to checks drawn for $2,500 or less: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That said Arthur J. Pritchard, pay director of the United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, instructed to issue a duplicate of said original check to the Davis Coal and Coke Company, or, in case said Pritchard shall cease to be in the service of the United States, then the amount shall be paid under the provisions of section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and the regulations issued in pursuance thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAYTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MATERIALS AND LABOR ON PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13626) to amend an act approved August 13, 1894, entitled "An act for the protection of persons furnishing materials and labor for the construction of public works."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the protection of persons furnishing materials and labor for the construction of public works," approved August 13, 1894, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"That hereafter any person or persons entering into a formal contract with the United States for the construction of any public building, or the prosecution and completion of any public work, or for repairs upon any public building or public work, shall be required, before commencing such work, to execute the usual penal bond, with good and sufficient sureties, with the additional obligation that such contractor or contractors shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him or them with labor and materials in the prosecution of the work provided for in such contract; and any person, company, or corporation who has furnished labor or materials used in the construction or repair of any public building or public work, and payment for which has not been made, shall have the right to intervene and be made a party to any action instituted by the United States on the bond of the contractor, and to have their rights and claims adjudicated in such action and judgment rendered thereon, subject, however, to the priority of the claim and judgment of the United States.

"If the full amount of the liability of the surety on said bond is insufficient to pay the full amount of said claims and demands, then, after paying the full amount due the United States, the remainder shall be distributed pro rata among said interveners. If no suit should be brought by the United States, then the person or persons supplying the contractor with labor and materials shall, upon application therefor, and furnishing affidavit to the Department under the direction of which said work has been prosecuted that labor or materials for the prosecution of such work has been supplied by him or them, and payment for which has not been made, be furnished with a certified copy of said contract and bond, upon which he or they shall have a right of action, and shall be, and are hereby, authorized to bring suit in the name of the United States in the circuit court of the United States in the district in which said contract was to be performed and executed, irrespective of the amount in controversy in such suit, and not elsewhere, for his or their use and benefit, against said contractor and his sureties, and to prosecute the same to final judgment and execution: Provided, That where suit is instituted by any of such creditors on the bond of the contractor it shall not be commenced until after the complete performance of said contract and final settlement thereof, and shall be commenced within one year after the performance and final settlement of said contract, and not later: And provided further, That where suit is so instituted by a creditor or by creditors, only one action shall be brought, and any creditor may file his claim in such action and be made party thereto within one year from the completion of the work under said contract, and not later.

"If the recovery on the bond should be inadequate to pay the amounts found due to all of said creditors, judgment shall be given to each creditor pro rata of the amount of the recovery. The surety on said bond may pay into court, for distribution among said claimants and creditors, the full amount of the sureties' liability, to wit, the penalty named in the bond, less any amount which said surety may have had to pay to the United States by reason of the execution of said bond, and upon so doing the surety will be relieved from further liability."

The following amendments, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, were read:

After the words "United States," in line 16 of the bill, insert the words "within six months from the completion and final settlement of said contract."

And at the end of line 25, page 3, after the word "liability," add the following:

"Provided further, That in all suits instituted under the provisions of this act such personal notice of the pendency of such suits informing them of their right to intervene as the court may order shall be given to all known creditors, and in addition thereto notice of publication in some newspaper of general circulation, published in the State or town where the contract is being performed, for at least three successive weeks, the last publication to be at least three months before the time limited therefor."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. Just one question: As I caught the reading of the bill, it provides that suit shall not be brought in any court except a court of the United States. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. I believe that is the provision.

Mr. LACEY. That changes existing law as to the right of the creditor.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Under the existing law a suit upon a bond given in a case of this kind can not be brought in any court except a court of the United States. This provides that such a suit may be brought in the United States circuit court.

Mr. LACEY. I have in mind a case where there has been a default in payment of the amount due upon a contract on a public building. This case has arisen in Iowa. All the bondsmen live in Chicago. Where would that suit have to be brought under this bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. In a United States court.

Mr. LACEY. Could it be brought in the district in Iowa against the parties in Chicago?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. As I understand, under this bill, the suit must be brought in the district where the work is being done.

Mr. PERKINS. Reserving the right to object, allow me to ask, where does this bill come from?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. It is a Treasury Department bill. It was prepared by the Attorney-General, at the request of the Treasury Department, to meet existing conditions, as I am advised.

Mr. PERKINS. Has it ever been submitted to the Attorney-General's office?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understand it was prepared by the Attorney-General.

Mr. PERKINS. Was it prepared in the Attorney-General's office or prepared by the Solicitor of the Treasury?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS], and, as I understand, the bill was actually prepared by the Attorney-General, embodying recommendations of the Treasury Department.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And prepared by the Attorney-General?

Mr. PALMER. A very good lawyer appeared before the committee and explained the case. He satisfied the committee that the bill is all right and is needed to protect the interests of the United States under conditions that practically exist. I do not remember the name of the gentleman who appeared before our committee, but certainly he was a good lawyer and knew what he was talking about.

Mr. SHERLEY. Allow me to ask whether the bill contains any provision looking to the protection of the subcontractor?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Oh, yes. It gives to the Government a superiority of lien, and then further provides that the Government may bring suit on the bond to recover its claim, and in that suit the subcontractors may intervene.

If the Government should fail to bring suit, any contractor may bring suit; and in that suit all subcontractors must be notified, and in the suit may have all their rights adjudicated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SMELTER ON COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11586) to permit the construction of a smelter on the Colville Indian Reservation, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman will withhold his objection until I can explain—the bill is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMERICAN CITIZENS ABROAD.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House resolution No. 113 as amended.

The resolution as amended was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to renew negotiations with the governments of countries where discrimination is made between American citizens on the ground of religious faith or belief to secure by treaty or otherwise uniformity of treatment and protection to American citizens holding passports duly issued by the authorities of the United States, in order that all American citizens shall have equal freedom of travel and sojourn in those countries, without regard to race, creed, or religious faith.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

GRANT OF CERTAIN LANDS TO OHIO.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11444) to grant certain lands to the State of Ohio.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the State of Ohio in the years 1828 to 1844, inclusive, constructed the Miami and Erie Canal; and

Whereas the State of Ohio, for the purpose of supplying the said canal with water, built and constructed certain artificial lakes or reservoirs known as the Mercer County Reservoir, in Mercer and Auglaize counties, and the Loramie Reservoir, in Auglaize and Shelby counties, the former being completed and flooded with water about the year 1842, and the latter about the year 1844; and

Whereas the said State of Ohio in the building, constructing, and flooding of said reservoirs reserved and appropriated, along with other lands, the following-described lands in township 6 south, range 3 east, in Mercer County, Ohio, to wit: The southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 2, township 6 south, range 3 east, 40 acres; the south half of the southwest quarter of section 3, township 6 south, range 3 east, 80 acres; the east half of the northeast quarter of section 8, township 6 south, range 3 east, 80 acres; the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 8, township 6 south, range 3 east, 40 acres; the northwest quarter of section 8, township 6 south, range 3 east, 160 acres; the southwest quarter of section 8, township 6 south, range 3 east, 160 acres; the northeast quarter of section 9, township 6 south, range 3 east, 160 acres; the southeast quarter of section 9, township 6 south, range 3 east, 160 acres; the northwest quarter of section 9, township 6 south, range 3 east, 160 acres; the east half of the southwest quarter of section 9, township 6 south, range 3 east, 80 acres; the southwest quarter of section 10, township 6 south, range 3 east, 160 acres; the northeast quarter of section 11, township 6 south, range 3 east, 160 acres; the southeast quarter of section 11, township 6 south, range 3 east, 160 acres; the east half of the southwest quarter of section 11, township 6 south, range 3 east, 80 acres; the northwest quarter of section 17, township 6, south, range 3 east, 160 acres; the east half of the southwest quarter of section 17, township 6 south, range 3 east, 80 acres; also the whole of section 7, township 6 south, range 4 east, in Auglaize County, Ohio, 694 acres; also the north half of the southwest quarter of section 27, township 7 south, range 5 east, in Shelby County, Ohio, 80 acres; and containing in all 2,694 acres, more or less; and

Whereas the said reservoirs in said Mercer, Auglaize, and Shelby counties, in said State, between the years 1842 and 1844, became and were a part of the public works of the State of Ohio, and were necessary for the maintenance and operation of the said Miami and Erie Canal; and

Whereas the State of Ohio has, ever since said years 1842 and 1844, maintained said reservoirs as feeders for the said Miami and Erie Canal, and are a part of the public works of the State of Ohio, and now maintains and uses said reservoirs as feeders for said canal and as a part of the public works of the said State; and

Whereas the State of Ohio has flooded the lands above described and used the same as a part of the public works of the State since the years 1842 and 1844; and

Whereas it is still necessary for the State of Ohio to maintain said reservoirs as a part of the public works of the State and to use and flood the lands above described; and

Whereas it has recently come to the knowledge of the authorities of the State of Ohio that the title to the land above described is in the United States and not in the said State of Ohio: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That all the land above described is granted unto the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KYLE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WESTERN ALASKA CONSTRUCTION COMPANY.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5088) to aid the Western Alaska Construction Company.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman if he proposes to allow some time for the discussion of the matter? I desire to be recognized in opposition to the bill for at least a brief time; and unless we can make that arrangement I shall have to interpose an objection.

Mr. BRICK. Does the gentleman from Indiana object?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; I say if the gentleman will make an arrangement——

The SPEAKER. The bill will have to be laid aside for the present. The Senate bill is not at the Clerk's desk.

ROAD DISTRICTS IN ALASKA.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13014) to authorize the appointment of road overseers and to create road districts in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be the duty of the commissioner in each precinct in the district of Alaska, on the first Monday in the month of April in each year, to appoint a road overseer for the precinct in which he resides, and create a road district in the inhabited part of said precinct, which said district shall not include incorporated cities and towns.

To fill all vacancies in the office of road overseer in his precinct.

To cause a record to be made defining the boundaries of said road district

TERM OF OFFICE AND QUALIFICATION OF ROAD OVERSEERS.

All road overseers shall hold office for one year and until their successors are appointed and qualified.

Every person appointed to the office of road overseer of any road district shall reside in the road district to which he has been appointed, and shall, within thirty days after he shall have been notified of his appointment, take and subscribe to an oath of office obligating himself to the faithful performance of the duties of his office, and shall forthwith cause such oath to be filed in the office of the commissioner of his precinct, and in case any such road overseer shall become nonresident of his road district, his office shall at once become vacant.

Each road overseer shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, execute a bond to the United States in a sum not less than double the amount of money which will probably come into his hands at any time during his term of office, with two or more sureties, the amount and sufficiency of the bond to be approved by the commissioner of the precinct, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office, which bond shall be by him forthwith filed in the office of the commissioner and ex officio recorder. The approval of such bond shall be indorsed thereon by the commissioner.

DUTIES OF ROAD OVERSEER.

The duties of road overseer shall be such as may be prescribed by law.

Each road overseer shall keep an accurate account of all money received by virtue of his office and the manner in which the same has been disbursed, and to whom, and shall, on the last Saturday of March in each year, exhibit such account, together with his vouchers, to the commissioner for adjustment and settlement. Such account shall be in writing, verified by affidavit of the overseer that the same is in all respects a full and true account of all money received by him during the full term for which he should make settlement and the amounts expended and the manner in which they were expended.

If any person appointed to the office of road overseer, unless unable from disease or other infirmity to discharge the duties of such office, shall refuse or neglect to serve therein, he shall be liable to a fine of $25; but no person so appointed who shall have served for a term next preceding such appointment shall be liable to such fine for refusing to serve if he shall have given notice in writing of refusal to the commissioner within twenty days after having been notified of his appointment.

Every road overseer who shall, after the expiration of his term of office, neglect or refuse to deliver on demand to his successor in office, after such successor shall have been duly qualified according to law, all moneys, records, books, papers, or other property appertaining to such office shall be liable to a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars.

Road overseers of the different precincts are authorized, and it is made their duty, to warn out all male persons between 18 and 50 years of age who have resided thirty days in the district of Alaska, who are capable of performing labor on roads or trails, and who are not a precinct charge, to perform two days' work of eight hours each in constructing, locating, or repairing public roads or trails, under the direction of the road overseer within whose precinct they may respectively reside, or furnish a substitute to do the same, or pay the sum of $4 per day for two days' labor, and said road overseer shall receipt for the same and shall expend it in repairs on the public roads and trails within his precinct; and any moneys so received and not expended shall be paid over to his successor in office, who shall expend the same as above provided.

The overseer of roads and trails in each precinct shall give notice to persons residing in his precinct liable to or charged with a road or trail tax of the time and place and the kind of work expected to be performed on the road or trail, and may direct what implements such persons shall bring with which to perform such work.

Whenever it shall happen, in consequence of sickness or absence from home, or any other cause, that the two days' work aforesaid shall not be performed within the time specified in this act, the overseer shall be authorized to require the performance of such work at any time prior to the 1st day of October then next ensuing; and in case any person shall neglect or refuse to do the two days' work, or furnish a substitute, or pay in money the price of two days' labor, as provided in this act, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined in the sum of $10 for each day refusing so to work upon conviction before any justice of the peace of the precinct.

If any person shall appear at the proper time and place as directed by the overseer and neglect or refuse to do a reasonable day's work according to his ability, he shall be liable the same as if he had neglected or refused to appear, or furnish a substitute, or pay the sum of money as provided herein.

Under the direction of the overseer, and at his discretion, the above road tax may be performed by an able-bodied man, and a two-horse team with wagon, or a dog team consisting of not less than five dogs and a sleigh, or a reindeer team of not less than two reindeer and sleigh or cart.

It shall be the duty of each road overseer to receipt to each person who performs labor on the public roads and trails of his precinct under the provisions of this act for the amount of labor so performed, and no person shall be compelled to pay road tax except in one precinct in the district of Alaska during one calendar year.

Each road overseer shall, on or before the 1st day of April in each year, report to the commissioner of the precinct the names of all persons subject to the two days' road tax for the preceding year, the names of those who have worked out said tax, the names of those who have paid the said tax in money, and the names of those delinquent, and also all moneys received by him from all sources, and how expended, and the account of said road overseer of the work performed by himself, which report shall be approved by said commissioner before any final settlement shall be made with such road overseer.

Each and every road overseer who shall neglect or refuse to perform the several duties enjoined upon him by this act, or who shall, under any pretense whatsoever, give or sign a receipt or certificate for labor performed or money paid, unless the labor shall have been performed or money paid prior to the signing or giving of such receipts or certificates, shall forfeit for every such offense not less than five nor more than fifty dollars, to be recovered by an action before any justice of the peace within the precinct where such overseer may reside, and it is hereby made the duty of every United States attorney or assistant to prosecute all offenses against the provisions of this act not otherwise provided for.

PER DIEM.

Road overseers shall be allowed $4 per day for all services required by this act and actually performed in their respective precincts, to be retained out of money paid said road overseers from persons paying money or fines in lieu of two days' labor, upon the certified statement of the overseers, approved by the commissioner of the precinct: Provided, That no overseer shall receive pay for more than ten days in any one year, and not until he has made the return as provided in the preceding section, in duplicate, one copy to be retained by the commissioner and one copy filed with the clerk of the district court in the division in which the said precinct is situated.

Any oath required to be taken by said overseer, acknowledgment of bond, or the filing or recording of any paper or plat authorized by this act shall be free of cost to said overseer.

Upon application of road overseers it shall be the duty of the clerk of the district court to furnish copies of this act and blank forms of notices warning persons to perform road work, receipts for road work, bond, and oath, and for overseer's report to commissioner, the expense of which shall be paid out of the fund for paying the incidental expenses of the court, and raised from local licenses.

The Attorney-General of the United States is hereby directed to furnish clerks of the district court in the different judicial divisions of Alaska a sufficient number of copies of this act and other road and trail laws that may now be upon the statutes relating to roads and trails in the district of Alaska for use of road overseers in each judicial division.

During the reading,

The SPEAKER said: There are three more pages of this bill. Is there objection to its consideration?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Indiana what salaries to these commissioners are carried in this bill?

Mr. BRICK. The commissioners are to get no salaries. There is no appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States in this bill. It is all carried on within the Territory of Alaska at their own expense.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. What pay do the commissioners get?

Mr. BRICK. They work without pay.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Without pay either from the Territory or the United States?

Mr. BRICK. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

On page 4, line 10, after the word "in," insert the word "locating."

In line 11 strike out "locating."

In line 16, between the words "in" and "repairs," insert the words "location, construction, or."

On page 5, line 20, between the words "by" and "an," insert "one day's work together with."

In line 21 strike out "and."

On page 8, line 2, strike out the following: "and raised from local licenses."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRICK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. There is a short bill in regard to which action was not taken.

Mr. SULZER. I reserve the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5088) to aid the Western Alaskan Construction Company.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be considered as read a third time and passed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the bill was considered a few minutes ago. Consent was not given to consideration, but we were trying to make an arrangement with the gentleman for a division of time for its discussion. I suggested that I would reserve the right to object and would interpose an objection unless that arrangement could be made.

Mr. BRICK. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes' debate on the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The bill has not gone through the usual process. The Senate bill has not been read. How much time did the gentleman say he would give me?

Mr. BRICK. Two minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think the bill has not been reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and if it takes any considerable time——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I only want ten minutes.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the regular order.

DEVELOPMENT OF AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

House resolution No. 282.

Resolved, That at any time during the remainder of this session the bill (H. R. 7056) creating a commission to consider and recommend legislation for the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes, may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, House bill 7056 was reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Its title is "A bill creating a commission to consider and recommend legislation for the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes." The bill is very short. It provides for the appointment of a commission, consisting of five members of the Senate and five Members of the House of Representatives, to investigate and report to Congress on the first day of its next session what legislation is desirable for the development of the American merchant marine and American commerce.

Mr. GILBERT. Is there anything said about the political affiliation of the commission?

Mr. DALZELL. Two members of the Senate and two Members of the House of Representatives shall be members of the minority party. That is the whole scope of the bill. It simply appoints a commission to investigate and report.

Now, the purpose of this rule is to do two things. First, to make this bill in order for consideration; and, second, to make it in order for consideration in the House instead of in Committee of the Whole. That is the whole purpose of the rule. I do not know whether there is any gentleman who wants time on the other side or not.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it would be agreeable to this side of the House, instead of taking up the time on the rule, to add that to the time for general discussion.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman understands there is no limit of debate in the rule.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can state to the gentleman from Kentucky that a full agreement has been made with the minority members of the committee with which they are satisfied in regard to the limit of debate.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. All right.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAKER. I understand under the rules of the House when the previous question is ordered forty minutes is set apart for debate.

The SPEAKER. There has been debate, however, before the previous question was moved, and there is no debate afterwards.

Mr. BAKER. Well, I am opposed to this rule, whether anyone else is or not.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, let us have the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DE ARMOND and Mr. BAKER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Accordingly the House divided; and there were—ayes 145, noes 101.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 108, answered "present" 15, not voting 120, as follows:

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill covered by the rule which has just been passed and ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be called "The Merchant Marine Commission," to be composed as follows: The Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives, three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer thereof, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker: Provided, That at least two of the said Members of the Senate and two of the said Members of the House of Representatives shall be members of the minority party.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of this commission to investigate and to report to the Congress at its next session what legislation is desirable for the development of the American merchant marine and American commerce, and incidentally for a national ocean mail service of adequate auxiliary naval cruisers and naval reserves.

SEC. 3. That the commission shall give reasonable time for hearings, if deemed necessary, and if necessary it may appoint a subcommission or subcommissions of its own members to make investigation in any part of the United States, and it shall be allowed actual necessary expenses for the same. It shall have the authority to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and affirmations. All necessary expenses, including clerks, stenographers, messengers, rent for place of meeting, and printing and stationery, shall be paid from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; however, not to exceed $50,000 for expenditures under this section.

SEC. 4. That any vacancies occurring in the commission by reason of death, disability, or from any other cause, shall be filled by appointment by the officer and in the same manner as was the member whose retirement from the commission creates the vacancy.

The amendments were read, as follows:

On page 1, beginning with line 5, strike out all of lines 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, and the word "Speaker," in line 1, page 2, and insert the following:

"Five members of the Senate of the United States and five Members of the House of Representatives of the United States, to be appointed by the presiding officer of each House of Congress, respectively: Provided."

In line 9, page 2, strike out the word "at" and insert "on the first day of."

In lines 12 and 13, page 2, strike out "and incidentally for a national ocean mail service of adequate auxiliary naval cruisers and naval reserves."

In line 24, page 2, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "twenty."

In line 1, page 3, after the word "section," insert "to be paid upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the commission."

So that the bill as amended will read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be called "The Merchant Marine Commission," to be composed as follows: Five members of the Senate of the United States and five Members of the House of Representatives of the United States, to be appointed by the presiding officer of each House of Congress, respectively: Provided, That at least two of the said members of the Senate and two of the said Members of the House of Representatives shall be members of the minority party.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of this commission to investigate and to report to the Congress on the first day of its next session what legislation is desirable for the development of the American merchant marine and American commerce.

SEC. 3. That the commission shall give reasonable time for hearings, if deemed necessary, and if necessary it may appoint a subcommission or subcommissions of its own members to make investigations in any part of the United States, and it shall be allowed actual necessary expenses for the same. It shall have the authority to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and affirmations. All necessary expenses, including clerks, stenographers, messengers, rent for place of meeting, and printing and stationery, shall be paid from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; however, not to exceed $20,000 for expenditures under this section, to be paid upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the commission.

SEC. 4. That any vacancies occurring in the commission, by reason of death, disability, or from any other cause, shall be filled by appointment by the officer and in the same manner as was the member whose retirement from the commission creates the vacancy.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, it is not the purpose to proceed further with the bill at this time, and I therefore withdraw the bill under the order of the House and reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] reserves the balance of his time.

GOVERNMENT OF CANAL ZONE AT PANAMA, ETC.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5342) to provide for the temporary government of the canal zone at Panama, the protection of the canal works, and for other purposes, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa how much time for debate he expects to allow on this matter and how much consideration?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think probably an hour of debate would be sufficient. It is reported with a unanimous report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. An hour on a side?

Mr. HEPBURN. Half an hour on a side.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Has it been considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And favorably reported?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the reading of the Senate bill, which the committee propose to strike out, be dispensed with and that the substitute proposed by the committee be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That until the expiration of the Fifty-eighth Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the territory acquired by the United States from the Republic of Panama by the terms of the treaty ratified on the 26th day of February, 1904, be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the said territory, or granted by the terms of said treaty to the United States, shall be vested in such person or persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct for the government of said territory and maintaining and protecting the inhabitants thereof in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, under the terms of the act of Congress authorizing the President to acquire from the Republic of Colombia a strip of land in perpetuity for the construction of a canal to unite the two oceans, and also authorizing the President to acquire from the Panama Canal Company certain rights, concessions, and property, the President has negotiated a treaty with the new Republic of Panama, and the first power conferred upon the President has been exercised and its purpose accomplished. The strip has been gotten away from Colombia and has come to us. We have acquired it; there is no doubt about that.

The property of the canal company has been negotiated for, and at some time in the not distant future it is expected that we shall come into possession of that. A commission has been appointed, in accordance with the terms of the act of Congress, to proceed with the construction of the canal. That commission is studying conditions in Panama and ascertaining just what those conditions are and just what is to be done.

We have had considerable information from previous investigation and have examined the members of the present and preceding commissions upon the subject of the necessity for immediate legislation.

It will be borne in mind, Mr. Speaker, that our primary and main object in that country is to construct a canal. It was not the primary idea of any of the promoters of the grandest scheme of all the ages to go down there to exploit on the Isthmus our notions of government, practical or theoretical, but to proceed with the construction of a canal.

It is of course expected that, as the work proceeds, the formative period being over, the atmosphere being cleared, our rights and possessions all being clearly ascertained, the necessities of all the problems understood, population pouring into the zone, it will be necessary to legislate specifically as to the government of the people there. But at present we do not know enough about what will be there nor what the necessities will be. There is no population there except such as is incident to the canal project itself—from 2,000 to 5,000.

For some time there will be only those employed by the canal company or by the United States Government, or such as are there trading and prospecting. In view of all these facts, it is not deemed essential at this time to take up the subject of civil government of that zone.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it is believed that when Congress once takes up this subject and legislates upon it, it will part with it forever, practically.

Theoretically we could take up the legislation and amend or repeal it; but when Congress has acted, when the commissioners have gone to work, when the system has been adopted and put into operation, it will be difficult to induce Congress to take up the subject again for the purpose of making changes, and we shall be prone to say, "Let well enough alone; we will stand pat on what has been done."

So we think, under all the circumstances, it is better that we reenact the legislation of 1803—the magnificent precedent set by the immortal Jefferson for the temporary government of Louisiana—until Congress may have time to take its bearings, to understand the situation, reflect upon and study the conditions and necessities, and legislate wisely and knowingly.

The committee therefore has unanimously agreed that for all purposes from now until the next session of Congress the bill which we have reported as a substitute for the Senate bill will be all sufficient to authorize the President, through such persons as he may choose, by whatever means he shall direct, to accept the property mentioned in the authorizing act of Congress heretofore passed, conveyed by the treaty with Panama and purchased from the Panama Company, and proceed to ascertain conditions and do the initial work toward the construction of the canal.

It is not believed that work of much consequence will be done within a year. It is not believed there will be any necessity for this legislation within a year.

It is not necessary, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that we should now in the hurry and confusion of an adjournment, enact hastily a system of legislation which we shall be loath to take up and amend in the future, even if such legislation shall have proved itself ill advised and improper. It would be better to await the next session of Congress and then knowingly do what is necessary. [Applause.]

I yield back to the gentleman the time at my command.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] five minutes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] has stated so clearly and so thoroughly the reasons why the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported the amendment to the Senate bill that it needs no further discussion by me. The committee had hearings on this general subject for several days. They received the views of different members of the Panama Canal Commission and other gentlemen interested and experienced in that great work.

They had the views of Secretary Taft, and had before them for consideration several bills embodying many wise provisions for the government of that canal strip. But when it came to enact legislation into concrete form and make it applicable to present conditions we realized the situation as forcibly and clearly outlined by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]; that the United States Government had not really begun that work; that there was on the ground a small and fluctuating population with whose customs and necessities we were not sufficiently acquainted for purposes of legislation, and that conditions will change so rapidly within the next year or two that we are now not informed as to what would be necessary when the actual stress of government will come; that we needed to retain in our own hands and under our own control the government of that great project, and we could best do that important thing by having as little government as possible during the next few months.

We realized, too, that some act was necessary now; that the old canal act originally authorizing the construction of the Panama Canal did not seem quite to give authority for the present control of that strip, and since something was necessary to be done, we thought that the least that could be done would be the better for the present. So we went back to the old original act of President Jefferson, thinking that if the great territory of the Louisiana purchase was wisely and well governed under that act for a time, it certainly could be trusted to control the little Panama strip until we meet next December. We carefully examined the several sections of the several bills before us relating to this general subject and found that every essential power necessary for safe temporary government was contained in this simple paragraph. So the committee unanimously recommended the passage of the Senate bill as amended by the provisions of the old Jefferson Act.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as reported by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, is entitled to and receives my earnest and cordial support for more reasons than one. The first one is, as will be discovered, that the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee struck out everything of the Senate bill except the enacting clause.

I like that, Mr. Speaker, for the reason that we have been complaining, and justly I think, about the encroachments of the Senate upon the privileges and prerogatives of the House, and I am glad to say that on a suitable and proper opportunity the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee had the courage in the Fifty-eighth Congress to strike out all after the "enacting clause" of a Senate bill and to substitute therefor a different, a better, and a wiser bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the Senate presented to us for consideration a bill that involved a great deal of intricacy, complicated governmental authority, and suggested various bureaus, departments, and other powers and authorities, all concentrated under the control of the Commissioners of the Panama Canal, giving them, as I think, a great deal more power over the liberties and rights of the people of that zone than Congress ought to allow them. The people that occupy that zone are hetrogeneous, consisting of all nationalities. It is the part of wisdom as well as of justice to take time to consider the character of government we propose to establish. Again, Mr. Speaker, I am always ready to go back and adopt and reaffirm the policy established by our forefathers, by the great men of the Republic, in matters of the proper government of territories, or, as they are now called, "possessions," connected with the United States.

We have before us the example of the successful administration and the marvelous growth and development of the Louisiana purchase by Mr. Jefferson in 1803. The bill that the committee reports is word for word, without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t," that which Mr. Jefferson suggested and approved for the government of the territory of Louisiana while it was going through the primal state of organization. If the Panama zone—that we propose to substantially take charge of—can be brought to a result as successful as was the Louisiana purchase by Mr. Jefferson, then the Fifty-eighth Congress will receive credit and fame for its wise action in the regulation of the Panama zone—an honor and credit to our Republic. This bill will be found in the exact words of the second section of the act of Congress approved October 31, 1803, during the session of the Eighth Congress.

All the contention and struggle that we had in this House and elsewhere about the Panama Canal and the ratification of the treaty with the Republic of Panama is now a thing of the past, and the question with us to-day is to adopt such a policy and such laws as will best govern and control the people of that zone. What better can we do than to leave it in the hands of the President of the United States, until the expiration of this Congress, to designate the persons to continue to exercise the authority now conferred on them by the existing government? We do not know what the laws are governing those people sufficient to make changes or create new laws.

What we need is time to investigate, find out the nature, temperament, habits, and customs of that mixed population, and legislate in behalf of their real interests, and to promote their civilization. Again, Mr. Speaker, this bill places that responsibility, if you please, in the hands of the President of the United States. I am generally opposed to placing too much power in the hands of one man, but under the provisions of this bill the country can in part look to the President for proper and honest government. The result of it will be that the persons clothed with authority in the Panama zone will discharge their duties and faithfully and honestly discharge the obligations of their very important trust.

Mr. GILBERT. Why not do the same thing with the Philippines?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Indeed, as suggested to me by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT], the same wise principle could be applied to the Philippine Islands with a great deal more success, I think, than has been achieved heretofore in that government.

Mr. Speaker, I think the solution of the proper and fair government in the Panama Canal zone is admirably reached in this bill. It has the sanction of the great apostle of Democracy, Thomas Jefferson, and for that reason, as well as others, I give my most cordial and hearty support to it. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, on account of the limited time given on the agriculture bill I did not then ask for time, as I had no desire to impede the progress of the appropriation bills. I will now avail myself of the opportunity and the latitude given Members in discussing the various bills and offer a few observations along the line of agriculture.

In the few years which I have had the honor of being a Member of this House I have enjoyed the good fortune of serving on the Committee on Agriculture. If not the greatest, it is certainly one of the greatest and most important committees of this House—not from a political standpoint, but that it concerns more people than any other committee. First, it directly affects 5,700,341 families engaged in agricultural pursuits; in general, all the people of the nation. Our interests are in common. What would our cities, towns, and villages be without the agricultural interests? What would our railroads be? Our farms certainly furnish the bulk of the freight traffic. What would our manufacturers be without them?

What would our export trade be without our farms and farmers? Sixty and ninety-eight one-hundredths per cent to 83½ per cent of our exports for the last one hundred and four years came from the farm. We exported 3,543,043,022 pounds of cotton last year, valued at $316,180,429, being nearly $1,000,000 per day. The first eight months of this fiscal year we exported 13,394,562 barrels of flour, valued at $53,037,418; 40,784,299 bushels of wheat, valued at $33,053,949; 172,064,186 pounds of bacon, valued at $16,914,013, and 135,513,538 pounds of ham, valued at $15,833,620. We exported in 1902, 234,772,515 bushels of wheat and 28,028,688 bushels of corn. Our industrious tillers of the soil furnished for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, for export—

Corn and corn meal	$84,593,415
Wheat and flour	166,231,033
Total breadstuffs	275,594,618
Cattle and beef products	81,792,239
Hogs and hog products	120,199,968
Tobacco and manufactures of tobacco	28,172,818
Cotton and manufactures of cotton	333,945,864
Total domestic agricultural products	943,811,029

Being nearly $3,000,000 for every working day in the year.

The balance of trade in our favor for the last fiscal year was $394,422,492. Without our domestic agricultural export trade the balance of trade would have been against us to the extent of $478,900,440, this amount being ten times as great as the gold coinage and sixteen times the silver coinage in 1902. Our domestic agricultural exports for the last fifty years were in the aggregate $23,957,997,735, being more than one-quarter the total wealth of the United States. What would our supply of money be without the income from the farms? It is contended that the large increase in our money circulation is due to the balance of trade in our favor.

It is clear that when a nation, as well as an individual, sells more than it buys, its wealth is increased. This balance of trade represents cash. Balance of trade is generally settled in cash. Of course it may be applied in various ways—for instance, in the payment of foreign debts or interest on debts. A large amount of this money goes to foreign countries in payment of ocean freight, but whether or not these balances are settled in gold or applied otherwise, it represents so much wealth; and if the balance of trade were not in our favor, we would, of course, have to meet these obligations, and instead of money coming in, money would constantly be going out, and thus drain our supply of gold.

But this discussion is leading me into politics. "It is another story," as Kipling says. It was not my intention to make a political speech at this time. Politics are not discussed nor do politics enter into consideration in dealing with matters which come before the Committee on Agriculture. The one object sought is to promote the best interests of this country, and politics are left to other committees and you who are experts along this line. Nor are we limited to any certain locality. We know of no North, South, East, or West. Our entire attention is given to a tract of land containing 3,025,600 square miles, bounded on the east by the Atlantic Ocean, on the west by the Pacific, on the north by the Great Lakes, and on the south by the Gulf, together with Alaska, Hawaii, and a few insular possessions recently added.

Any one part receives the same consideration as the other, regardless of political affiliations; and it is my purpose to give a brief outline of the work and the results accomplished by this great Department under the management of one of America's foremost, competent, conscientious, and practical agriculturists, one whose ability is recognized not only by those from whence he came, but all over this land—and I might add that his popularity has even swept beyond our border lines into various parts of the world—assisted by his able corps of scientists, recognized as the greatest scientists on earth. But I am not here to eulogize Secretary Wilson or any of these men. They have established reputations which speak for themselves, and nothing that I could say would extend their popularity, high standing, and reputations which they so justly deserve.

My efforts will be to disabuse the minds of the people who may entertain any idea that the agricultural interests of this country are insignificant and small as compared with other interests; also those who may entertain the idea that their interests have been overlooked by Congress. I will endeavor to show—and hope to prove it before I get through by census reports and other public documents—that the agricultural interests of this country are not only the greatest but the most important to the American people. It is not only the greatest and most important interest of this land, but those engaged in agriculture are the most happy, contented, patriotic, enlightened, law-abiding, and most prosperous people on God's footstool. And I hope also to be able to show that Congress has accomplished something in their interests, and that Members of Congress have performed functions other than sending out a few packages of those much-abused and ridiculed garden and flower seed—the seed that is designated as "the seed that never grows."

We appropriated $290,000 this year for the purchase and distribution of valuable seed. This is less than $800 for each Congressional district, or it is about $1 for every $2,500 of the total appropriation, or $1 for every $490 appropriated for pensions, or $1 for every $595 appropriated for the Post-Office Department, or $1 for every $270 for the Army, or $1 for every $280 for the Navy, or $1 for every $92 appropriated for rivers and harbors last Congress, or $1 for every $75 we appropriated for rural free-delivery service this Congress.

Whether or not this is a wise appropriation I do not now care to discuss, except to say that great care is exercised by the Department in securing the best seed, and so far as I know very few complaints are made as to the quality. It has been said that this money is being appropriated for political purposes. No Member has such gross misconception of the intelligence and susceptibility of his constituents as to entertain even a thought of gaining political prestige by sending any voter a package of seed. The money is appropriated, the seed purchased and apportioned among the Members, and under the law it is a Member's duty to distribute them in his district. To do anything less than that would be neglect of duty. So far as I am concerned they have been sent to such names as I have been able to procure, regardless of political affiliations.

We appropriate annually one and one-quarter millions for the Weather Bureau. Nobody questions the value of this service, which has been extended not only into every locality of this country, but across the ocean, giving valuable information not only to our people at home, but to the seafaring people, informing them in advance what kind of weather they will likely have in crossing the ocean, especially for the first few days. The forecasts are being wired to all parts of the country morning and evening. In many cases these forecasts are wired to the postmasters, and thus extended over the lines of the rural-delivery service.

We have in the Agricultural Department the only thoroughly organized meteorological bureau in the world. We are not only accomplishing great work in this Department, but the Department is furnishing the service of a number of scientists to lecture in colleges and universities. Up to seven years ago there was not a lecturer on meteorology anywhere in this country. To-day hundreds of students are being instructed along this line, and it is of great value. This bureau has recently succeeded in establishing wireless telegraphy service between San Francisco and Farallone Islands.

The Department has met with great success in hybridizing grains, grasses, and legumes in the various localities. The leguminous plants are of great importance, and under our system of agriculture we can not get along without them. In our State we keep up the soil by growing clover, and are now beginning to appreciate the great value of alfalfa, and great credit is due the Bureau of Plant Industry. In its investigations it has discovered a nitrogen-fixing bacteria (the method of artificially inoculating soil devoid of the proper organism), thus solving the bacteria-nitrogen problem; and the Department is distributing the bacteria to all parts of the United States, at a nominal cost to the Government, in small packages of absorbent which contain millions of the tubercle-forming organisms.

By reviving these dry germs in a pail of water a small package not larger than an yeast cake may be multiplied sufficiently to inoculate an acre of land, and the amount of material thus obtained is limited only by the quantity of water used in increasing the germs; and the bacteria may be introduced into the soil either by soaking the seed in the fluid, then drying the seed and sowing, by spraying or by mixing the culture with earth and then distributing the earth over the field. By so inoculating the soil wherever leguminous plants fail to produce these tubercles, and where the soil is so poor that the legumes will not grow or where the soil lacks the proper organism, the land, where the life has been taken out of it by the removal of crops and exhausted of nitrogen, is restored to a high state of production. This bacteria and nitrogen is substituted for nitrate of soda, one of the most expensive fertilizers in use.

The Bureau of Plant Industry is co-operative with more than forty State institutions. We are training young men. More than 500 are pursuing studies along special lines, under the direction of the Department, which might be properly styled a post-graduate institution for agricultural colleges. Our scientists are attaining such a high degree of learning that they are in demand in all parts of the world.

The Bureau of Animal Industry inspected during the year 1903 292,888 imported animals and 494,000 exported. It inspected and cleared 634 ships during the last year, inspecting about half a million carcasses microscopically, also inspecting 1,620,000 cattle going out of the Texas fever district. Under its supervision 66,000 cars were disinfected. For sheep scab, it inspected 16,500,000 sheep. It had dipped, under its supervision, 2,167,000 sheep. Out of this number 394,000 were dipped twice. It inspected 37,183,000 carcasses in the slaughterhouses at the time of slaughter, which required a close inspection of all carcasses, to ascertain whether they were healthy or not. As the result of that inspection 114,198 carcasses were condemned. More than 59,000,000 live animals were inspected in stock yards.

Much credit is due this Bureau for its efforts in stamping out the foot-and-mouth disease, contagious diseases of sheep, and cattle scab, as well as many other successful efforts along this line.

The Bureau of Soils has surveyed 133 areas, of an average size of 453 square miles, in forty-two States, 60,232 square miles, or 38,516,320 acres, by twenty soil-survey parties, at an average cost per mile of $3.10. Ten thousand samples of soil have been collected. I am pleased to say that counties in my district have been surveyed, and the reports and maps are looked forward to with much interest. I trust that other counties will be reached in the near future, as I know much good will come from these surveys. Through the comparison and examination of the texture and appearance of soils and climate, we discover and determine what to sow and grow to the best advantage.

Much credit is due this Bureau for the discovery and successful experiments carried on, demonstrating that the Sumatra tobacco can be grown under cover in Connecticut and other States, and the Cuba tobacco can be grown in Texas and other States in the open air profitably. I am reliably informed that the cost of growing Sumatra and Cuba tobacco under cover does not exceed $350 per acre for shade; the cloth is good for two years; posts and frame for ten years. The average cost per year of growing this tobacco, including cover, fertilizing ($50 per acre), seed, sheds, labor, and marketing, does not exceed $500 per acre, an acre producing 800 to 900 pounds, selling at $1 to $1.50 per pound.

In the Division of Publication year before last, 750 publications were edited, and last year 938 publications were issued, such as bulletins, horse book, soil publications, maps, etc., containing in all over 23,000 pages, furnishing a medium through which the people get the benefit of valuable information, and thus disseminating knowledge gathered by the Department of Agriculture, which expends for this purpose over $400,000 per annum outside of the $300,000 for the yearbook under the order of Congress.

Much has been accomplished in the Bureau of Forestry, and great credit is due it for the extensive and valuable work in the investigation and study of the problems of forestry, including the preservation and reproduction of forests, the strength, quality, supply, and enemies of woods. There are a number of other divisions and bureaus in the Department, such as the Bureau of Entomology, the Bureau of Statistics, the Division of Biology, Director of Experiment Stations, and others worthy of mention but which time prevents referring to in detail, However, I wish to say something about the Bureau of Chemistry, and a few words as to the Bureau of Good Roads Inquiry.

We are now confronted with a gigantic proposition—the good-roads bill. More than 100 very excellent gentlemen, representing the national good-roads convention which was held in St. Louis last April, appeared before the Agriculture Committee, and not only asked, but demanded, national assistance in the construction of roads.

Let me read to you from the hearings what some of their spokesmen had to say on the subject. First, Mr. Harper, from my State:

Page 4: We are here not only representing them and petitioning you for this aid, but we are here in the capacity of demanding it. That is a harsh term to use. It may incur opposition, but we use it in this sense, gentlemen, and not in an offensive manner—we use it in the sense that we have the right to demand something that is absolutely and exclusively our own.

Down in the vaults of the Treasury there lies idle to-day $200,000,000. Whose money is it, gentlemen? Does it belong to the people known as the Federal Government?

Page 5: We come here to ask for it, and we want to be perfectly frank and free in confessing that we want to get our hands into the United States Treasury and we want to keep them there until we empty that Treasury and turn this money out to the people and let the people use it.

In the matter of progress, we have progressed at a rate that almost makes us dizzy when we turn and look upon it in every respect; but when we look back and see what we have done, we, the common representatives of this country, have to confess that the door has hardly been opened, the threshold hardly stepped across.

Page 6: We do say that for the first time in the history of the Federal Government the farmers of this country are knocking at the portals of the American Congress.

Mr. H. L. Runnel, of Arkansas, page 10:

Now, my friends, I know that my time is short, but I want to say, as a representative of the people, representing all that is best in government, that it behooves you to have your ear to the ground. This is simply the beginning of a wave that is going to sweep over this country like a vast tidal wave. Nine-tenths of the Representatives sitting in the halls of Congress have agricultural constituencies. A few districts in the cities send Representatives, but the great mass of men who sit here in the Capitol as the representatives of the people have agricultural constituencies, and I tell you beware of that constituency if you want to hold your place.

It is also claimed that the farmers pay 60 per cent of the taxes under the present system of raising revenue, and that they get in return only 5 per cent; that in the last fourteen years the balance of trade brought about by the products of the farm has been $4,866,000,000; that the adverse balance of all other products has been $865,000,000; that the farmers of the country paid off that eight hundred and sixty-five million, and placed to the credit of the nation three billion nine hundred and forty millions in the last fourteen years; and therefore they are entitled to recognition by Federal aid in building roads, which are of great importance and value to the farming community. Another interest which should not be overlooked is the intense interest on the part of automobile and bicycle riders of this country.

I take it that nobody objects to good roads, and that everybody comprehends the convenience and value of roads such as are proposed. I for one believe in encouraging the building of good roads, but it would seem advisable on the part of Congress, before embarking upon such a gigantic undertaking as the building of these extensive and expensive roads, as a business proposition, to first ascertain the number of miles of roads to be built and the probable cost. A practical farmer or business man, before going into any enterprise, first considers whether it is going to be a paying investment, then he ascertains the cost, and next whether he has the money to carry out the undertaking.

As before stated, we are confronted with a gigantic proposition. It not only involves the expenditure of great sums of money, it involves great engineering problems, the problem of material, and how to provide for the money to carry out the enterprise. According to their views it involves our future. As you will see, notice has been served on this Congress to get down and dig. We must build good roads or get out of Congress. We must act at once or get off the earth.

Mr. Runnel, of Arkansas, serves notice in these words:

Nine-tenths of the Representatives sitting in the halls of Congress have agricultural constituents. A few districts in the cities send Representatives, but the great mass of men who sit here in the Capitol as the Representatives of the people have agricultural constituents, and I tell you beware of that constituency if you want to hold your place.

I do not care to discuss the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas. I fear he does not fully comprehend the intelligence of the American farmer. They are intelligent men of business capacity, and when they do or want things done they want things done right and in a business way; and so with good roads. I will confine my remarks to the facts and the real situation as I see it.

Take my own State, for instance. It is estimated by Mr. Harper, chairman of the committee, that we have 100,000 miles of road in Iowa. I am of the opinion that we have considerable more miles of road than this. According to the estimates of Mr. Dodge (2 miles of road to every square mile of land), we have in the United States 6,051,600 miles of road.

It is estimated that it will cost from $2,000 to $20,000 per mile to build good roads in Iowa, or an average of from $5,000 to $8,000 per mile. If the cost will not exceed $5,000 per mile, $500,000,000 is all that would be required, but I fear it would take a great deal more. We will compromise on $6,500 per mile, a total of $650,000,000. This amount is greater than the assessed valuation of all property, real and personal, of my State. The laws of our State provide that all property shall be assessed at 25 per cent of its valuation. If property has been thus assessed, the money required to build good roads in my State is in excess of one-quarter of the valuation of all our property, including moneys and credits, railroads, real and personal property.

It is about $290 for every man, woman, and child, or $20 per acre for every acre of land in the State. If it is decided to make good roads of all of our roads in the United States, then thirty and one-quarter billion dollars is required, or, in other words, if we appropriate an amount equal to the appropriation for the last fiscal year, or $750,000,000 per year, for forty years we will have nearly sufficient money to build all these roads, provided they can be built at $5,000 per mile; but New Jersey has built 1,000 miles of road which cost $5,500 a mile on the average. In Ohio the cost averages from two to twenty thousand per mile, and I fear the cost would be much greater than $5,000 per mile.

It is proposed by some to appropriate $24,000,000, or eight million per year for the next three years, and this money to be distributed among the several States according to their population. Iowa would get about $700,000, or $235,000 per year. The $235,000, at $5,000 per mile, would build 47 miles of road, not quite one-half mile for each of the ninety-nine counties in the State. At this rate it would take two thousand one hundred and twenty-seven years to complete our roads, and there is much in the statement of Mr. Scarrett, who appeared before our committee.

I read to you from page 23 of the hearings:

My only objection to the Brownlow bill is that it only appropriates $24,000,000. What is the use of going out against this giant question with a popgun? Why not go at it with a 16-inch gun in the beginning?

Mr. BOWIE. What would that 16-inch gun in the beginning cost?

Mr. SCARRITT. Seven hundred million dollars.

If Mr. Scarritt's suggestion of appropriating $700,000,000 per year is to be carried out, these good roads could be built in about forty-three years, or 1 mile out of every 43 would be built each year.

If this enormous sum is needed to build good roads, how are we going to raise the money? Will you borrow it? Will you increase the tax? Will you cut down or cut off certain appropriations entirely? If so, which amount do you propose to reduce or cut off? Will you cut off the $5,978,160 appropriated last session of Congress for agriculture? No. Will you cut off the $77,888,752.83 appropriated for the Army or the $7,188,416.22 for fortifications? Will you include the $81,876,791.43 for the Navy? Will you cut off the $139,843,600 appropriated for pensions for the 996,545 pensioners? If you do you have only $312,775,720.48, which is less than one-half the amount required for a single year. If you continue along this line up to the $700,000,000 mark, you only have $53,058,506.02 left, not one-third enough to run the Post-Office Department.

Upon investigation I find that the last fifteen Congresses, covering a period of thirty years, have appropriated for—

Pensions	$3,000,905,615.60
Army	1,099,138,538.37
Navy	914,719,802.83
Fortifications	89,395,659.71
Rivers and harbors	322,749,860.81
Agriculture	58,923,745.06

For diplomatic and consular, District of Columbia, Indian, legislative, Military Academy, post-office, sundry civil, deficiency, miscellaneous, [permanent annual appropriations, etc., $7,570,123,028.05, or a grand total of $13,055,956,050.43.

The amount required is nearly six times as great as the total amount expended for pensions, army, navy, fortifications, rivers and harbors, and agriculture, and more than twice as much as a grand total of all the money appropriated for the last thirty years.

It is more than thirty-three times as great as our present interest-bearing debt, which is $914,541,410. It is twelve times as great as the total money in circulation April 1, 1904, which was $2,516,639,223, or $30.87 per capita. It is eleven times as great as the general stock of money in the United States April 1, 1904, which was $2,793,311,428. It is nearly $400 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. It is equal to nearly one-third of the wealth of the United States, which is $94,300,000,000. It is nearly fourteen times the value of all the cattle, horses, sheep, mules, and swine in the United States. It is almost equal to the total value of imports since 1790, a period of 113 years, which was $34,279,263,510.

If it costs $6,500 per mile to build these roads, the amount required is greater than the total value of our exports for the same period, which was $37,863,335,440. It would be about ten times the amount of the balance of trade in our favor for one hundred and thirteen years, which was $3,584,071,930, to build roads such as has been suggested.

It has been suggested by some that only part of the roads should be built, that the main traveled roads leading into towns and cities should be made first class, and that the intersecting roads and those in the more remote rural districts should be left to take care of themselves, or, as has been stated by somebody, "left sticking in the mud."

It hardly seems right to take the money which it is claimed belongs to all the people and appropriate it for the benefit of those who are fortunate enough to have their farms joining these proposed good roads, and I fancy that the farmers receiving no benefits would protest against being taxed five or ten dollars per acre for the benefit of others. It is proposed that the States, counties, or communities shall pay one-half of the cost, and that they are to receive this money upon certain conditions; and unless those conditions are complied with—that is, to furnish one-half the money, etc.—the aid will not be granted.

I take it that the cities, towns, and villages, and more densely populated communities, might consent to tax themselves and accept of this money; but what becomes of the rural districts and those for whom this plea is made if they decline to be taxed and to comply with these conditions? Some will remain, as stated, in the mud; others will continue to build and maintain good roads as they are doing to-day at a cost of less than 5 cents an acre per year. One thing to be taken into consideration is that it is claimed that the clay, gravel, and sand roads, which we have in many parts of this country, are far superior nine months out of the year to the kind of roads it is proposed to build. They are certainly as good in the winter when the ground is frozen or covered with snow; they are certainly superior to the macadamized roads when smooth and dry; they are less wearing on horses and vehicles. Everyone knows that a horse or vehicle in the city with paved streets will not last one-half as long as on the country roads.

The question as it presents itself to me is, Had we not better ascertain first if this legislation is really for, and desired by, the people whom it is claimed it is in the interest of; whether they are ready to entertain any such undertaking before we go headlong into a gigantic proposition of this kind?

In this connection I wish to read to you from page 3892, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, of March 25:

Mr. POU. I turned to page 1848 of the RECORD of last Congress, and I find there, in the list of trusts published by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], a corporation known as the "automobile trust," with a capital of $5,000,000.

Upon further investigation I find that this automobile trust has been flooding the whole country with "literature" in the interest of good roads. Now, I would not charge our friends on the other side with legislating in the interest of the trusts. They have never been known to do anything like that. They have never been known to accept any money from the trusts in order to carry elections. They would not think of doing anything like that. But it appears as a remarkable coincidence that here is a trust which is endeavoring to induce the people to build fine roads so it can sell machines, and here is the Republican party forcing the people, no matter how poor they may be, to do the very thing the trust wants. Mr. Chairman, it looks as if we have discovered the colored gentleman in the wood pile. [Laughter.]

The above would indicate that possibly the manufacturers of automobiles are more interested than are the farmers.

I also read to you from page 11 of the hearings:

No man will for a moment contend that the amount of $24,000,000 is going to build many roads in the United States. I looked into it, and the statement made by Senator LATIMER that the State of California would get $400,000, which would not build a piece of good road a thousand miles long—just enough to demonstrate what is to be done. It seems to me that the thing has been magnified somewhat by the speakers who have preceded me, but, from my standpoint, the people of the United States are not going to ask Congress to build the roads for them, but simply use their scientific departments to show them how they themselves shall build good roads; and whether the amount named in the various bills is the right amount, that is for you gentlemen to determine.

Also, page 18 from the hearings, statement of Mr. Wright, of New York:

Now, I want to say in behalf of the State of New York that we do not need that aid, but we do not want to stand in the way of our sister States.

They need not be so particular about the expense; it is simply a method by which other States have been in the habit of looking to Washington for aid, which we in New York do not think proper; but just as soon as you get one road, then you have settled the whole problem. You can get them just as fast as necessary; it comes naturally.

Also, page 12 of the hearings:

There is but one voice, it should be done, and the question for you gentlemen to decide is how it is to be done.

Mr. GRAFF. Has your committee indorsed any particular bill which is before Congress?

Mr. BOOTH. No; not at all.

Pennsylvania appropriated $6,500,000 the last session of the legislature to be disbursed in the next five years. Mr. Worrell, of Philadelphia, chairman of the National Association of the League of American Wheelmen, made the statement before the committee that they had secured an appropriation, but were going to use but little of it; that only 16 out of the 1,500 townships had taken advantage of the law. In view of these statements and facts, the present condition of the Treasury, the limited knowledge we have on the subject, had we not better continue as we have for a few years to use our scientific department to demonstrate how to build and to carry on experiments in building roads? We have maintained in the Agricultural Department for a few years a division known as the "Public-Road Inquiry," under the direction and able management of Mr. Dodge, which has devoted its time entirely to the work, and has given its aid in the way of superintending and instructing in building good roads where assistance was needed and desired.

Our chemists have devoted much time in analyzing road materials with a view of determining what material can be used to the best advantage; and I have strong hopes that in time a process will be developed whereby the natural materials may be utilized, and will take the place of rock, cement, and other materials used at the present time; and will make it possible to build these roads at a much less cost, rather than to adopt a policy of the United States building these expensive roads, and especially at this time, when we are confronted with a deficit, as has been pointed out by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. Only a few days ago he stated that we had $221,000,000 in the Treasury, $131,000,000 of which had already been authorized, leaving a net balance of only $90,000,000, which is smaller than it has been for a number of years. Had we not better continue the policy of instruction and the dissemination of knowledge and information through our chemists and through this bureau of good-roads inquiry so that the people may have the benefit of this valuable knowledge and information? I believe it as much the duty of the Federal Government to aid in the construction of roads as it is in improving rivers and harbors; and believe that good roads are a national necessity, and that they contribute largely to our general welfare.

The farmers pay a large portion of our taxes. I am not prepared to say how much, but probably one-half. It is claimed they get nothing in return. Some one estimated that only 5 per cent of the Government money goes back to the rural districts. I do not agree with that statement. We will appropriate this year $20,180,000 for rural free-delivery service. A large portion of the $170,000,000 appropriated for the Post-Office Department is distributed in the rural districts. So with a large part of the money appropriated for rivers and harbors. The $5,978,160 appropriated for agriculture is largely in their interests. A large portion of the $140,000,000 appropriated for pensions is distributed all over the country. We have as many pensioners in the country as in the cities.

A large number of clerks in Washington come from the rural districts. The Military and Naval Academies are instructing young men from all parts of the country at Government expense. It can hardly be claimed that the diplomatic and consular service is more in the interest of one locality or class than another. So I assume that a much larger percentage of money is paid back to the rural district than the 5 per cent claimed.

We lead the world in nearly all the arts, yet we are behind nearly all other countries in good roads. France has built 23,000 miles of national highways; England, Switzerland, Norway, and many other countries in Europe have built national highways.

The question of good roads is of great importance, and one which should receive earnest and favorable consideration by Congress. I for one favor the encouragement of building good roads. But with the limited information we have on the subject, and in view of the good work being done by the Agricultural Department through the Bureau of Chemistry and the Division of Public-Roads Inquiries, and the liberal appropriations made for the continuance of this work, and in view of the many urgent demands on and the present condition of our Treasury, in view of the fact that no service-pension bill, no public-building bill, no river and harbor bill can be passed this Congress because of the present financial condition of this Government, and until it is clear to everybody that if we are to undertake the building of roads such as has been suggested we will either borrow the money or increase taxation, which means not only higher internal taxes, but higher duties on imports as well; in view of this situation, it seems to me we are not justified in committing this Government to such a gigantic undertaking at this time.

Some days ago, in offering some observations, among other things I referred to the rural free-delivery service and compared the salary paid the rural carriers to that paid clerks here in Washington. This statement seems to have attracted some attention from the press; and as an introduction to this subject, I wish to read extracts from an editorial from the Detroit Free Press under date of March 21, 1904. After calling attention to my defective vision and my failure to see things in quite the same light as others, and having the temerity to break away and express my mind on this matter, it says:

[From the Detroit Free Press, March 21, 1904.]

ANOTHER NEAR-SIGHTED CONGRESSMAN.

One of the latest to walk into the lime light is Representative GILBERT N. HAUGEN, of Iowa, who, in the course of a speech on the need of an investigation of the Post-Office Department, in which he advocated going still farther and investigating all branches of the Government service, said:

"I am one of those who believe that there is something radically wrong about the present adjustment of salaries. I can see no justice in paying a rural mail carrier only $600 per annum, who travels 25 miles or more every day of the week, rainstorm or sunshine, good or bad roads, furnishing his own horses and vehicle, equipping himself with subsistence, feed for his horses, while for services here in Washington decrepit and superannuated clerks are furnished a warm room in the winter, a cool room with electric fan in the summer, soft-cushioned chairs, and are paid $1,000 or more per annum for doing practically nothing; and if he is detailed for duty outside of Washington, or sent abroad on some duty or pretext of duty, he is allowed from $3 to $7 per day for subsistence and his traveling expenses.

"If the statement repeatedly made on the floor of the House is true, and it can not be disputed, it comes from high authority—from Members who have had occasion to investigate the matter—that we have more than 20 per cent of dead wood in the Departments, it is high time, gentlemen, that some action should be taken to bring about some reform, and that the $750,000,000 appropriated annually might be expended more judiciously and advantageously."

After quoting the above from my speech, I am kindly advised to consult an oculist or to take a course in practical politics, etc. It comments on my suggestions in this language:

The daring of his suggestion that a rural mail carrier merits the same consideration as a clerk who occupies a sumptuous office entitles him to the scorn of his colleagues. What object would there be in creating political positions if the incumbents were required to work, and what inducements would there be to accept such appointments? The very thought of such a condition of affairs is repugnant. And as for the dead timber, what would become of it if Mr. HAUGEN'S advice was followed and it was cast out? The prospect of such an army separated from the comfortable berths they now occupy presents little to commend it to the Congressmen from whose constituency the incumbents are recruited.

If the gentleman from Iowa ever hopes to make himself popular in Washington he should content himself with taking up a line of campaign in which his colleagues are not so deeply interested, and in which the Treasury would not be so greatly benefited.

This, of course, is sarcasm and reflects on the Republican party and the Republican Members of this House. It is to be inferred that the Republican party and Republican Members are responsible for the appointment and favor the retention of this dead wood. This waste expenditure can not be charged to the Republican Administration, as we all know a majority of the people employed by the Government are Democrats and were appointed under the Cleveland Administration under the spoils system and covered by the civil-service blanket by Mr. Cleveland before going out of office. They were there when the Republican party came into control, and are there to stay unless Congress acts.

It has been suggested that this is a small matter; that it means a saving of only fifteen or twenty million dollars out of the $750,000,000 appropriated annually, and why not go after bigger game? My reply is that we must start somewhere—start at this point and continue all along the line until you have reached every item of the appropriation bill; reduce the items, make them what they ought to be, and you will save millions and millions of dollars per year to the Government and insure as liberal and equally as efficient and extensive service. I am not prepared to say just what amount can be saved, but Uncle Sam has on his pay roll more than one-quarter of a million of employees, and it is clear that the amount would be large.

The fact that there are other extravagant appropriations and that more money could be saved by paring down other items is no excuse why this subject should not receive earnest and thoughtful consideration; and there is no justice in continuing in service an army of worthless clerks at a high salary. If 20 per cent of the expenditure for clerk hire can be saved, why not do it? Why not amend the civil-service rules and make it possible to appoint the very best clerks—men and women of ability, integrity, and energy, apportioning these appointments among the several States according to population?

Employ men and women from the farms, the towns, the cities, and villages, full of life, vigor, and patriotism. Do as was done in the Census Office. Everybody knows that the Census Office clerks performed their work well, and that on an average they did 50 per cent more work than the clerks in other Departments. They came from the schools, stores, banks, farms, cities, towns, villages, factories, shops, and mills, and pursued their duties with care and fidelity. These clerks were selected with care, and by those who were in position to know of their character, ability, and standing. They came from the best homes in the land, recommended by men of responsibility and who had knowledge of their fitness.

I repeat what I said March 11:

If under our present civil-service rules there is no way of discharging or getting rid of these men, it is high time that we enact laws and rules that will make it possible to appoint officials giving some consideration to integrity, experience, and capacity for performing that service, that the business of this Government can be conducted along business lines.

I have no quarrel with the Civil Service Commission, the Administration or any Department, or any clerk performing his duty. I believe that 80 per cent of the clerks are worthy and deserving, and many are entitled to a larger salary than they are receiving.

I claim no personal knowledge of the efficiency or inefficiency of the employees of the Government. My statement was based on statements made on the floor of this House by reliable men; and so far as I know these statements have not been contradicted. If true that we have 20 per cent of dead wood, it is unjust to appropriate money for this purpose. It is true that Congress does not appoint clerks, but it holds the purse strings; we do and can put limitations on appropriations. Congress can prescribe rules and regulations as to how money shall be expended. We can provide for a commission, giving that commission power to appoint and discharge employees. Congress can prescribe rules for the Civil Service Commission as to appointments and requirements and discharging employees.

This is not a partisan question. The question is, What is for the best of the service? It is not a question whether Republicans or Democrats are to be employed. The question is to appoint honest, energetic, patriotic, faithful, competent, and worthy clerks. In connection with this I also want to make some comments on an editorial in the Boston Herald, April 1, 1904:

NATIONAL EXPENDITURES.

One of our western contemporaries, the Des Moines Register and Leader, thinks that we were not quite fair to the Republicans in the comment we made on Congressman HAUGEN'S speech, recently printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Our readers may remember that in connection with this speech the Congressman published tables giving the actual appropriations made by each session of Congress from 1875 down to the present time.

That record showed, as a whole, that, with the Republicans in control, expenditures usually increased by leaps and bounds, and that when the Democrats were in control the gain in expenditures had been slight in comparison with that shown by Republican Congresses. Our western contemporary thinks that Congressman HAUGEN'S table will not prove a very valuable campaign document for the Democrats. It admits that the great increase in the cost of Government in recent years has fallen to the sole responsibility of the Republican party, but it says: "There has been enough of a sprinkling of Democratic Congresses before to prove that even had the Democrats been in power there would have been no hesitation about keeping step with the demands of a billion-dollar country."

We were not contending that this was a campaign document, although it was a warning to the Republicans from a Congressman of their own party. We were merely stating facts, hewing to the line and letting the chips fall where they would. The record shows that the last four Congresses, from the Fifty-fourth to the Fifty-seventh, inclusive, all Republican, made appropriations which totaled almost as much as the entire appropriations made by the eight Congresses from the Forty-third to the Fiftieth, inclusive, in all but two of which the Democrats controlled the House. In the light of that showing, we will repeat the question: "What evidence has there been given in any direction that the present Administration considers for an instant the value of national economy and the need of more care in spending the people's money?"

In this connection you will pardon me for briefly referring to politics and the party which I have the honor of being a member. The Republican party has no apology to make. Its history since its birth in 1856 is the history of progress and prosperity. Its leaders have always had the welfare of the country at heart. It has never taken a backward step, but has always been the supporting pillar of the National Government. Its cardinal principles have been the maintenance of the Declaration of Independence, internal improvements, a tariff to protect our labor and industries and to pay Government expenses, the building up of our Navy, preserving purity in elections, for the diffusion of knowledge and happiness among all the people, for an honest medium of exchange, the maintenance of a common standard of value, and an elastic currency. It has stood for honor, dignity, integrity, patriotism, progress, prosperity, happiness, law, and order.

Following these principles we have prospered; we have advanced along the lines of accumulating wealth, furnishing employment for our labor, as well as good prices for our products; and in everything that makes opportunities and advantages for our people. We have attained that remarkable degree of American prosperity which is the culmination of the prosperity of the people of the earth; but as we have advanced in population, progress, prosperity, intelligence, and happiness our expenses have also increased.

But, as stated, my speech of March 11, was not a political speech, and the tables were not printed for political purposes nor were any comparisons made between Administrations. The total appropriation by the Forty-ninth Congress, as shown by the table referred to, was $746,343,495.51, and the total for the Fifty-seventh Congress was $1,553,683,002.57. The appropriation for the Fifty-seventh Congress, being under Republican Administration, is twice as great as that of the Forty-ninth under Democratic Administration. In 1887, our population was 59,974,000, and in 1903, it was over 80,000,000, an increase of about 20,000,000. In 1888, our imports were $723,953,114; our exports were $695,954,507, an adverse balance of trade of $28,002,607. In 1903, our imports were $1,025,719,237, our exports $1,420,141,679, with a balance of trade in our favor of $394,422,442. The wealth of this country in 1890, was $65,000,000,000, and in 1900, it was over $94,000,000,000.

With this enormous increase of commerce, wealth, and population, and taking into consideration the fact that we were recently engaged in war and are now constructing the Panama Canal, it is natural that our appropriations should increase in proportion. I invite attention to a few of the increases. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, under the Democratic Administration referred to, Congress appropriated $654,715 for agriculture. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, under Republican Administration, Congress appropriated $5,978,160 for agriculture, an increase of more than 800 per cent. For the year 1887, Congress appropriated $23,753,057.21 for the Army, and for 1904, $77,388,752.83. In 1887, Congress appropriated $16,489,907.20 for the Navy, and in 1904, $81,876,791.43. For 1887, Congress appropriated $54,365,863.25 for the Post-Office Department, and for 1904, $153,511,549.75. For 1887, Congress appropriated $82,075,200 for pensions, and for 1904, $139,847,600.

The appropriation for rural free delivery was then $10,000; this year we have appropriated $20,180,000. These are indeed large increases, but I take it nobody will contend that either of these appropriations could be kept down to what they were fifteen or twenty years ago. While some of these appropriations have been large and could and should have been much less, yet on the whole they have been on fairly conservative lines. The large increase in the expenditures in the War and Navy Departments can hardly be charged up to the Republican party. One party must assume as much responsibility as the other.

One of the most inspiring and patriotic scenes ever witnessed in Congress was on that day when every Member of the House, regardless of sectional lines or political affiliations, voted to appropriate the $50,000,000 to carry on the war with Spain, pledging the lives and material resources of this nation. Democrats not only voted to begin the war, to raise men and to equip armies, but they voted for the treaty which ended it; they voted for the $20,000,000 to comply with a certain provision of the treaty; they voted and helped to maintain our honor and dignity, and to enforce American sovereignty.

We have not always agreed with all Democrats upon all questions relative to the war; we never believed in what has been advocated by those who were crying imperialism and militarism. We have never agreed with some who contend that to give aid and comfort to rebels in arms against the United States was maintaining the Declaration of Independence, nor have we contended that to put down a rebellion and maintain law and order in any part of the United States or any part of the territory of the United States without regard to the place or time when such territory was acquired, was imperialism; and that any use of the Army to maintian law and order, to protect life and property, however necessary, was militarism. Yet on the whole it was the bravery, loyalty, suffering, and united efforts of all the American people that caused this grand and beautiful flag to float forever over land and sea, representing the greatest and grandest country on earth.

Party lines are not drawn on appropriations. Appropriation bills generally come to the House with a unanimous report. This Congress has been in session five months, and during these five months five hours have not been consumed by discussion in opposition to appropriations, and I venture the assertion that as much time has been consumed in opposition to appropriations on this side of the Chamber as on the other. Appropriations are generally viewed from a higher standpoint, and, so far as I know, every appropriation bill has been considered from as honest and patriotic standpoint by one side as the other, and with as profound a view of subserving the best interests of this Government.

No party, men, or man has a monopoly on honesty, sound judgment, profound wisdom, pure, noble, and lofty ideals and purposes. Men are not judged by their political affiliations, profession, or vocation; no party, no men, or set of men are infallible; we are all human; some err in judgment, some in lack of knowledge of public affairs; some are deceived; possibly some yield to undue influences; some are coerced and are susceptible to the influences and atmosphere which surround them; others may be inspired by impure motives; but on the whole members of legislative bodies are men of integrity, sound judgment, profound wisdom, permeated and dominated by noble and lofty ideals, with a firm determination to do justice and right, pursuing their duties with dignity and rectitude of purpose.

Nobody will criticise the increased appropriation for pensions. We all believe in a just recognition of the services of our sailors and soldiers. With few exceptions, we believe in liberal pension laws. I take it no objection can be raised to a large increase for agricultural purposes. We are agreed that this money has been wisely and economically expended and in the interest of a deserving class of people. We all favor the very best postal facilities, and so far as I know no objection has been raised to large appropriations for the Post-Office Department.

We are nearly all agreed as to the large increase for the rural free-delivery service; and in this connection I wish to say a word as to rural free-delivery service. First, I wish to express my appreciation and gratitude to the Post-Office Department for the generous and courteous consideration; for the prompt attention and friendly consideration given the petitioners in my district. The district has been given over 160 routes, four times the average number in Congressional districts, which I take it is due to good roads, population, and patronage, and the petitions coming within the requirements of the regulations. In fact, it is the garden spot of the greatest Commonwealth of all Commonwealths, populated by, I believe, the happiest, most contented, patriotic, intelligent, industrious, progressive, prosperous, and law-abiding people on earth.

We all agree that the post-office bill contained no item of greater importance than the $20,180,000 for this service which is yet in its infancy. Four years ago not a single route was in operation in my district—very few in the United States—a service sidetracked, neglected, and abused under Democratic Administration. After these seven years of fostering, nourishing, and friendly encouragement by a Republican Administration it has grown from a $10,000 appropriation to over $20,000,000. During the last fiscal year 48,954,390 pieces were collected and 390,428,128 pieces of mail were delivered by Uncle Sam's 15,119 carriers; 8,339 routes were investigated, of which 6,653 were established and 1,714 were rejected. On June 30, 1903, there were 15,119 routes in operation, an average number of 40 for each of the 386 Congressional districts. On that day there were 11,700 petitions for routes awaiting investigation, and on April 1, 1904, there were 22,537 rural free-delivery routes in operation, or an average of 59 for each Congressional district.

With the liberal appropriation made for this service for the coming year, before the next fiscal year ends we will have in operation more than 30,000 routes, extending the service to the firesides of more than 3,000,000 homes. We hope in the near future to extend the service to every country home where it is practical and possible, a recognition justly due a deserving people, the bone and sinew of our great Republic, where love, loyalty, patriotism, virtue, and morality prevail, adding much to the blessings, advancement, advantages, happiness, comfort, and convenience of a people who have contributed so much to our progress, prosperity, stability, dignity, and peace, and who have always been found in the foremost ranks in our days of unpleasantness, gallantly marching on to victory in times of peace and war.

Nobody has done more to maintain or perpetuate this grand and splendid Government of ours; nobody has responded more cheerfully, freely, or heartily in times when our Government institutions were in danger than have the people from the farms. Nobody rendered more valiant, heroic, and patriotic service to this country than they did. Their many noble and loyal deeds entitle them to consideration. We all believe in the encouragement and upbuilding of our rural districts. We want to encourage our young men and women to remain on the farms, where they do and may enjoy a greater degree of blessings, true happiness, independence, advantages, and general content than in the cities.

It has been suggested that we have been free in appropriating money for the rural free-delivery service, and that the rural districts are receiving more than their share as compared with the delivery in the cities. In this Congress we appropriated $20,250,000 for free-delivery service already established, to pay letter carriers and substitutes; also for pay of carriers in new offices entitled to free delivery, $110,000—total, $20,360,000—while we appropriated for rural free-delivery service only $20,180,000, which is $180,000 less than the amount appropriated for city service. The urban population is only 28,411,698, or 37.3 per cent. The semi-urban is 8,208,480, or 10.8 per cent, while the rural is 39,528,398, or 51.9 per cent of total population.

Out of the total number of 29,073,233 persons engaged in gainful occupations in the United States in 1900, 81.7 per cent males and 18.3 per cent females, we find 10,381,765 engaged in agriculture, 90.6 per cent males and 9.4 per cent females; 1,258,538 professional service, 65.8 per cent males and 34.2 per cent females; 5,580,657 domestic and personal service, 62.5 per cent males and 37.5 per cent females; 4,766,964 trade and transportation, 89.4 per cent males and 10.6 per cent females; 7,085,309 manufacturing and mechanical pursuits, 81.5 per cent males and 18.5 per cent females.

Of the 35,849,516, or 47.5 per cent, of total population living in the 10,602 cities and towns in the United States, 19,757,618, or 25.9 per cent, live in 161 cities of 25,000 or more; 4,964,091, or 6.5 per cent, live in 356 cities of over 8,000 and less than 25,000; 2,937,327, or 3.9 per cent, live in 532 cities of over 4,000 and less than 8,000; 1,896,705, or 2.5 per cent, live in 604 cities of over 2,500 and less than 4,000; 3,304,700, or 4.3 per cent, live in 2,130 towns of over 1,000 and less than 2,500; 3,007,075, or 4 per cent, live in 6,819 towns of less than 1,000.

There are in the United States 5,739,657 farms, which produce crops valued at $2,910,138,663, of which amount each of the crops listed contributes the amount set opposite it in the table.

Of this number, 3,644,669, or 64 per cent, own their own farms, 2,014,316 hire farms, 41,356 are unknown; 3,654,158, or 63.7 per cent, of farms are operated by owners, 59,213, or 1 per cent, are operated by managers, and 2,026,286, or 35.3 per cent, are operated by tenants. Seven hundred and forty-six thousand seven hundred and seventeen farms, valued at $324,244,397, are farmed by negroes; 716,514 have buildings valued at $71,903,315.

Iowa, with a population of 2,231,853, or 480,878 families, averaging 4.6 to a family, has 228,622 farms; 220,626 of this number have buildings; 147,305, or 64 per cent, are operated by owners; 1,581, or seven-tenths of 1 per cent, by managers, and 79,736, or 34.9 per cent, by tenants. Of the 223,525 families in Iowa engaged in farming, 146,844, or 65.7 per cent, families own their farms; 75,161, or 33.6 per cent, hire farms; 1,520, or seven-tenths of 1 per cent, unknown.

Of the total number of 789,404 persons, 10 years old and over, engaged in gainful occupations in Iowa in 1900, we find 371,604, or 47.1 per cent, engaged in agriculture; 117,177, or 14.9 per cent, engaged in domestic and personal service; 46,814, or 5.9 per cent, engaged in professional service; 129,006, or 16.3 per cent, engaged in trade and transportation; 124,803, or 15.8 per cent, engaged in manufacturing.

Iowa's products alone amounted to $365,410,528. According to the census report of 1900, Iowa produced 383,453,190 bushels of corn, or 766,906 cars of 500 bushels each, or a train of cars 4,793 miles long, valued at $97,297,707, on 9,804,076 acres, an average of 39.1 bushels per acre. Iowa produced 168,364,170 bushels of oats on 4,695,391 acres; also 23,769,440 bushels of wheat on 1,689,705 acres, 1,179,970 bushels of rye on 89,172 acres, 18,059,060 bushels of barley on 627,851 acres, and 1,413,380 bushels of flax on 136,433 acres.

In Iowa alone we have 1,423,648 dairy cows, valued at $46,349,012. Total number of neat cattle, 5,367,630, valued at $142,518,902. We have 1,392,573 horses, valued at $77,720,577. The ten counties comprising the Congressional district which I have the honor to represent have an area of 5,624 square miles, carved out of that magnificent and productive 55,475 square miles of land area in Iowa. This district has a population of 195,815. The land area exceeds the area of the State of Rhode Island and Delaware, and almost the combined area of Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Delaware. It has a greater population than either Arizona, Delaware, Idaho, New Mexico, or Hawaii, or four times as great as Nevada, twice that of Wyoming, three times that of Alaska, and nearly as great as the combined population of these three. Out of the 41,248 homes in my district, 22,560, or 54.8 per cent, are farm homes; 9,095, or 40.4 per cent, are free, and 7,907, or 35.1 per cent, are encumbered; 166 unknown, 5,276 hired, 116 unknown. Of the other 18,688 homes, 8,461, or 45.5 per cent, are free; 2,400, or 13.5 per cent, are encumbered, 279 unknown, 6,793 hired; unknown 755; 65.3 per cent of its population depends upon agriculture for their livelihood and follow their vocation on 23,026 farms, which average size is 152.3 acres, and of an average value of $6,622. There are buildings on 98 per cent of them, and 206 contain 500 acres or more. Seventy-six of these farms are operated by landowners, thus assuring a contented, stable, and prosperous people. They contain 383,324 acres, 80.7 per cent, or 223,256 acres, of which are improved.

The total value of farm property in the district, including land and improvements, buildings, implements and machinery, and live stock, is $175,490,487, at a very low valuation. The total today could be safely increased 25 per cent and yet fall short of actual values. These farms yield "products not fed to live stock," or, in other words, farm produce for sale, $25,695,322 worth annually. Add to this $10,014,369 "fed to live stock" and we have a total production for the district of $35,709,691. In the production of this enormous amount the farmers, in addition to their own toil, expended the sum of $1,923,920 for labor and used fertilizers to the amount of $29,680. Taking the value of farm property for capital invested, we find that the value of products not fed to live stock shows a gross profit of 14.6 per cent. These farms were stocked with 518,320 head of neat cattle and 126,212 work animals. The farmers slaughtered for their own use $773,070 worth of animals and sold "on the hoof" $9,558,229 worth. The "better halves" of the farmers produced from their dairies $4,198,226 worth of dairy products, of which amount they sold $3,327,718 worth, or 79 per cent.

Among the many other things for which Iowa is noted is the Iowa cow. In one year she yielded 76,265,781 gallons of pure, rich milk. It is estimated that this milk would fill a basin 20 feet deep, 70 feet wide, and 1.37 miles long, in which could be floated the fleet with which Admiral Dewey captured Manila and still have room for some of the Spanish vessels captured. Five million eight hundred and ninety-four thousand four hundred and eighty-five pounds of butter was churned in this great farming district. Load this butter on the farmer's wagon and start it to market. If we give each team a ton of butter for a load, we will use 2,948 wagons. Allowing 30 feet for each team on the road, we will have a procession of butter-laden wagons 16.9 miles in length. Nearly 2,000,000 chickens, in partnership with 109,744 turkeys, geese, and ducks, produced 10,371,840 dozens of eggs. If we crate these eggs and place them end to end, we will have a line of egg cases 120 miles in length.

Now, to return to the farmer: From 704,073 acres of the best land on earth he gathered 27,647,090 bushels of corn. As a side issue, he harvested 2,669,360 bushels of barley; he seeded 707,651 acres to oats and gathered 26,630,040 bushels; he sowed 62,425 acres of wheat, which yielded 908,350 bushels; his hay crop—timothy and clover—amounted to 480,572 tons.

Reduce it to carloads. Loading the principal crops of this district on freight cars, allowing 700 bushels for a load for corn, barley, and wheat, and 1,200 bushels of oats, we will have a train of loaded cars which, with the locomotives necessary to move it, would have a total length of 778 miles, divided as follows: Corn, 312 miles; barley, 31 miles; oats, 172 miles; wheat, 10 miles, and hay 253 miles, which would be but a fitting advertisement of the unparalleled fertility and productiveness of the Fourth Congressional district of Iowa.

In this connection I venture a word as to the antioleo legislation enacted by Congress nearly two years ago, and do so without any desire to reopen the exciting, protracted, and vigorous debates on that subject, both in the committee and House. I will not now discuss the merits or demerits of that legislation. But in view of the prophecies made by the opposition at that time, and the fear entertained of the terrible disaster and failure so sure to come from such legislation, I wish to call attention of this House and the country to the real results which followed.

The contention was that the 10-cent tax per pound would ruin not only the oleo interests, but that it would carry with it the cotton-seed industry; and that the Texas steer would be doomed to suffer the mortification and humiliation of being discriminated against in favor of the proud Jersey by such infamous and unjust legislation.

After a year and one-half of successful operation of this much-feared and detested legislation on the part of our friends who fought so nobly and well on the other side, we find that not only is oleo selling at higher prices, but the Texas steer and cotton-seed oil have been in greater demand, and commanding higher prices than ever before. The result has been most pleasing and gratifying not only to the dairy interests, but to every interest concerned, for and against.

After a careful perusal of the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue we find that 126,316,427 pounds of oleo were manufactured during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1902. Adding 722,237 pounds on hand July 1, 1901, makes a total of 127,038,664 pounds. Deducting 3,469,199 pounds which was exported, leaves 123,869,465 pounds for domestic consumption for that year, being the last year under the old law.

For the following fiscal year ending July 1, 1903, the first year's operation of this law, only 5,710,407 pounds of colored oleo and 67,573,689 pounds of uncolored oleo, a total of 73,284,096 pounds, were manufactured. Deducting 3,486,692 pounds exported, leaves 69,797,404 for domestic consumption, or 54,072,091 pounds less than the previous year. For the first five months of the fiscal year ending July 1, 1902, under the old law, and when taxed at 2 cents per pound, 43,529,364 pounds were manufactured; and for the corresponding five months for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1903, the first five months under the operation of the present law, taxing colored oleo 10 cents and uncolored 1¼ cents per pound, 1,374,930 of colored and 25,527,207 of uncolored, a total of 26,902,117 pounds of oleo, were manufactured, or 16,627,247 pounds less. For the first five months of the present fiscal year there were manufactured 1,425,310 pounds of colored and 20,474,748 of uncolored, a total of 21,900,058 pounds of oleo, making a further reduction of 5,200,059; or, in other words, the production of oleo for the first five months of the present fiscal year is about one-half of what it was in the corresponding five months of the last fiscal year under the old law.

The revenue collected has fallen from $2,944,772.46 in 1902, to $888,181.68 in 1903, including the tax on renovated butter. The licenses under the old law and under the new law were, in 1902, manufacturers, 35; wholesale dealers, 192; retail dealers, 10,821. In 1903, manufacturers, 31; wholesale dealers, 398; retail dealers, 26,157.

It will readily be seen that since this wholesale fraud, deception, and counterfeiting has been cut off, and since this oleo has been put on the market and sold on its merits, and sold for what it is, the manufacture and sale of oleo has been restricted to about one-half; and the market for 60,000,000 pounds of butter which the dairymen were robbed of annually by the sale of this counterfeit, sold in violation of State laws, thereby displacing 60,000,000 pounds of butter, has been restored to the producers of the pure and genuine article and the receipts of the dairy people have been increased nearly $15,000,000.

If the theory holds good that supply and demand regulate prices, it is unnecessary to argue that the price of butter has advanced. It is fair to assume that this had something to do with the advance in price of butter.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, this bill for the government of the Panama Canal zone gives all powers—military, civil, and judicial—in the canal strip into the hands of the President. His power there, even though the effect of this act extends only through the life of the present Congress, will be complete and autocratic. This is one step farther toward a system of colonial government as despotic as that of imperial Rome.

What I do most deplore in our present mad expansion and acquisition of subject colonies is the gradual blunting of our appreciation of the privileges and sanctity of self-government. As a people we are becoming more and more accustomed to the idea of an emperor here at the Executive Mansion, who issues his fiat and governs whole races of subject people whom he has never seen and whose own wishes he rarely consults.

In view of the practical unanimity with which the committee has decided upon this measure, it seems almost fruitless to offer opposition to the bill. But I think it is fair to inquire why the committee has resorted to a measure like this after they have had an opportunity for two or three months to investigate and consider various forms of government and formulate some regular system of rules or government for the Panama Canal zone.

The Senate has passed the Kittredge bill. This is hybrid in its nature, because, although it starts out from an imperialistic standpoint, it incorporates what is practically the bill of rights, thereby taking away with its left hand what it has given with its right. Before the House committee there were several bills. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING], a member of the committee, introduced a bill which is as thoroughly imperialistic in its tendencies as it was possible to devise. Out of the nine sections of the Lovering bill the six most important of them prescribe that the matters with which they deal shall be "subject to the approval of the President" or "under the direction of the President." The commissioners were to do nothing of their own volition, except possibly to have boiled eggs for breakfast if they saw fit. [Laughter.]

The necessity for legislation upon this subject at this time is very apparent. By the terms of the treaty the Republic of Panama gave to the United States the exclusive and perpetual sovereignty over this zone. There is absolutely nothing in this treaty to show what is to be done with the inhabitants of the zone, as has been the custom in similar treaties in the past—for example, in the cession of Louisiana in 1803, of Florida in 1819, and of Alaska in 1867. Therefore we are in doubt as to what laws now exist and are in force in the zone.

Either the laws of Panama are applicable, under which circumstances the Republic of Panama may still be legislating for our zone, or else, with the transfer of sovereignty, the laws of Panama were ipso facto extinguished and no law at all obtains in the unhappy zone. In view of this uncertainty it was and is evidently incumbent upon Congress to legislate immediately for the relief of the inhabitants of the zone and the protection of their property rights. Instead of doing this we are now invited by the committee to leave the whole matter open, confiding it to the discretion of the President.

I myself introduced a bill providing both for the construction of the canal and the government of the zone, and received the courtesy of a hearing before the committee. The purpose of my bill was to extend to the Panama Canal zone, in so far as they were applicable, the laws of the United States, the laws to which we are accustomed, and which we think the best in the world. I am conscious of the fact that it is necessary to have a strong right arm of government on the Panama Canal zone; but I fail to see in what respect the laws of the United States are weak or when they have failed to suppress disorder and to set up a stable form of government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not losing sight of the main object of the acquisition of the Panama zone—we took it simply for the purpose of building a canal. I do not desire to delay in any way the completion of that great work by prolonged disquisitions in Congress upon theories of government. But that is not necessary; it is not now necessary for us to conceive out of our own brains a new and original form of government; that was done for us many years ago by the founders of our Republic. All that we now need to do is to extend over the people of the Panama zone the broad ægis of the Constitution of the United States.

I am entirely conscious of the probability of the presence upon the zone of a congregation of turbulent and lawless peoples. Some of them will be imported from the negro population of Jamaica or from the class of Chinese coolies to labor upon the canal; others will flock thither from all quarters of the world—malefactors and jail birds, perhaps—hoping to have a finger in the $400,000,000 pie we are about to open down there.

It is therefore unquestionably necessary to establish a strong government and strong laws in the zone, but I am unable to understand wherein our own form of government is lacking. I do not mean to contend that the people of the canal zone are now fit for entire self-government or for the suffrage, or that they are able to understand the full significance of the jury system; but we should endeavor to give them now and immediately the fullest and most complete share of liberty and consideration which is possible under an adjustment of our own laws to their present necessities, instead of turning them over body and soul, bag and baggage, into the hands of a dictator.

The precedent for the bill under consideration as given by the committee is that of President Jefferson's action in 1803 in the acquisition of the Louisiana territory, when he governed it in the first year of its annexation in the manner and under the law now proposed to be applied to the Panama zone. This is now advanced as a reason why Democrats should vote for this measure. Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is no precedent, because at the time of the taking over of the Louisiana territory the many disputes between the settlers along the Ohio River and all up and down the Mississippi and the Spaniards at the mouth of the Mississippi River presaged a war between our country and Spain unless there should be a transfer of that territory to the United States.

In view of that fact, it was necessary to establish a military form of government—a despotic form of government—for a short time at least, in the Louisiana territory. There was an actual state of war at the time of our acquisition of the Philippines and of Porto Rico and of Cuba, but I have heard nobody assert that there is a state of war on the Panama canal zone or any prospect of war, and therefore I see no reason for the adoption by the committee of this bill, which has the appearance of despotism run mad. We are going down there at peace with the Panama Republic and with all the world, to perform a peaceful mission which will be observed with admiration and applause by every civilized nation on earth.

Mr. Speaker, this bill gives the President greater authority than almost any sovereign in this world, and although there are at the present time only four or five thousand people residing upon this zone, how do we know but that when he has once acquired this power the President will desire to continue to administer this zone despotically and extend his power there indefinitely?

I think we should be exceedingly careful lest a precedent be furnished in the House of Representatives in this matter upon which the Executive will in future depend. I suppose the President believes that we should be gratified and flattered that he has actually paused to invite an expression of opinion from the House in this matter, instead of legislating himself from the White House without our assistance, as he is now accustomed to do. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Another point to which I desire to call the attention of the House is that upon the eve of a Presidential election this will create a power in the President to appoint some six, seven, or eight hundred men to offices. General Davis, a member of the Canal

Commission, when he appeared before the House committee, took occasion to propose a budget and suggest a provisional form of government for the zone; and he made an estimate—quite a reasonable one, I may say—that there would be needed some 278 officials, at salaries ranging up to $5,000, and some 800 of a minor class, showing from that point of view how truly this may be called an "Administration measure."

The sum of money thus to be dispensed in salaries, according to General Davis, amounts to about $600,000 a year. This budget is very carefully and intelligently prepared by an officer who is entirely familiar with the government of tropical countries, and it is highly probable that his estimate of the amount of patronage which will thus be made over to the President is reasonably correct. Think of it—$600,000 more worth of salaries in appointive offices! Truly a pleasing prospect, especially on the eve of a Presidential election! Many a would-be officeholder will smile with satisfaction and gleeful anticipation of the feast about to be spread before him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before I close I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that amendments to this bill should be made providing for an orderly and businesslike construction of the canal itself. My own bill on this subject (H. R. 13671) provides both for the government of the zone and the construction of the canal. The Spooner Act, under which the President is to construct the canal, will, without further legislation, give the new commission, consisting of seven men, the power and the opportunity to expend, without any regulation, without making any contract, without asking any bids or receiving any, the very greatest sum of money that this or any other Government has ever undertaken to expend for any public purpose.

It is understood that the President and the commission do not desire to be hampered in any way by Congress in this enormous undertaking. I should rather suppose that the commissioners themselves would demand legislation on this subject to protect them in their vast responsibility. Upon this very point my bill proposes strict regulations, taken from the rapid-transit act and the aqueduct act of the city of New York, which would provide an accurate and orderly method of procedure, affording certainty and security not alone to our Government and our people in this vast expenditure of money, but to contractors and business men intent upon undertaking the material part of this construction. This should be accomplished now and here, instead of leaving the immense and unlimited power in the President and the commission. Then, and then only, all persons who go down to that zone, whether as laborers or employers of labor, peddlers or storekeepers, travelers or commercial agents, would be certain that they might proceed upon their occupations and embark upon their business secure in the certainty and impartiality, inspired by the majesty, and confident in the justice of the laws of these United States. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, while this is a very brief bill, we might reasonably have expected that the gentleman from New York would read it. If he had taken the trouble to read it, he would not have been disturbed by the fear of extension of autocratic power on the part of the President, for by limitation, clear and explicit, this act will expire with the end of this Congress. This is only a temporary measure, and was adopted because the committee did not have the information and could not acquire the information that would be necessary for the establishment of a permanent government.

The gentleman from New York favored the committee with a very elaborate bill for the government of that zone, and yet he did that without knowing where the zone is. Its boundaries have never been determined. It is to consist of a strip of country extending 6 miles on each side of the line of the canal. It is absolutely necessary to establish that line before we can know where our jurisdiction should extend. That has not yet been done.

No one of the commission knows where the canal is to be located. There are a few places, two or three places, where nature has fixed the line, but there may be a variation of 5 or 6 miles on the northern shore and 2 or 3 miles on the southern shore. Nobody yet knows. The gentleman gave us a very elaborate bill for the government of the people of that zone, and yet no one gave us any information, nor could we find even approximately how many people there are upon that zone. No one knows.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not true that Admiral Walker stated, and his suggestion was supported by that of General Davis, that there are to-day four or five thousand people in the zone now and that there will be subsequently from eighty to ninety thousand people?

Mr. HEPBURN. They stated that there were somewhere between 2,000 and 5,000 people, not including the cities. They do not know how many there are, and it was a mere guess upon their part how many of those people, are residents there or how many of the 2,000 or 5,000 are simply transients, called there as laborers. Nobody knows, or at least nobody whom we were able to get before us could tell, and yet some of these gentlemen we called before us are members of that commission, and two of them at least were members of the old commission.

Now, no one knows just where our rights extend with reference to the cities of Colon and Panama. We have a mixed jurisdiction there. Sovereignty was not yielded to the United States over those cities. No one knew anything at all about the laws that they have now—their judicial system. We were not even able to get a copy of the Spanish law or Colombian law that is in force there. So far as we could discover there is but one copy of that law in the United States, at least that is in the English language.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will my friend permit an inquiry?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield for an inquiry; yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My friend states that they know nothing of the laws of this zone.

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And when we acquired it the existing laws continued, and do at this moment. Now, this law still continues the laws down there about which we know nothing. Is not that a great reason why we should legislate now?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think these laws will necessarily control there. This bill, if it becomes a law, authorizes the entire suspension of those laws.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Upon acquiring this territory the laws remained as when we acquired it. How are you going to overcome it when our Constitution and laws do not go there now—when our laws do not follow the flag?

Mr. HEPBURN. What of that?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We must go to work and move about and have our being on that zone under laws about which we know nothing.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let us see, Mr. Speaker, what that argument is and how exceedingly wise it is. The gentleman said we should legislate now because there are laws in existence there about which we know nothing.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman said we do not know anything about those laws.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; do you?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then let us make some for it; let us make some laws we do know something about.

Mr. HEPBURN. Have you knowledge about the wants of those people? Have you any knowledge about the systems they have been accustomed to? Do you know anything about whether they are fit for jury duties, for instance? Do you know anything about it? Why, the gentleman from Tennessee is as ignorant as the rest of us, and yet his proposition is that we go to work and legislate upon a subject we have no possible knowledge of and can not at this time secure information about.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it possible that we have no knowledge about the laws down there after we have expended a million dollars, as we have, in finding something out about it?

Mr. HEPBURN. We have not attempted by the expenditure of any sum to find out anything about the laws of that country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have not made many laws down there, I grant.

Mr. HEPBURN. We have expended a million dollars for the purpose of discovering a canal route. Can not the gentleman differentiate between establishing a canal route and establishing a code? [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We had a law down there that we helped to make, and the President rode roughshod over it, and I take it for granted that we had better not have any more.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yielded to the gentleman for the purpose of asking me a question, and not for the purpose of abusing the Chief Executive of his Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did not mean to be personal or offensive to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], and he knows that.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, no; I know that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not make any further apology. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, that is simply a matter of taste on the part of the gentleman. If it is his idea of the best standards of American citizenship that a man should stand as a brawler, constantly railing against the Chief Executive of his Government, then that is a matter of taste in him.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I always believe that a man should obey the law; it does not make any difference who he is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman should address the Chair.

Mr. HEPBURN. In this condition of want of information—and we are diligent in striving to acquire information—we sent for those persons who were supposed would have knowledge.

We called before us Admiral Walker, who is supposed to have spent many years of his life recently upon the Isthmus, who is supposed to have studied all of those questions.

We sent for an eminent educator, who is also a member of that commission, and who likewise has been receiving many thousands of dollars for familiarizing himself with the conditions existing there, but they were entirely unable to give us any light whatever, and I think they ought not to be criticised for that. They went there simply to examine into certain of the physical features of that country in connection with a great engineering work. They were not sent there to study economic questions, and therefore they did not do it. Another difficulty that presents itself was that of raising revenue for this territory, to be expended in its government. We were not able to learn whether there were any persons there who were in a condition to pay taxes.

We could not learn as to what amount of taxable property there was. We were not able to ascertain to the satisfaction of the committee as to just what our rights would be with reference to the customs duties in the two cities of Panama and Colon. We were not able to determine, and I think that no other gentleman in this House knows anything about the matter, as to what taxes might be levied, what the revenues from them would be, and therefore in this absence of knowledge we resorted to one of the great precedents of the country.

There was just such an emergency and situation as this in 1803 respecting the Louisiana country. It is not to be differentiated from this condition by the pretended excuse of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON]. No such conditions existed there as to justify this arbitrary, tyrannical exercise of power, if it was that. There was no military situation in 1803 in the Louisiana country whatever different from the situation that exists this day and has for the last year existed in the State of Panama. If there is any reason for the exercise of military power in either period, the stronger reason exists now for the exercise of military power and the strong arm of government here on the zone of the canal.

The people that came to us under the treaty of 1803 were civilized people, perhaps as fully enlightened as were any people upon this continent. They were closely compacted within the limits of a single city, a great seaport town. Even then New Orleans was noted throughout the world because of its commerce, and every reason that justified the act of the 31st of October, 1803, justifies the enactment of this law. I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have not abandoned the hope that they may be able later on to bring to the attention of this House a bill of proper provisions for the government of that territory. In a short time there will return to this country at least a part of the commission charged with the construction of the canal.

They have gone there not alone for the purpose of commencing their labors with regard to this great work of construction, but they have gone there carrying in their minds the necessities for civil government, the expectation that civil government will be imposed upon them, the duty of studying the people, studying the laws and customs of the people, familiarizing themselves with the possibilities that always enter into all governments.

And when they have come to us, as they will in a few months, they will be able so to enlighten this subject that we hope, from the bill which the gentleman from New York has offered us, from that of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING], and from the Senate bill, we may be able to frame such a measure as will meet the approval of this House.

Mr. Speaker, if no other gentleman desires to speak, I will ask the previous question.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I shall be glad if my colleague on the committee will yield to me.

Mr. HEPBURN. How much time?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Five minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, the object of the committee in reporting this bill was to do as little as possible at this time because of the dearth of information in regard to the needs of the canal strip. The bill which has been reported continues in force by its terms only until the end of the Fifty-eighth Congress. That leaves the matter entirely open for us to take it up at the next session.

I believe this bill is entitled to the support of the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. I now renew the call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CURTIS). The first question is upon agreeing to the amendment reported by the House committee as a substitute for the Senate bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCES OF NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD, ETC.

Mr. LACEY. I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 4769) validating certain conveyances of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company. The conference report and the statement of the House conferees are published in this morning's RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CURTIS). The Chair understands that the gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the statement of the House conferees be read in lieu of the conference report. The Chair hears no objection.

The statement was read.

Mr. LACEY. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

AKRON, STERLING AND NORTHERN RAILROAD, ALASKA.

Mr. HAMILTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 114) to extend the time for the construction of the Akron, Sterling and Northern Railroad in Alaska.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the time within which the Akron, Sterling and Northern Railroad Company is authorized to construct its line of railroad from the head of Valdez Bay, in the Territory of Alaska; thence extending up Lowe River 12 miles to Keystone Canyon; thence for a distance of 3 miles through said canyon, on the west side thereof; thence through Dutch Valley a distance of 4 miles; thence 13 miles along the benches on the west side of Lowe River drainage, through Thompson Pass, as definitely located by said company, be and the same is hereby, extended for two years from and after the passage of this resolution.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF CENSUS LAW.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Census be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3292) amendatory of an act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902, and that the bill be taken up for immediate consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That there shall be a collection of the statistics of the births and deaths in registration areas for the year 1902, and annually thereafter, the date for which shall be obtained only from and restricted to such registration records of such States and municipalities as in the discretion of the Director possess records affording satisfactory data in necessary detail, the compensation for the transcription of which shall not exceed 4 cents for each birth or death reported; or a minimum compensation of $25 may be allowed, in the discretion of the Director, in States or cities registering less than 500 deaths or 500 births during the preceding year."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire whether this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The bill which I am asking to call up is a Senate bill. The House Committee on the Census reported unanimously a bill identical in terms with this, and that House bill is now pending on the Calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then this is substantially a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I have no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. As I understand, this bill simply provides that the Director of the Census may secure certain data from the county or municipal authorities in the States instead of having the data collected by employees of the Census Office.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; where the registration is required by law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I ask unanimous consent that the word "date," in line 9, be changed to "data." There is a typographical error in printing the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want to amend, so as to send the bill back to the Senate?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; I do not want to do that.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman amends the bill, it will have to go back.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not want to put it in such an attitude as that. The officer will understand what it means, and therefore I will withdraw my request.

The Committee on Census was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CRUMPACKER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. CRUMPACKER, the corresponding House bill (H. R. 10652) was ordered to lie on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT MEMPHIS, TENN.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2866) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.," approved April 24, 1888.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask, has this bill been unanimously indorsed by the committee?

Mr. MACON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The minority members have voted for it?

Mr. MACON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill as amended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.," approved April 24, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows, namely:

"That the Kansas City and Memphis Railway and Bridge Company, a corporation created and organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, be, and the same are hereby, authorized and empowered to erect, construct, and maintain a bridge over the Mississippi River from or near the town of Hopefield, in the State of Arkansas, to or near the taxing district of Shelby County, commonly known as the city of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee.

"Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of passenger and freight railway trains and wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and, at the option of the company by which it may be built, for foot passengers: Provided, That said bridge company shall charge and receive such reasonable rates of toll for the passage of railway trains of all kinds, for the passage of passengers traveling upon said railway trains, for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot passengers crossing said bridge as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That such reasonable rates of toll so approved by the Secretary of War shall not exceed the sum of 25 cents for each passenger over said bridge by passengers upon railway trains crossing the same."

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MACON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSING STATES FOR CERTAIN EXPENDITURES.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 1343, with amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1343) to amend an act approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain,' approved July 8, 1898," and so forth, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain,' approved July 8, 1898, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking therefrom the words "nineteen hundred and two" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "nineteen hundred and six;" so that the same shall read:

"SEC. 6. That all claims for reimbursement under this act or the act approved July 8, 1898, shall be presented in itemized form to the Treasury Department on or before January 1, 1906, or be forever barred."

SEC. 2. That any claim or any item of a claim heretofore presented under the provisions of said acts approved July 8, 1898, and March 3, 1899, respectively, and disallowed by any Auditor, the Comptroller, or any other officer of the Treasury Department, shall, on application of the governor or other duly authorized officer or agent of the State or Territory, made on or before the 1st day of January, 1906, be reopened, considered, audited, and settled anew by said officers of the Treasury Department in accordance with the provisions of said acts.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the words "SEC. 2" and insert the following:

"That where the governor of any State or Territory has furnished military transportation, or has purchased or authorized the purchase of supplies, or incurred expenses for services rendered, and which purchases of supplies and expenses for military transportation and services rendered have been certified by the governor of such State or Territory as necessary, just, and reasonable for the organization, maintenance, transportation, and comfort of troops raised by him and accepted into the service of the United States Army in the said war with Spain, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow in the settlement of claims for reimbursement now on file in the office of the Auditor for the War Department, such items or parts thereof as have been disallowed in the consideration of said claims, for the reason that they appear to have been for stores furnished or expenses incurred or transportation furnished after the troops raised had been mustered into the service of the United States, and the certificate of the governor of any such State or Territory that such expenses were incurred in good faith, for the sole purpose of aiding the United States in the raising, organization, transportation, and equipment of troops, shall be held to be sufficient to authorize the final settlement and payment in full of such claims for reimbursement."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MAHON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. Well, a report from the Committee on Accounts, or any privileged matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the regular order.

BALLOTS IN CASE OF BONYNGE V. SHAFROTH.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 306.

Whereas in the contested-election case of Bonynge against Shafroth, from the First Congressional district of the State of Colorado, certain ballots and poll books purporting to have been cast and used, respectively, at the election held in said district on November 4, 1902, were, under stipulation of the parties to said contested-election case, submitted to the Committee on Elections No. 2 of the House of Representatives as part of the record in said case and for the purposes of examination and inspection by said committee; and

Whereas the said committee did, under authority of the House, employ Mr. D. N. Carvalho, as a handwriting expert, to make certain examinations of the handwriting on the said ballots and in the said poll books; and

Whereas the said expert did report to the said committee that approximately 6,000 of the ballots so submitted were written by a few persons and not by individual voters; and

Whereas the said poll books disclosed that the names of the alleged voters contained in many of the said poll books were written by some person or persons other than the election officers in the districts and precincts wherein it is alleged said poll books were used; and

Whereas the said examination of the said ballots and poll books and the record in the said case establish that gross frauds and crimes were committed at the said election; and

Whereas justice demands that those who were guilty of said frauds and crimes should be prosecuted and punished under the laws of the State of Colorado; and

Whereas the said ballots and poll books will be required in the prosecution of any of said parties; and

Whereas the said ballots and poll books are now in the possession of the Clerk of this House: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to transmit by express the said ballots and poll books, together with a certified copy of these resolutions, to Hon. H. A. Lindsley, the district attorney of the second judicial district of the State of Colorado, for such action in the premises as the facts and law may justify.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the first paragraph of the preamble and insert the following:

"Whereas the examination of the said ballots and poll books by a subcommittee of said Elections Committee and by an expert in handwriting, employed under authority of a resolution of the House, established the fact that gross frauds and crimes were committed at and in relation to the said election and in connection with the said ballots and poll books; and

"Whereas the said ballots and poll books are now in possession of the Clerk of this House; and

"Whereas the House is informed that one of the judges of the second judicial district of Colorado has directed a grand jury to inquire into frauds committed at and in relation to said election, in the prosecution of which inquiry the presence of the said ballots and poll books may be necessary; and

"Whereas the said ballots and poll books are no longer necessary for the use of the said Elections Committee or of this House: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to hold the said ballots and poll books subject to the order of the district attorney of the second judicial district of Colorado, or any of the judges of the court of the said district, to promptly notify the said district attorney and judges that he does so hold the said ballots and poll books, and upon the receipt of a request by the said district attorney or any of the said judges to forward the said ballots and poll books by express in a sealed package or in sealed packages to the said district attorney or judges, as the case may be."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, it requires but a word in explanation of this resolution. These ballots were brought here in the contested-election case of Bonynge v. Shafroth. Now, under proceedings in the criminal court in Colorado, their presence is required by the district attorney, who has sent a telegram to the Clerk of the House asking that he return these ballots to him. The Clerk feels that he is not at liberty to do so without authority of the House. Hence the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, there has been so much confusion and disorder that it is impossible to hear, and I have not caught the drift or the extent of the bill. I hate to ask the gentleman to repeat what he has said.

Mr. OLMSTED. I will state very briefly that this is a resolution to permit the Clerk of the House to hold, subject to the order of the district attorney of the second judicial district of Colorado, certain ballots which by agreement of the parties to the contested-election case of Bonynge v. Shafroth were brought here for the use of the House and the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman who is the proper legal custodian of these ballots after the House of Representatives have finished with them?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will state that, so far as the State of Colorado is concerned, I find upon an investigation, or the committee finds upon investigation of the law, that there is probably no officer there whose duty it is to care for or preserve these ballots more than one year after the election. Now, this period has expired. They are here in the custody of the Clerk of the House, and he has been called upon by the authorities of that judicial district, the judge of the court and the district attorney, whose telegram I hold in my hand, to send them to him; but the Clerk of the House has no authority to do so without this measure.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I raise the point of order that this is not a privileged question, and I want to state why, in my opinion, it is not privileged. The matter of election of a man to this House is privileged, and the charge of the ballot——

Mr. OLMSTED. I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order, coming after debate, is too late.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I reserved the point to find out what the bill was. No man can make a point of order until he knows what he is to make the point of order on.

Mr. OLMSTED. I did not know that the gentleman had reserved the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I make the point of order. I could not make it before until I knew what the bill was. Now, Mr. Speaker, my point of order is this——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that this matter is not privileged, as the Chair gathers.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Chair is trying to get at the question of facts. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was recognized, and he rose and made his report, and then proceeded, as the Chair recollects, to state the effect of the resolution, explaining the same The gentleman did not ask for unanimous consent. He rose, the Chair supposed—without deciding or ruling as to whether it is privileged or not—the Chair supposed that it was privileged; but, without that question being raised, the gentleman proceeded to debate. So far as the Chair knows or heard, the gentleman's point of order was not reserved or made until after debate had been had. The Chair makes these remarks as to what his understanding of the situation is, so as to get at the question of facts, so that we can intelligently discuss, or the House can discuss, and consider the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, just as soon as I possibly could I asked the gentleman to explain what the bill was.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman permit? At that time I had already made my explanation and concluded my remarks, and at the request of the gentleman I began to repeat them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the facts they are these: The title of the bill was read. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was proceeding to explain what the bill intended to do—not to debate the bill at all, but explaining what the bill was. Just as soon as I could I explained to the Chair that I had been unable to hear, in the confusion of the House, what the bill was.

The gentleman then proceeded to explain it so that I could understand. I then raised the point of order that this bill would require unanimous consent and was not a privileged bill. Now, then, the point to decide right now is not whether it was a privileged bill or not—I am prepared to argue that and to show that it is not a privileged bill—but the point right now is as to whether this matter has been debated. Now, I submit that in all fairness and ordinary common-sense intendment the bill has not been debated at all. The gentleman was undertaking to tell what the bill was so that the House might determine whether it required unanimous consent or not. Whether it is a matter of privilege is one thing, and whether it has been debated is a totally different thing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi he was paying attention the best he could to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and all others. He has, however, just inquired at the reporters' desk and is confirmed as to what took place as stated by the Chair—that is, the gentleman rose and reported the resolution; the Chair supposed it was the privileged resolution, and the gentleman proceeded, after the same was reported, to make a statement touching it, and after he had made the statement the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. While he was making it.

The SPEAKER (continuing). The gentleman from Mississippi asked touching the bill, not reserving the point of order even at that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I could not reserve the point of order. I did not know whether this was a bridge bill or what it was.

Mr. OLMSTED. If I may be permitted, that is the reason why he should have reserved the point of order until he found out and if I may add——

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAY. If this is a privileged question and is now before the House as such, then a demand for the regular order would be overridden by a privileged question. In order to test the matter, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. We are now upon the regular order, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the gentlemen would even make the point of order against this resolution, if they understood it.

Mr. HAY. As I understand it, the gentleman from Mississippi demanded the regular order, and the Chair permitted the gentleman to offer what he called a privileged resolution.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I did not ask for unanimous consent. I did not state any reason why there should be unanimous consent. I presented it as a privileged resolution. It was read, not by its title, but in its entirety. I debated it until I thought I had given sufficient reason for its passage and concluded my remarks, whereupon the gentleman from Mississippi asked me for a further explanation, and when I was making that further explanation he made his point of order. It is well settled that a point of order can not be entertained after debate has commenced.

Now, I think if gentlemen will indulge me just a moment they will not want to make the point of order in any event. There are no politics in this. The court which has directed the inquiry is composed entirely of Democratic judges. The district attorney who has telegraphed for these ballots is a Democrat, and this resolution simply proposes to put these ballots in the hands of our clerk subject to the call of that Democratic district attorney. Unless the gentlemen have some objection to the prosecution by Democratic officials of those who are supposed to be criminals or charged with crime, I can not see what objection there should be to this. It did not originate, I will say, in the committee at all. It originated in the courts of Colorado.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. MADDOX. Why did you not send these papers back to the parties from whom you got them?

Mr. OLMSTED. We have no authority to send them back; they are in the custody of the Clerk of the House, and we are now asking for that authority.

Mr. MADDOX. Why did you not get authority to send them back to the person from whom you got them instead of holding them here?

Mr. OLMSTED. That person is no longer authorized or required under the laws of the State to preserve them more than one year after the election which, occurred in 1902, and, therefore, if we sent them to him he would be entitled, if he chose, to destroy them, and their usefulness for any purpose would be gone,

Mr. TALBOTT. Well, is not anybody else authorized to receive them?

Mr. OLMSTED. The district attorney will be authorized if this resolution is passed.

Mr. TALBOTT. By Congress, but not by the laws of Colorado.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, that is for the laws of Colorado and the courts of that State to determine.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, if the law out there authorizes their destruction, why ought not they to be destroyed now?

Mr. OLMSTED. Because the judge of that court has requested them and the district attorney of that court has telegraphed for them, and that is the safe place to put them. What becomes of them then is beyond our interest or control.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to argue the question that this is not a matter of privilege, because it has passed the stage of privilege so far as the House of Representatives is concerned; but if the Chair rules from the Chair's understanding of what actually took place, as a matter of fact, that I was too late in making that point, my physical defects are such that I am prepared to believe that when the Chair makes an honest ruling of that sort the Chair heard better than I did. I can only say that at the moment my attention was called to it I attempted to inform myself by inquiry, and as soon as I got the information that informed me that it was not a privileged question that moment I made the point of order.

Now, then, the gentleman has proceeded to argue upon the merits of the resolution, and I may perhaps be permitted, in consequence of that fact, to state this: That I know nothing about the merits of the resolution; I have no information concerning it; I only know this, that the House of Representatives has certain rules that make "privileged" "matters affecting elections." I know that these ballots no longer affect an election in the House of Representatives, and I do know, furthermore, that if there be any State authority in whose custody these ballots ought to be, no resolution of the House of Representatives ought to interfere with the sovereignty of the State and the State laws in that respect after the House has used the ballots for the only purpose that the House had any right to use them, viz, the purpose of determining whether A or B was elected to a seat in the House of Representatives.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am informed, as far as partisanship is concerned, by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT], who is upon the committee, that the demand for this custody comes from a Democratic district attorney, so that if there is any partisanship in it it is a Democratic district attorney who wants the papers; but that is not the question here. The question here is as to whether this is a privileged matter or not. If this is not a privileged matter, then it requires unanimous consent, and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] will ask unanimous consent I shall not object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. We have the same sort of condition occasionally in all of the election committees. If it is not a privileged matter to dispose of the ballots which have to come here, how would the gentleman have the Elections Committee proceed?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They proceed to a conclusion and a determination and determine that A or B is elected, and after that they are through.

Mr. MANN. I know, but the ballots must be disposed of, and without being privileged the ballots might never be returned.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. How are they ordinarily disposed of?

Mr. OLMSTED. They are filed by the Clerk.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That answers the gentleman's question. Now, if the gentleman will ask unanimous consent, there will be no opposition.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit one question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But what I dislike are things that require unanimous consent to come up presenting themselves as privileged.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would not the gentleman consider it privileged for us to ask to have these ballots sent here?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Prior to the determination of who was elected, yes; it is clearly privileged.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would it not be a matter of privilege to send them back after using them?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No. After that the jurisdiction of the committee is stopped.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. Certain papers necessary to be inspected to determine the right of a Member to his seat in the House seem to be on file with an Elections Committee. It is clearly a question of privilege to obtain the papers. Perhaps it is a question of privilege, having obtained them, to dispose of them, but it is not necessary for the Chair to rule as to that. What the Chair may rule, if it was necessary to make a ruling, it is not necessary to state. The Chair dislikes to make rulings unless it is necessary to do so. We make enough precedents—sometimes mistaken ones—as it is. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania rose in his place and reported the resolution, which was read at the Clerk's desk, and proceeded to discuss it. Then, without a point of order being reserved, he again stated the purpose of the resolution, and then the point of order was made. It does seem to the Chair that even if the resolution were subject to a point of order, that point must be reserved or made at the very inception of the matter. Therefore, without passing upon the question whether the resolution is privileged, it seems to the Chair that it is before the House; and if it were necessary to make it any more before the House, we are informed that unanimous consent can be had. So that, after all, the resolution is here, and it seems to the Chair the House can act touching the matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in justice to the Speaker and, perhaps, in justice to myself I want to state that at the time this matter was brought up three or four gentlemen were talking with me, and my head is ringing with quinine; but what I have stated is what I thought I heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not doubt——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will ask, if the gentleman will permit, unanimous consent that the matter be considered now.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not yield for that. I think the matter is already before the House.

Mr. BOWIE. I think that the record will show that the gentleman from Pennsylvania did himself, not longer ago than five or ten minutes, ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. It escaped the attention of the Chair if he did. As the Chair supposed, the gentleman from Pennsylvania stated that he rose to a privileged matter.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman will permit me to say that unanimous consent was dispensed with and made impossible by the action of the gentleman from Mississippi, who called for the regular order, whereupon I presented this privileged resolution.

Mr. BOWIE. My recollection is very clear that something of that sort happened during the discussion of that very question.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I think this matter is sufficiently understood. This is simply a proposition to return these ballots and put them in the custody of the court and the district attorney of Colorado for such purposes as may be necessary.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes, sir; for a moment.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I thought the resolution went further than has been stated. I thought it tried to go back and establish the fact that certain great frauds had been committed. May I have the resolution reported again?

Mr. OLMSTED. The preamble sets forth that the ballots are returned for the determination of election frauds now under the investigation of the grand jury called by the judge of that court for the consideration of this and other matters.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If we are simply going to return these ballots for the proper use of the court, what is the necessity for this House making a record about something which it does not know? For the ballots did not come before the House. Why make a record declaring that those ballots disclose the fact that there have been grave frauds, etc.? Why incorporate that in the resolution? I understood the resolution to go much further than has been stated. I should like to have it reported again.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the substitute resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to hold the said ballots and poll books subject to the order of the district attorney of the second judicial district of Colorado, or any of the judges of the court of the said district, to promptly notify the said district attorney and judges that he does so hold the said ballots and poll books, and upon the receipt of a request by the said district attorney or any of the said judges to forward the said ballots and poll books by express in a sealed package or in sealed packages to the said district attorney or judges, as the case may be.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. For a question.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I should like to have permission to move to strike out, after the word "House," in the last line of page 2, these words:

establish the fact that gross frauds and crimes were committed at and in relation to said election and in connection with the said ballots and poll books.

It seems to me those words ought to be stricken out of the resolution. If I have the floor for that purpose, I make the motion to strike out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not yield for that purpose. I suggest to the gentleman that he is reading from a portion of the preamble that the committee has already stricken out.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I may not be reading from the proper preamble.

Mr. OLMSTED. What the gentleman read is not in the preamble at all at this time.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. It seems to me that these ballots ought to go back with no more strength and no less than they left there, and that portion of the preamble that alleges established fraud ought to go out of this resolution.

Mr. BONYNGE. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for three minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado for three minutes.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, as the author of this resolution, I desire to say a few words in explanation of it and the necessity for its immediate consideration and passage.

It is perhaps proper, first, that I should state to the House how these ballots came before the Committee on Elections. During the taking of the testimony in support of the charges filed in the notice of contest, these ballots, under a stipulation entered into between the contestant and the contestee, were placed in separate packages and sent to the Committee on Elections for consideration in connection with the voluminous testimony taken in support of the contest. During the examination of those ballots the House, by a resolution, duly authorized the employment of an expert to examine them, to determine certain facts which were charged in the notice of contest, and in support of which a vast amount of testimony was taken.

In this connection I will state briefly what those matters are. Under the form of ballot which we have in Colorado each voter is required to write at the top of the ballot the name of the party ticket, if he votes a straight party ticket. It was charged that previous to the election and subsequent to the election these ballots had been fraudulently prepared with a certain party designation. It was supposed that the examination of the ballots would demonstrate whether or not the testimony given to prove those charges was true or not. This expert was employed for that purpose. As the result of his examination it was demonstrated that out of about 9,000 ballots that were examined there were very nearly 6,000 that were fraudulent, having the party designation appearing thereon written by eight or ten persons instead of by individual voters.

Some time ago a grand jury was called for the purpose of examining or investigating this matter. For certain reasons which it is not necessary for me now to explain that grand jury was dismissed. Within the past ten days a judge of the district court of the second judicial district, in which the city of Denver is located, has called a special grand jury for the purpose of investigating these frauds, charged to have been committed at that election. The grand jury is now in session. Under the laws of the State of Colorado the statute of limitations will run against a number of the offenses committed at that election, early in the month of May. Consequently it is exceedingly important that there should be prompt action in reference to this matter.

The county clerk, who was the original custodian of these ballots, has no longer any official duty whatever with them. Under the laws of Colorado the ballots would have been destroyed in November, 1903, had it not been for the stipulation which the parties to the contest entered into and which preserved these ballots for investigation by the Committee on Elections. Those ballots are here. There is no further need for them so far as the House of Representatives is concerned. There is a crying necessity for them in the city of Denver before the grand jury now in session.

The only purpose of this resolution is to see that these ballots are brought before this grand jury, summoned, I may say, Mr. Speaker, by a Democratic sheriff, presided over by a Democratic judge, with a Democratic district attorney to prosecute the offenses. And so I say to my friends upon the other side that there is certainly no partisanship in this matter, at least so far as we are concerned; and I feel certain that with this explanation all the Members upon the other side of the House will join with us in passing the resolution unanimously. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has yielded time to his side of the House. I hope he will yield some time on this side.

Mr. OLMSTED. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire time?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. How much?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. About four or five minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I should like two minutes after the gentleman from Mississippi has concluded.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. BONYNGE] has not only confessed, but has proven, that we on this side can not possibly be actuated by any partisan motive in this affair. From his statement there is a Democratic judge and a Democratic grand jury and a Democratic district attorney that want these ballots.

Mr. BONYNGE. I did not say a Democratic grand jury. I do not know the politics of the members of the grand jury. I said a Democratic sheriff.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman used this rather cunning language, "A grand jury summoned by a Democratic sheriff," with the intent to leave that impression. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Republican side.] He said, "A grand jury summoned by a Democratic sheriff."

Mr. BONYNGE. That is a fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And I purposely said, "A Democratic grand jury," so as to hear the gentleman's explanation of that rather cunning way of putting it.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment? Did the gentleman from Mississippi say that he purposely misquoted my language?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, I purposely quoted what you intended to leave as an impression upon the House. [Cries of "Oh!" on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the House again to the fact that in debate it is against the rules of sound parliamentary usage to impugn the motives of Members.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the protection of the Chair, but really I do not think I needed it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to state to the gentleman from Mississippi, for whom he has very great respect personally, and for his ability, that the Chair thought it his duty to call attention to the rule, and did it, not with a view to reflecting upon the gentleman, but because it was his duty to call attention to the rule as much as if any other Member of the minority or of the majority indulged in similar language, without intending to violate the rule, as the Chair is quite sure the gentleman from Mississippi did not intend to do.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I hope the Speaker will not understand me as having reflected on him for having left undone his duty. Whenever I catch a Republican Speaker doing his duty then there is nothing in the world for me to reflect upon him for. In the case of this particular Speaker, I find him always engaged in a strenuous effort to do his duty, and he generally succeeds. [Loud applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, the point that I want to make here is this: We are shut off from making the point that it is not a privileged question, because the Speaker says I made the point too late.

I called for the regular order a moment ago. The Chair announced that the regular order was "privileged questions." The gentleman then brings this forward as within the regular order, because, as he says, it is a privileged question. Whether correct or incorrect, I am convinced that it is not a privileged question. There is no politics in this matter, as I understand it. Frauds out in that district which were committed were confessed upon this floor in a very exceptional manner by the gentleman from Colorado, lately departed, much to the regret of everybody here, from Washington political life—Mr. Shafroth.

But to the point. It is doubtful whether it is a privileged question or not, or a question demanding unanimous consent that it might be considered; and I said that if it were stated that way—viz, as a manner of unanimous consent—nobody upon this side of the House would object to its immediate consideration. Why was it, if there was no effort to instill partisanship into a nonpartisan question, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania objected to the question being considered by unanimous consent as well as having it considered, doubtfully, as a privileged question.

Mr. OLMSTED rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Wait a moment. I say this is a "doubtful" question, because the Chair refrained from ruling and refused to rule upon the question as to whether it was a privileged question or not; properly perhaps, as an obiter dictum, that the point of order had come too late. Now, why? Had not I called in good faith for the regular order; and if there be a doubt as to whether this is the regular order, why not let this matter be considered under unanimous consent. And if the gentleman will permit, I will again ask unanimous consent that this question be submitted to the immediate consideration of the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. We are considering it now.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. "Considering it now," improperly, and upon the technical basis that I was too late in making the point of order.

I desire to say that there is not a parliamentarian on that side—now, I am not a parliamentarian, and the Speaker never said a better thing than that which he said the other day, using language which I scarcely comprehend [laughter], that the skilled gentleman to his right could give me peanuts and potatoes, or some other term, and that he could give the Speaker the same article in the same quantity, and still have an unexhausted fount of information upon parliamentary questions. [Renewed laughter.]

But the gentleman from Minnesota is a parliamentarian. I charge him with it now. [Laughter.] I have heard him confess it. [Laughter.] And if I could swear him now, and put him upon honor and upon oath, I would wager ten to one that the gentleman from Minnesota would agree——

Mr. TAWNEY and others. Sixteen to one.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; sixteen to one.

That after the House of Representatives had settled a contested-election case, which was a privileged question, which was privileged because it was an election case and because it was contested, after it had considered all matters "affecting the election" of a Member of this House, and had arrived at a conclusion, that the House of Representatives was then functus officio as regards anything that might be done in a State with regard to that election. I am almost tempted, notwithstanding the gentleman's partisanship, to summon him to his feet now for a decisive answer—"yes" or "no."

Mr. TAWNEY. On what proposition?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Upon the proposition I have just submitted.

Mr. TAWNEY. That this is in order or out of order?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Whether or not, after the House of Representatives has reached a conclusion in a contested-election case—has given its judgment—has passed upon every question affecting the election in so far as the House could pass upon it—whether other matters not germane to the question of the election or nonelection of the contestant or contestee were not matters that the State and not Congress is charged with?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Ah, he was just about to answer right, Mr. Speaker, when you cut him off. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I just want to make an observation on the question of whether this is a privileged report. As chairman of one of the Election Committees it is quite necessary, and some thought has been given to this subject.

To my mind it is idle to say that the Committee on Elections can bring before the House a resolution about the contested-election case and bring papers before the committee from States far away by compulsion and then when the case is decided can not obtain the action of the House in order to return the papers. A very statement of the case is sufficient.

The Committee on Elections comes before the House with a resolution requiring, as we did from our committee, the officer in charge in California to bring to this House the ballots in the case, and it seems to be nonsense to me to say that the committee can not come before the House and ask authority to return the ballots to the proper official in the State from which they came. A mere statement, it seems——

Mr. BOWIE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the gentleman is discussing a question which has already been decided by the Chair.

Mr. PAYNE. That comes pretty late.

Mr. MANN. Even, Mr. Speaker, if I was discussing the question I make the observation because I did not wish it to go without denial that the gentleman from Mississippi could say to the House that the Committee on Elections was without power to obtain and return ballots and other papers necessary to a decision in a contested-election case.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add just a word in reply to the question the gentleman from Mississippi directed to me to know why I did not, when he suggested it, yield the privileged position which this resolution had before the House and agree to his proposition to submit it to unanimous consent. I will say simply that I admire his leadership, and that if I were upon that side of the Chamber I should follow him implicitly, as the majority over there usually does, yet I observe that there are some obstreperous soldiers in his camp who do not always obey his command. One of them might have broken loose at that time and made an objection and this resolution would then have lost its place before the House.

Furthermore, I am unwilling to concede that this resolution loses its privileged character because the contestee voluntarily gave up his seat in this House and the contestant was by resolution, unanimously adopted, declared to have been duly elected. That did not necessarily conclude the duty of either the House or of the committee in the premises.

It has frequently been ruled that anything touching the right of a Member to his seat is privileged. Anything concerning these ballots touches that right. It has also been repeatedly ruled that any unprivileged matter contained in a resolution utterly destroys the privilege which otherwise it would have had. Now, suppose that at the beginning of this election contest a resolution had been offered providing for the calling of these ballots from Colorado, and also providing for their return to the district attorney at the conclusion of the contest here, would anybody pretend that any part of that resolution would have been bereft of privilege or would have destroyed the privilege of the whole? And if the matter of this resolution would have been privileged as part of such a resolution at that time, in what way has it lost its privilege now?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman to yield me two minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana to make a statement.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in the first part of the resolution, "Whereas in the contested-election case certain ballots came into possession, etc.," that is unobjectionable.

The next is, "whereas said ballots and ballot boxes are in the possession of the House," etc.; and the next is, "whereas the court has asked for them;" and the next is, "whereas said ballots and poll books are no longer of any use," and "resolved, that they be returned," etc., is all perfectly proper, and I think ought to be met in a spirit of fairness, and promptly; but at the bottom of the second page is the following, that ought not to remain:

Whereas the examination of the said ballots and poll books by a subcommittee of said Election Committee and by an expert in handwriting, employed under authority of a resolution of this House, established the fact that gross frauds and crimes were committed at and in relation to the said election and in connection with the said ballots and poll books.

Now, I think that ought not to be in this resolution. I do not know whether it will have any effect on the grand jury. I do not know whether it will get before the courts or not, but it has no business there.

The ballots came here and they served their purpose. We ought to return them. They ought to serve their purpose there; but I do not see why this resolution should recite a fact that did not occur—that this House had found, by reason of those ballots, gross frauds, etc. The facts are as stated by the gentleman; the parties to the contest agreed to the situation. The State surrendered to Congress the ballots, and we are ready to surrender the ballots to the State, and ought to do it; but I submit we ought not to put the resolution in the way of a "whereas" that would go back and give them more or less strength than they had before they were sent to Congress.

This "whereas" is untrue in fact. It states that this House found frauds. The ballots were not submitted to the House, and this resolution ought not to attempt to strengthen the contention of either side. Let them be sent to the court, and let the court determine from them and all the facts proven whether there was fraud perpetrated. It is facts that courts deal with and should care nothing for a political "whereas" like this one.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is there anything in this preamble stronger in statement than was the statement made by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Shafroth] on the floor of this House, wherein he admitted fraud in that election?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I was about to state that when this resolution came to us as proposed by the author it contained a much longer preamble, containing many things which the committee struck out.

The resolution and preamble as it now stands are simply an explanation of the reason why the ballots should be returned. It could not possibly go before a grand jury, and if any evidence of that kind were to go before a grand jury, instead of taking this preamble they would certainly take the speech of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Shafroth], which was forty times stronger than anything in this preamble. It was made publicly to this House, and appears in the printed record.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. But the gentleman would not contend for a moment that in sending these ballots back he would send the admission of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Shafroth] as made on the floor of this House to be considered as evidence. The gentleman is too good a lawyer to contend that evidence can be made by ex parte resolutions.

Mr. OLMSTED. No; and we are not going to send this resolution with them. Nothing will go but the ballots.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Why not leave these statements out of the resolution and simply send the ballots as received here, and not put this extraneous matter in alleging that certain things are established, being the very facts that the court is to determine? It is for the courts to determine that fact. If that is out, I have no objection and would support the resolution.

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, I think the preamble is unobjectionable. It is strictly accurate in point of fact and merely explains the purpose and necessity of the resolution.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to make a motion to strike it out and take the judgment of the House.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the resolution and all amendments to its final passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question upon the resolution and amendments to its final passage.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the resolution.

The amendment to the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the preamble.

The amendment to the preamble was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the preamble as amended.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. OLMSTED, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CAMPBELL SLEMP.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution 322, which went over from yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order as to whether it is privileged or not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to CAMPBELL SLEMP, the sum of $1,500, being the amount expended by and recommended to be paid to him, as shown in House report from the Committee on Claims, No. 2374, second session Fifty-eighth Congress, on account of mandamus proceedings before the supreme court of the State of Virginia in the case of Slemp against Rhea, growing out of the election in 1902 of a Representative to the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Ninth Congressional district of said State of Virginia, said amount to be paid upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order was discussed yesterday, and by request it went over until to-day.

Mr. MANN. I made the point of order yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I have permission to call the attention of the Chair to a matter in reference to the point of order before the Chair decides it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman, although the Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. I merely want to see if the Chair has considered this view of the point of order. I was not present in the Committee on Accounts when this resolution was before it.

I desire to call the attention of the Chair to this statute of the United States with reference to the payment of these election expenses:

Hereafter no contestee or contestant for a seat in the House of Representatives shall be paid exceeding $2,000 for expenses in election contests; and before any sum whatever shall be paid to a contestant or a contestee for expenses of election contest he shall file with the clerk of the Committee on Elections a full and detailed account of his expenses, accompanied by vouchers and receipts for each item, which account and vouchers shall be sworn to by the party presenting the same, and no charges for witness fees shall be allowed in said accounts unless made in strict conformity to section 128, Revised Statutes of the United States. (20 Stat. L., p. 400.)

This is the act of March 3, 1875.

Prior to that act section 130 of the Revised Statutes provided as follows:

No payment shall be made by the House of Representatives out of its contingent fund or otherwise to either party to a contested-election case for expenses incurred in prosecuting or defending the same.

Now, I desire to say to the Chair that these are in the nature of election expenses for a contested-election case, and the Committee on Accounts, so far as I know, have never up to this time—and I have been on that committee since the Fifty-fifth Congress—undertaken to consider a resolution of this nature.

So far as I am informed from the report of the Committee on Accounts there is no evidence to show that the election expenses and vouchers required to be presented to the Elections Committee under this statute have been filed with any committee on elections; and that there has been no attempt to comply with that provision.

Section 130 of the Revised Statutes would seem to prohibit the payment of any election expenses from the contingent fund, as that part of the section has not been repealed, so far as I am informed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to read from Rule XI, clause 60:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated: * * * The Committee on Accounts, on all matters of expenditure of the contingent fund of the House.

This is a report of the Committee on Accounts. It provides for the payment of the amount specified from the contingent fund. As to the effect of the resolution in the event that it should be passed; as to whether the payment would be audited by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department; as to the propriety of adopting the resolution; as to whether it comes within the terms of the statute referred to by the gentleman from Georgia—those are matters upon which it is not the province of the Chair to rule.

It is the duty of the House to determine the effect of the resolution and the propriety of its passage. The Chair holds that it comes here under the rule, and therefore is before the House.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. In support of this resolution I want to say that it provides for the payment of $1,500 to Mr. CAMPBELL SLEMP, of Virginia; and I think that it is a resolution that this House should approve. It has been clearly shown by the testimony before the Committee on Claims, which was afterwards referred to the Committee on Accounts, that the claim is a just one.

And I want to say for the benefit of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], that he was not present at this committee meeting. I want to say further that there were two members of the minority present, and they were unanimous in joining in the report favoring this resolution.

Mr. SLEMP filed his claim before the Claims Committee, with the regular vouchers in the regular way, and showed clearly to the members of the committee that he had expended this amount of money.

I am informed by the chairman of the Committee on Claims that their report was unanimous for the payment of this amount to Mr. SLEMP. I also want to say that in my opinion this is a precedent that this House can well afford to establish, and establish now.

This case was tried in the courts of Virginia; and the court gave the certificate to Mr. SLEMP, the proceeding entailing an expense to him of $1,500. He had the right of coming to this House and having his contest here; and in that case the expense to the Government would have been at least $10,000.

There was a saving of $8,500 to the Government in settling this contest in this manner, and for this reason should be encouraged.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have read the report of the Committee on Claims on this case, and I do not see anything here of any vouchers or any statement of the amount that Mr. SLEMP paid out in connection with this contest.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I was chairman of the subcommittee on claims that had this matter under consideration. All the vouchers and receipts in connection with this payment were filed with the Committee on Claims and considered by them.

Mr. BARTLETT. Why do you not say something about that in the report upon this claim?

Mr. MILLER. I did not prepare the report.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I call attention to the closing language of this report:

Vouchers for which payments are filed with this committee.

The Claims Committee did have all these receipts and vouchers filed with them.

I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF], the chairman of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, this matter was very carefully examined into by the Committee on Claims. There was a full attendance of the members of the committee. That committee is almost equally divided politically; it is composed of fifteen members, eight of whom are Republicans and seven Democrats. The evidence appearing before the committee was that this was not an election contest, as we think of an election contest in the House, but a controversy arose in this way: The county election commissioners of the different counties in Virginia are directed by law to make the returns to the secretary of the Commonwealth.

In this case, in several of the counties of this Congressional district, at the last general election, the commissioners made their returns, but ignored the returns from several precincts in the different counties.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDOX. If this was a proper claim to be submitted to the Committee on Claims, why did not your committee report it, instead of transferring it to the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. GRAFF. We did report it. I am trying to make an explanation of the reason the committee acted favorably upon the matter.

Mr. MADDOX. How did the other committee get jurisdiction of it?

Mr. GRAFF. There was a resolution introduced to refer the matter to the Committee on Accounts, and therefore it was reported by that committee.

Mr. MANN. If that method of proceeding is to be followed, it will be a very popular way of paying claims.

Mr. MADDOX. I should be very glad to find out about that way of doing business. I may want to get some matter through the Committee on Accounts myself.

Mr. GRAFF. I want to say that there was absolutely no difference of opinion in the Committee on Claims about this matter. Colonel SLEMP, when he found that the certificate of election was about to be wrongfully issued by the Secretary of the Commonwealth to his opponent, who had received a lesser number of votes, immediately employed counsel and commenced mandamus proceedings in the supreme court of Virginia.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman does not understand my point. I am not disputing that fact at all.

Mr. GRAFF. There are several other Members of the House besides the gentleman who might want to have some information upon the subject.

Mr. MADDOX. I am not disputing that point at all. I want to know about this question of jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. MADDOX. If your committee can entertain these claims, as you have done—and this is a claim, and I have one myself of $2,000 for which the vouchers are on file in this House—I want to submit that case to you, and then transfer it to the Committee on Accounts, and have it privileged before Congress adjourns.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is right. There are a number of others.

Mr. GRAFF. We will consider your claim when it is presented.

Mr. MADDOX. Mine has been considered by the proper committee, as required by the statutes of the United States and the rules of the House. Numbers of us have been sufferers here just the same as this gentleman is. This was not a contest such as the law contemplates.

Mr. GRAFF. The amount expended here is less than the amount that would have been allowed had he waited to assert his rights by a contest in the House. The Government has saved over $10,000 by his pursuing the other course.

In addition to this, the Democratic newspapers of Virginia, I am told, almost unanimously commended the course of Colonel SLEMP in this proceeding.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. You say we have saved $10,000?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. If you set this precedent, you will lose a hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a statement?

Mr. GRAFF. I will.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman know that the gentleman whom the Member from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] defeated in the contest——

Mr. GRAFF. I know that Colonel SLEMP expended these amounts, because I saw the receipts which he presented to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAY. Oh, the gentleman did not wait until he heard my question. The question I wish to ask is this: Does not the gentleman know that Mr. Rhea, who was the candidate against Colonel SLEMP, declined to take the certificate under the circumstances?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not know whether he declined to take it or not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He did.

Mr. HAY. That is a fact. Everybody knows that.

Mr. GRAFF. At what time was this declination made?

Mr. HAY. Before the certificate was issued, before it was proposed to be issued, and as soon as Mr. Rhea ascertained that under the proper count Mr. SLEMP had a majority.

Mr. GRAFF. But it was after the mandamus proceedings had been commenced.

Mr. HAY. No; it was before the mandamus.

Mr. GRAFF. Does not the gentleman know that the secretary of the Commonwealth would have no discretion about issuing the certificate of election? He would be compelled to issue it upon the official information which came to him from the election commissioners from the various counties.

Mr. HAY. That may be, but the gentleman who was the candidate against Colonel SLEMP would not have made any contest in this House, and it would not have cost the Government one dollar, so far as he was concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like to ask both of them, as a matter of fact——

Mr. HAY. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, while I have the floor, that I am not opposing this claim of the gentleman from Virginia, and so far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing that he should have it; but I desire to put Mr. Rhea before the House in the attitude he is entitled to occupy.

Mr. GRAFF. I am making no charges against Mr. Rhea. I am simply saying that Colonel SLEMP was about to be deprived of an office to which he was elected by the wrongful action of the county election commissioners, who had made incorrect returns to the secretary of state, and the secretary of state would have no lawful authority to issue the certificate of election except upon the official showing that was made to him by the returns of these county election commissioners, false as they were.

And it was necessary for Colonel SLEMP to turn around and perfect mandamus proceedings upon these various county election commissioners in order to secure correct returns instead of the false ones, which were the only ones which were before the secretary of the Commonwealth. It is the only way that he could obtain his certificate of election.

I do not care what course Mr. Rhea, his opponent, might have taken as to the matter. Here were these incorrect returns before the secretary of the State. They were the only evidence upon which he had to base the certificate of election, and these legal proceedings were absolutely necessary under the circumstances—made necessary by the wrongful action of these county election commissioners.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, this——

Mr. HAY. I think I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, as I understand this question, it is not a contested-election case, nor are these expenses incurred in a contested-election case, nor can they be called expenses incurred by reason of any contested-election case in this House. They were expenses incurred by Mr. SLEMP in employing attorneys and in preparing mandamus proceedings before the supreme court of the State of Virginia. It was a matter between him and the State officers, and not between him and Mr. Rhea, the candidate against him.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes.

Mr. GRAFF. I have since learned, and ask the gentleman whether it was true or not, that Mr. Rhea did appear by counsel in one of the counties involved in this controversy after mandamus proceedings were commenced, and after a hearing was had under it, and did not abandon his case until after that?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, that was at the recount before the returning boards of the counties.

Mr. GRAFF. I am told it was right at the time of the trial of the case.

Mr. HAY. Not in the supreme court; but it was not a contest in this House; and when the recount was made, and made in the presence of the attorneys of both parties, and Mr. Rhea recognized that that count was against him, and properly so, he announced that he would not receive the certificate, notwithstanding the returning boards of the counties made a return in his favor to the State board of canvassers.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I am not expressing any opinion on this resolution, and do not know how I will vote yet. But suppose Mr. Rhea had declined to receive the certificate; it would be the duty of the secretary to issue it in his name without these proceedings. How would Mr. SLEMP have received his seat without this proceeding?

Mr. HAY. As a matter of fact, it was issued to Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. OLMSTED. But as a result of these proceedings?

Mr. HAY. As a result of these mandamus proceedings. If it had not been so, Mr. SLEMP would have had to institute a contest before Congress.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is the point I wanted to get out.

Mr. HAY. And under the rule, as I understand, these expenses should be paid to the contestant and the contestee; and if you are going to pay the expenses of one of the parties, then you ought to pay the expenses of the other party who had to defend this suit, and did it. Now, that is the matter we are going to determine.

Mr. GRAFF. Although he did not defend it at all?

Mr. HAY. The gentleman misrepresents me. I do not suppose he does so intentionally. I said that after these proceedings were had and the counts were made under it, that, notwithstanding the fact that the returning boards of the counties insisted upon returning to the State board of canvassers in his favor, Mr. Rhea refused to take advantage of the action of the returning board. That is what I said, and I repeat it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this is a case where there was a contested election, then I am perfectly willing that this claim shall be paid. But this is no contested-election case. It is a matter that has been decided in the State of Virginia over and over again. It is incomprehensible to me how it can ever cost $1,500 to have a simple matter like this decided. It was decided there without any defense in the supreme court.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia a question, and I would also like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Claims, the same question at the same time. Was there ever any action taken here, or had any committee of this House ever considered a contested-election case between Mr. SLEMP and Mr. Rhea?

Mr. GRAFF. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not at all. Now, then, if the gentleman will give me two or three minutes——

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it is confessed that there has been no contested-election case in the House of Representatives; no such case has been entered on the Calendar. It is confessed that this House has never been faced with an inquiry or question as to whether Mr. SLEMP was or was not entitled to his seat upon the floor.

Mr. SLEMP came here with the credentials of the State of Virginia entitling him to a seat here, and those credentials have never been questioned or disputed in this House. His seat has never been contested, and there has never been a contested-election case. Not only was one never heard, but none was ever instituted. Now, then, the law provides that where there is a contested-election case before this House, as judges of the qualifications and election of the Members of the House, then certain amounts of money shall be allowed.

Now, are you going to make a precedent that where men have had litigation in their States before they come here, leading up to the issuance of credentials of the State in favor of A or B, that the House of Representatives is to make an appropriation to pay for law fees and expenses in the State courts for A or B, where there neither is nor ever has been a contest?

Mr. DINSMORE. I would ask the gentleman from West Virginia to yield me two or three minutes.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I yield to the gentleman my colleague on the committee.

The SPEAKER. What time?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Two minutes.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the minority of the Committee on Accounts, which reported this resolution. I acquiesced in the decision of the committee at the time, and it is embarrassing to me to have to be placed in a position of opposing the action of the committee since.

I did not vote for the resolution in the committee, it is true, but I ask no protection to myself on that account. It will be remembered I stated to the committee that I did not believe we could lawfully act favorably on the resolution, but I based my action in the premises upon the statement which was made to the committee that the Committee on Claims had investigated the matter and that there was a unanimous report in favor of its payment, and that the whole Virginia delegation were in favor of its being paid. I was actuated by a desire to take these contests out of the House and bring them to the courts, but I believed at the time there had been a settlement of the matter by mutual consent in the courts, contested by both parties, and did not know that the opponent of the gentleman from Virginia—the sitting Member—had yielded and acquiesced in the decision before the matter came here.

I thought there was an acquiescence on the part of the Virginia delegation and that there was a unanimous report from the Committee on Claims, and since I was convinced there was a general desire to settle the matter as outlined by the resolution and believing that the opposing candidates had agreed to abide by a decision of the courts, and not knowing that the unsuccessful candidate had not at any time intended to contest and believing that it would be better generally if contests could be settled in the courts than in the House, which always settles them not judiciously, but in a partisan way, I acquiesced, but not with a belief that such course would be in accordance with law.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the House might as well pay any other campaign expenses as to pay these campaign expenses. This was not a contested election. If it were a contested election, then Colonel SLEMP was the contestant, and by all the rules of propriety it would have been the duty of the House, if it provided the expenses of the contestant, to pay the expenses of the contestee, Mr. Rhea, and I apprehend that such a bill in the House would not receive much consideration.

But let us look at the facts about contested-election cases. Mr. Speaker, I presented the other day to one of the Election Committees on behalf of a Member of the House a bill for election expenses amounting to $10,000. The committee properly allowed but two thousand. In the Butler case, from St. Louis, the expenses amounted to probably $25,000 or $30,000. The committee allowed $2,000 when that case went through our committee.

Two or three years ago the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] obtained from the Committee on Claims a recommendation for an extra allowance for election expenses, and when the matter came up before the House and it was stated that the election committees invariably confined the expenses to $2,000, the gentleman from Virginia, in a very proper spirit, said that he did not ask that the claim go through, and that he would not ask to be paid that additional amount, because he did not wish to set a precedent.

Mr. Speaker, before the act of Congress which has been quoted was passed, and in the very same act, there was an allowance for election expenses of $10,000. It was not an uncommon thing to allow five to ten thousand dollars expenses, and it was a common thing that contests were commenced and carried through for the sole purpose of obtaining the allowance of a large sum for election expenses.

If we step outside of the statutory provision, which is an allowance of $2,000 for expenses incurred in a contest before the House, and commence to allow expenses—campaign expenses—there is no limit to the amount that can be allowed. It may be that the Committee on Accounts has jurisdiction—and I acquiesce, of course, in the decision of the Chair—but if the Committee on Accounts can take out of the contingent fund and pay campaign expenses of one gentleman, why should not the campaign expenses of other gentlemen be paid?

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] went before the courts. Suppose he had hired watchers at the polls; suppose he had hired men to watch the ballots after election. What is the difference? Suppose he adopts any of the methods; suppose he had hired detectives to discover frauds—campaign expenses, all of them, nothing but campaign expenses. If he had had a contest before the House, then he would bring himself within the rule; but unless the House stands by the rule made by the statute there is no limit to the amount of expenses which will be presented to the House and demand made for their payment. [Applause.]

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, the amount involved in this resolution is not so large as to create any great criticism, but the principle involved is one which deserves the attention of the House that it may not, by voting this resolution through the House, commit itself to a precedent which is not a good one by any means, and which will return hereafter to plague the House in consideration of like resolutions.

This does not even rise to the dignity of a concurrent resolution. It is not a joint resolution. It is not a bill which in its ultimate form may assume the force and effect of an act of Congress. It is an effort to pass a simple resolution of the House of Representatives and to pay money out of the Treasury, as I understand it, simply by saying that it shall be paid out of the contingent fund, when the law and the statute which provide how election expenses in contested-election cases shall be paid make provision that those expenses shall be paid according to law, and prohibit the House from paying them out of the contingent fund.

The Constitution, if I may be permitted to refer to that instrument, declares that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of an appropriation made by law." Now, this resolution will never become a law. It is simply an act of the House. And for what purpose? To pay Mr. SLEMP, the Member from the Ninth district of Virginia, certain expenses that it is alleged he paid out in procuring from the court a mandamus to compel the election officer to issue the certificate to him. And why? Not in pursuance of any contested-election case.

There has never been any contested-election case in the Ninth Congressional district of Virginia as a result of the election in 1902. The contesting candidate was not given the certificate; did not claim that he was elected; admitted that Mr. SLEMP was entitled to the certificate, and made no effort to take or occupy the seat in Congress. Mr. SLEMP was duly sworn in when the Fifty-eighth Congress assembled.

There has never been any certificate issued to anyone except to Mr. SLEMP. He therefore, if he went into a contested-election case with anybody, would have to go into one with himself. There is no law which provides for the payment of election expenses in contested-election cases except according to the statute which I hold in my hand, and to which I called the attention of the Chair at the beginning of this discussion. You can not pay them from the contingent fund.

In order to pay these election expenses the law first provides how the notice shall be served, upon whom it shall be served, and how the witnesses shall be summoned, what the witness fees shall be, and then requires that in order for the contestee or the contestant to obtain any payment of any money he shall file with the election committee that tried his case an itemized statement of the various amounts that he had paid out, and that statement shall be accompanied by the oath of the contestee or the contestant and accompanied by the vouchers that he had paid out and the amount; and when all this is done it requires an act of Congress, not a simple resolution of the House, to authorize their payment.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARTLETT. Most assuredly.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I will say for the information of the gentleman that this was done in his case, with the Claims Committee, and the chairman of the Claims Committee, being a member of the Committee on Accounts, stated that to the Committee on Accounts, and that statement was satisfactory to that committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the law, Mr. Speaker, upon the statute book never contemplated that a Committee on Claims or that the Committee on Accounts should consider the question of paying the expenses of a contested-election case from the contingent fund. The statute in so many words declares that the contestee or the contestant shall file with the clerk of the Committee on Elections a full and detailed account of the expenses incurred in the contest.

Now, if we pay this bill as election expenses, we might as well determine that we will pay every expense that a candidate—not a contestee or a contestant—shall incur in his election in a suit at law or anywhere else. Take, for instance, the case which came to the House from New York, which came before us some years ago. The contestant applied to the courts to have his name put upon the official ballot. This was refused, and on appeal to the higher court the action of the lower court was reversed; but the last decision was after the election had been held. It was not claimed in that case that Congress should pay the lawyer's fees and expenses in that case.

Suppose it was necessary for the candidate, in order to have his name upon the ticket, to proceed by mandamus against the election officers. Would he be entitled to come before Congress, if he was elected, and have his election expenses paid? Was it necessary for him to resort to the courts to have the votes counted at all, when there was no contest? Suppose that the election board refused without reason, capriciously, to certify the election of a Member to Congress, where there was no opposing candidate——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that my time has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Georgia be extended five minutes.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. There was such confusion that the Chair understood the gentleman from West Virginia to yield five minutes in the first instance.

Mr. BARTLETT. No, sir.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I just yielded the gentleman five minutes, supposing that was all he requested. How much more time does he desire?

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, if the gentleman determines to limit me in my remarks I will have to undertake to get recognition in some other way. I am a member of this committee, and have been for eight years.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield at all unless the gentleman will tell me how much time he wants.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then I will wait until I can get recognition in my own right.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] for five minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to say that this is an effort to violate the law and the rules of the House by the passage of this resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from West Virginia yield to me to submit a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. No, sir. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me that I may submit a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can not yield out of my five minutes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to examine a single question. I want to know if it is a fair, legitimate, lawyer-like, common-sense argument to say that this is a bill for "campaign expenses." I want to inquire into that and see whether there is not a little, just a trifle, of mistake in that argument.

The "campaign expenses" are ended when the ballot boxes are closed on the night of the election; everybody knows that.

Several MEMBERS. Not always. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Suppose that on the night of the election it had been discovered that certain evidence pertinent to the great question of who was elected was likely to be spirited away, and that the candidate believing himself to be successful proceeded to maintain his position. Suppose that the gentleman from Virginia—either gentleman from Virginia—had seen fit to expend money to procure evidence and put it in such a shape that it would not be spirited away, and had then gone forward and pursued a contest in this House. Would that expenditure have been "campaign expenses" or would it have been expenses incident to the contest that followed in the House of Representatives?

Now, what exactly took place in this case? The election was all over. There is not an item of this account that any fair-minded man, however unintelligent he may be, can call "campaign expenses." The election was over, and directly it was discovered that the ballots from five or six precincts had been stolen; that is to say, they had been thrown out.

The contestant—for he had at that very moment become a contestant—knew those boxes were thrown out, and he knew perfectly well that the certificate should not be given without counting those ballots. Should he in that case stand by and take no steps, or should he at once, in the discharge of the duty that he owed to the State and to the country, proceed by any process of law to force a decision in his favor upon the contested boxes? That was just as much a contested election as it would have been if it had come into the House of Representatives.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman tell how there can be a claim for contested-election expenses, where the law provides——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not talking about the question of law. I say this was a contested-election case; and this is a claim for expenses in a contested election—not "campaign expenses." I should like to ask the gentleman to tell me—for he has used this same language, taking it from a suggestion on this side of the House—what does the gentleman understand to be "campaign expenses?"

Does the gentleman understand it is something looking toward the ascertainment, after the election, of the fact whether the election officers have done their duty, or does he understand that it has a well-defined meaning that everybody knows, that it is the expenditure of money up to the time when the election is closed on the night of the election?

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman want me to answer?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I do not. [Laughter.] I appeal to every intelligent man here if there is any justice or any fairness in charging that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] has come here to collect "campaign expenses?"

Suppose that instead of Mr. Rhea, who so honorably and by such distinguished consideration of truth and justice threw down the contest after it had proceeded in the court, it had been a candidate who had not done that.

Then suppose a contest had been fought out in the House of Representatives. Would not every dollar expended to these mandamus proceedings have been a legitimate subject of allowance by the House? No man will deny that, and because he took these vigorous steps in the very outset and saved his election and saved the honor of his State, and aided in saving the honor of his opponent also, it is said that these are campaign expenses and not legitimate expenses to be paid by the House. I deny it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] ten minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman occupied all of his hour?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUGHES] has twenty-four minutes remaining.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUGHES] concluded his side of the case?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not state. The gentleman had an hour, and he has twenty-four minutes remaining.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. No; I have not concluded. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to be heard for a few minutes more in this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia yields what time to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Ten minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have been upon this Committee on Accounts for nearly eight years. I have always endeavored not to present or agree to present to the House any resolution to pay money out of the contingent fund which, in my judgment, was not properly payable out of that fund.

We have here a resolution of the House which proposes to pay out of the contingent fund money which the law directs, if it be for expenses incurred in a contested election, shall be paid by appropriation bills which have the effect and force of law, and not simply upon the direction of the House, and shall not be paid out of the contingent fund.

Now, I state again, with all respect to the gentleman who introduced this resolution and who brought it before the House, that it is a simple effort to evade both the law and the rules of the House, and to have this resolution reported in order to pay this claim, or pretended claim, against the Government when it could not, in the ordinary processes under the rules of the House, be reached for consideration or be paid at all except as other claims against the Government are paid.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] put a question to me, which he did not permit me to answer, as to what I considered to be election expenses. Let gentlemen who have had numerous contests in this House go back to the files in the committee room and find the amounts expended in contested-election cases, for which vouchers have been filed where the expenses amounted to three, five, or ten times as much as the amount allowed by the statute. Are not those expenses a part of campaign expenses?

Who will say that the amount expended in the Butler case from Missouri, or the amount which my colleague from Georgia expended in excess of $2,000, or the amount expended by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] in his election case over and above $2,000—who will say that those amounts, which both the contestant and the contestee expended in the attempt to obtain seats in the House, were not campaign expenses?

Where a candidate expends money in order to obtain a seat, whether it is before the campaign is closed or after the campaign is closed, is it not a part of his campaign expenses? He has to pay out the money in order to obtain a seat or to retain it.

The suggestion of the gentleman that campaign expenses close when the campaign is over is not borne out by my experience. Every gentleman on this floor understands that campaign expenses may increase after the election is over, whether the candidate be defeated or elected.

The law upon this subject is plain as to what you have to do in order to get money out of the Treasury for contested-election expenses. It requires, in the first place, a contest to have been instituted. Was one instituted in this case? The gentleman could not institute a contest with anyone but himself.

It is true that upon the face of the returns, before they were recounted, it appeared that Mr. Rhea, and not Colonel SLEMP, was elected; but when a recount was had, and upon an ascertainment of the fact that Mr. Rhea was not elected, Mr. Rhea stated that Mr. SLEMP had been elected, and he would not accept the certificate. It was never issued to him. He never had it; and no certificate was ever issued to anyone as a Member of this House except to Mr. SLEMP.

Now, you have the position of a man who had no contest for his seat applying here for pay, simply of his lawyer's fee, in order to assert what he deemed to be his right in the court. Already—and I call the attention of gentlemen of the House to this—already this sum of $2,000, which the statute provides shall be paid or may be paid to the contestant and to the contestee, has filled the records of this Congress and other Congresses since I have been here with contests which upon examination have been found not to have any merit in them, and in many cas s frivolous.

This $2,000 for expenses in contested-election cases is regarded by many contestants as simply an amount provided by Congress, which they may obtain for instituting a contest. If you pass this resolution, and pay the expenses which a man may incur in order to assert his rights in the courts, when there are no contests, then you might as well destroy the law which is written, and you might as well override and destroy the rules of this House, and you might as well declare to everyone that the House stands ready to run its hands into the Treasury and pay every claim that may be made for campaign expenses hereafter. I trust the resolution will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that this House will have any question as to whether this is a contest case or not. I do not think there will be any question with the House whether the Committee on Accounts has the right to pay this claim or not. In the Fifty-fifth Congress, the third session, Speaker Reed ruled:

> But it is for the House to judge whether these expenditures are satisfactory to the House or not. Therefore the Chair thinks that it is privileged, the House having complete control of it, and if not satisfied to make this payment, and it has any desire to speak upon it, it can express itself by a vote.

If the House does not desire to pay this amount, they have the perfect right to vote it down.

Mr. BARTLETT. That was on the deficiency appropriation bill, was it not?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. That was on the deficiency appropriation bill, and this is to pay Mr. SLEMP the amount of his expenses, and if the House sees fit to vote that amount for him they have a perfect right to do so through the channel of this resolution.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD. I would like to ask you, Do you not know that there was a similar case to this from the State of Virginia, Mr. Yost's, and he was not allowed his expenses?

Mr. GRAFF. I will state to the gentleman that the Committee on Claims did report favorably on his bill.

Mr. FLOOD. But he never got the money, because this House never voted it.

Mr. GRAFF. It never reached consideration, but was favorably reported.

Mr. FLOOD. He did not get the money that was allowed.

Mr. GRAFF. The bill was never considered.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I just want one word more. There is no contest as to whether Mr. Rhea approved of this or disapproved of it.

I understand as soon as Mr. Rhea found out that he was not elected he did not want the certificate, and these mandamus proceedings were taken and these expenses incurred in ascertaining this fact, and there is no question between the Representatives of Virginia as to whether this man should be paid or not paid. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. PALMER. Let me ask the gentleman, before he does that, if there was no contest and no lawsuit and no witnesses and no fight, how did they get up a bill?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I did not say there was no contest. I said there was no contest before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia demands the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 124.

So the resolution was rejected.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was rejected was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from New York, but I am so situated that I can not yield further this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] has been trying to get the floor for a long while.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield to the Senator from Alabama after the Senator from New York.

ESTATE OF MARTIN DOWLING.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4651) for the relief of James T. Barry and Richard Cushion, executors of the last will and testament of Martin Dowling, deceased.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to abate the inheritance tax assessed against James T. Barry and Richard Cushion, executors of the last will and testament of Martin Dowling, of Rye, N. Y., as to so much of said estate as shall be established to his satisfaction to have been given to and vested in charitable or other institutions by said James T. Barry and Richard Cushion which under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898, as amended by the acts of March 2, 1901, and June 22, 1902, would have been exempt from inheritance tax had the property been bequeathed by Martin Dowling direct to said institutions; and the said Secretary is further authorized to proportionately abate any of said assessment from time to time within the period of two years after the passage of this act, upon satisfactory proof of the further gift by said James T. Barry and Richard Cushion of any portion of said estate to any institution or institutions so exempt from inheritance tax as aforesaid. So far as such tax shall be abated under the provisions of this act, no inheritance tax shall be collected by reason of the passing of the legal title of said property to the said James T. Barry and Richard Cushion, and the said executors shall be, and are hereby, relieved from the payment of any such tax which may have attached to said property by reason of the said act of June 13, 1898.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee reports to strike out the preamble. It will be stricken out.

JOHN STEWART.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 803) for the relief of John Stewart.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "two;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Stewart, civil engineer, for extra compensation for services rendered by him to the Government in connection with the Potomac Flats case, $2,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. From what committee does the bill come?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the Committee on Claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDEFINITE POSTPONEMENT OF BILLS.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a little morning business?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I ask to have struck from the Calendar the bill (S. 2636) to regulate the employment of officers of the Army on the retired list, and for other purposes, the subject-matter having been included in the army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. The bills ought to be indefinitely postponed. Striking them from the Calendar does not dispose of them.

Mr. SPOONER. What becomes of a bill stricken from the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the bill (S. 4280) providing medals of honor be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

THE FISCAL POLICY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] as a substitute for the resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] is before the Senate. It will be again read.

The resolution was again read, as follows:

Resolved, That our continued prosperity as a nation is the best possible assurance that our fiscal policy is sound and stable, and that its disturbance by legislation is not warranted by the best interests of the people.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the coming national campaign will be devoid of some of the interesting issues that have been warmly discussed during recent years. The money question has been relegated to the limbo of forgotten things, the people having repudiated the silver heresies of Mr. Bryan and his party, and accepted the gold standard established by Republican legislation. The cry of imperialism, which resounded throughout the land four years ago, has apparently ceased, other campaign issues of our Democatic friends have been quietly laid aside, and that party is planning to make tariff revision prominent in the national election this year. It was not long ago that a distinguished Democratic leader, a man long in public life, gave utterance to these words:

I repeat, so that all men may hear, that I am a free trader, and proudly take my stand with Sir Robert Peel, Richard Cobden, John Bright, and Henry George. I may be an humble member of that illustrious company, but it is better to be a doorkeeper in the house of honest free traders than to dwell in the tents of wicked protectionists.

That was an honest declaration. It meant that that distinguished leader was ready to utterly destroy the protective principle, and open American markets to the products of the cheap labor of Europe and Asia, in free and unrestricted competition with the products of American farms and American factories. Recently this same leader, realizing, no doubt, that his former utterance would not do for a campaign issue, modified his views to the extent of declaring that "We go forth to battle with tariff reduction and genuine reciprocity inscribed on our banners." The language is different, but the idea is the same, as I shall endeavor to show. "The voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hand is the hand of Esau," the inevitable result of either policy being to bring about the same disastrous consequences that overtook the country during the operation of the Wilson-Gorman tariff law of 1894-1897.

TARIFF LEGISLATION.

From time to time, Mr. President, I have presented in this Chamber reviews of our tariff legislation, and the effect of the operation of tariff laws upon the industries and labor of our country. Beginning with the very first Congress, where the tariff question was an early subject of debate, the result of which was to place on our statute books a protective tariff law, down through the decades for more than a century, although many other great questions have been settled, the tariff question remains to-day the paramount issue in our politics, and bids fair to be debated during the coming months more sharply than ever before in our history. In fact, we see the leaders of the Democratic party trying to marshal their forces for the coming conflict, declaring their purpose to be to go forth with tariff reduction and genuine reciprocity, whatever that may be, inscribed on their banners. It seems fitting, then, that at the close of the Republican party's first half century, a brief reference should be made to the tariff legislation of that party, a party which has stood from its birth for protection to American labor and industries.

On March 2, 1861, two days before the inauguration of Abraham Lincoln, President Buchanan, a Democratic President, signed the so-called Morrill tariff bill, the first great Republican measure to become a law. The Morrill tariff is very improperly alluded to to-day as a measure providing for the revenues made necessary by the civil war. This, Mr. President, is incorrect. During the first part of the year 1860, long before war was declared, long before the Southern States had seceded, before Abraham Lincoln had been elected or even nominated, the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives framed a bill, which was named after Justin S. Morrill, who afterwards became and long remained an honored member of this Senate. Mr. Morrill took a very prominent part in framing the bill, which after debate passed the House by a vote of 105 to 64 on May 11, 1860. For nearly a year this bill was held up by a Democratic Senate and probably would not have passed this body had not several Southern Senators resigned their seats in the early part of 1861. The Morrill bill, however, on February 20 of that year was passed by the Senate by a vote of 25 to 14, and was signed by President Buchanan on the 2d day of March following. I do not find anywhere a better explanation of the reasons for this bill and of its immediate effect upon the industries of the country than in the following sentences taken from the annual Cyclopedia for 1861:

A revenue law affording uncommon protection to manufactures was enacted. This was proposed not for the purpose of husbanding the resources of the country in anticipation of approaching strife, but chiefly as a great party measure, and to secure an increase of prosperity to this great national interest. It has proved to be the wisest measure adopted during the session. It immediately checked the importation of foreign manufactures, secured the reduction of the debt of the country to other nations, caused a large importation of specie in payment of exports, and thereby enabled the citizens to advance loans to the Government in its most pressing hour.

It is true that this law was afterwards, in August, supplemented by a law providing for increased revenues to carry on the war, but it remains true that the first important law passed by a Republican House of Representatives, and subsequently by a Republican Senate, was a protective tariff measure, and from that time until the present, with the exception of the so-called Wilson-Gorman law, which was in operation from August 28, 1894, until July 24, 1897, we have enjoyed the blessings bestowed by protective tariffs in their influence upon our industrial and financial conditions. During all the years that have intervened since the passage of the first Republican tariff law, which was made necessary because of the disasters brought upon our Government's finances and our industrial welfare by a system of practical free trade, our country has prospered in a measure unknown before in the history of the world, and unchecked only for the period of three years, when we were living under the influence of the only Democratic tariff legislation since the first success of the Republican party, which this year will celebrate its semi-centennial.

NATIONAL PROGRESS.

It has been my privilege, Mr. President, to present, on previous occasions, statistics showing the splendid progress which we have made as a people, and which our various industries, both agricultural and manufacturing, have enjoyed, the high standard of living to which our people have attained, and the general prosperity and wealth which we as a nation have acquired and are still enjoying to an unprecedented degree. It will be freely admitted, I believe, by all on both sides of this chamber, that the past seven years have been the most prosperous in the history of our country; that during these years our industrial advance has been unparalleled; that our markets both at home and abroad have been largely and most substantially increased; that our laboring classes have been wondrously benefited, and that our wealth, both in the aggregate and per capita, has been largely augmented, all classes sharing in the advantages and enjoyments of this prosperity.

And yet, in spite of these splendid results, which none can deny; in spite of the fact that our Western farmers have paid off the mortgages which it was necessary for them to assume in order to get a start in keeping with the opportunities which lay before them; in spite of the fact that these farmers have become prosperous, and have been able not only to acquire and possess their lands, but to increase their stock and implements and to lay aside in the great Western banks a surplus which is not only adequate for the necessary transaction of business in those States and Territories, but which is offered to Eastern capitalists at a percentage about one-half of that paid by these same farmers for the Eastern money which they borrowed a decade or so ago; in spite of the fact that our great Southern States are becoming more and more prosperous every year, because they have learned to use their own raw material and to do their own work; in spite of the fact that from one end to the other of this great land of ours the people have been enjoying a period of prosperity, such as has never before come to any nation on the face of the globe; in spite of all these things, the leaders of a great political party in Congress have been engaged almost daily for many weeks advancing arguments to be used during the coming campaign, contending that we should repeal the law under which we are now operating and put in its place a Wilson bill, or a Mills bill, or a Morrison bill, or a tariff like that of 1846 and 1857, both of which tariffs proved disastrous to the best interests of the country.

STAND PAT.

It seems to me inconceivable that at a time when many other nations are contemplating the increase of tariff duties a great political party in this country should seriously advocate an abandonment of our well-established fiscal policy by lowering our tariff to the revenue standpoint. Very recently the government of the Netherlands has taken steps to largely increase import duties, and everyone knows that the agitation in Great Britain for an abandonment of free trade is well-nigh irresistible, the success of which is apparently but a question of time. Under such circumstances it would be supreme folly for this country to do otherwise than "stand pat" on the tariff proposition, which I feel sure the American people are determined to do.

So wedded have our people, and particularly the working classes, become to the idea that protection is better for us than free trade, that our Democratic friends lack the courage to come out boldly for a free-trade measure and in favor of free-trade doctrines. "No," they say, "we are not free traders, for there is no free-trade party in the United States; our aim is simply to break down the iniquitous protection barriers to a revenue standpoint in order that we may compete on a level with the manufacturers of Great Britain and the continent of Europe," and so they put it: "We go forth with tariff reduction and genuine reciprocity inscribed on our banners."

Among other things we are told that the great trusts are made possible and are maintained by our protective tariff. We are told that high prices for the output of these trusts are demanded from our own people, while much lower prices are asked for the same goods sent abroad and sold to other people. We are told that even though wages have been increased the cost of living has increased so much more that the masses are worse off by far than they would be if lower wages and lower prices should prevail. We are told, Mr. President, that we have reached the highest point of our prosperity, that we are receding, that the good times have passed away, and that protection is a failure. I propose to examine these various statements as briefly as may be, and I shall endeavor, with the assistance of a few figures, which in every case shall be official and authoritative, to refute the claims made by our Democratic friends, and to show that if ever there was a time in our history when we should continue the tariff law under which we are now operating, in fact should leave it entirely alone for the present, that time is this year of our Lord nineteen hundred and four.

I have already in this Chamber presented facts and figures showing the disasters which came to us during the operation of the Wilson-Gorman law, which followed the election of a Democratic President and Congress in 1892. I have shown that with the election of a Republican President and Congress in 1896, followed by the enactment of the Dingley law a few months afterwards, prosperity was restored to this country, and that industrial conditions took an advance never before known, placing all classes of our people upon a higher plane, with the enjoyment of a higher standard of living in every particular than was ever possessed before in this country or any other.

Two years ago I brought our tariff history and the results of our tariff laws down to that time. Since then, Mr. President, while in the main we have gone on advancing in almost every portion of our country and in almost every industry, it is nevertheless true that we have gone through a period of industrial and financial conditions different from any we have ever before experienced.

TRUSTS.

There will be no attempt to deny that under, but not because of, the tariff now in operation, great industrial concerns commonly known as trusts, have been built up during the past few years. It will not be denied, Mr. President, that out of the hundreds and thousands of such consolidations, some one or some few may have been constructed upon a very unfair basis, may have been operated with questionable intent, with results beneficent to neither producers nor consumers of the wares manufactured by those concerns. It matters not that the same state of affairs exactly exists in free-trade England and in other countries of Europe; our Democratic friends insist that our trusts are due to the tariff. It matters not that our greatest trusts are those producing that upon which no duty is imposed; our Democratic friends still insist that the trusts are due to our tariff.

Some of these so-called trusts have been founded and constructed by issuing stocks of fictitious value, and in some cases abnormally inflated. It did not require a Napoleon of finance to foresee that in time these great bubbles must burst, and that these values must fall to a more equitable level, and this very thing has happened during the past year. We have seen the prices of industrial shares, and with them the prices of railroad shares, fall day after day, week after week, and even month after month; yet, Mr. President, when in our previous history has there been such a falling of prices in Wall street unaccompanied by any widespread industrial disaster throughout the country? Never before have we gone through a period of such falling prices in stocks without a panic, without vastly increased commercial failures, without business depressions and without disaster requiring years to recover from.

ABNORMAL CONDITIONS.

Accompanying this fall in stocks, accompanying this so-called "speculative debauch" in Wall street, have been various abnormal conditions, each and every one almost serious enough in character to cause a panic under ordinary circumstances. Foremost among these, perhaps, have been the great strikes, beginning with that of the miners in the summer and fall of 1902 and followed by the great strikes in the building, textile, and other trades during 1903. When a hundred thousand men, earning on an average four or five dollars a day each, are idle for several weeks or for several months, not only must the influence of such idleness be felt in the loss of wages and profits, diminishing our purchasing power and resulting in the withdrawal of savings, but the lessening demand for the material used by these men for construction and other purposes must also affect to a large degree many other industries, the output of which must necessarily be decreased.

The abnormally high price of cotton for so many months, while bringing somewhat increased prosperity to one portion of our country, brought embarrassment and a loss of production to another portion. The great fires of the past winter in our large cities have also brought losses of many millions of dollars to our insurance companies and to thousands of individuals, and a lessening of demand for many productions. And in addition to all this it will, I think, be conceded that the past winter has been meteorologically the most severe that we have known for half a century. It has affected transportation and distribution by the railroads of the country to an unusual degree; it has affected our trolley systems in almost every northern city, thereby curtailing retail trade, and in turn seriously affecting wholesale business.

I need not go further in reciting the undue and abnormal conditions which have come to us during the past twelve or fifteen months. Coming at any period prior to 1898 they would doubtless have brought with them untold commercial disaster and incalculable human misery. Yet in spite of a lessened output in some industries; in spite of wages voluntarily given up for months at a time in certain large cities; in spite of a curtailment of production because of the abnormal high price of certain raw material; in spite of the decreased demand for certain construction material; in spite of the impossibility of moving for many hours, and sometimes for days together, huge trains bearing freight from one part of the country to the other; in spite of weather conditions which had their effect to a greater or less degree upon all communities and upon all classes of people, statistics show that as a nation we have been going forward during all these months, becoming wealthier and more prosperous, putting aside millions and millions of dollars in our savings banks, increasing our life insurance, and increasing vastly many lines of business as shown by the large advance made in our postal receipts, which accurately reflect the business and industrial conditions of the country.

It seems to me well worth while, Mr. President, when our friends on the other side are telling us that we are going backward, to say to them that although the elements and to some extent our own folly seem to have combined to try to the utmost the Republican policy of protection, yet they have utterly failed to undermine it in the least, but on the contrary have given us an experience which we may well cite as an example of the saving power of a protective tariff, when it seemed as if so many things were for a time destined to go wrong. The case has been most happily expressed by the following signed editorial in a recent number of the American Economist, from the gifted pen of Mr. Francis Curtis:

We all know the value of a catch word or phrase when that phrase stands for something true and substantial. To-day's report of R. G. Dun & Co. on the condition of business concludes as follows:

"The nation's business is established on a foundation sufficiently strong to withstand disaster."

That is, in spite of the many adverse conditions of the past few months, in no way connected with the tariff, the Dingley law has proved itself to be thoroughly panic proof. In other words, in spite of a "speculative debauch," in spite of strikes, of conflagrations, of the worst weather conditions known for many years, in spite of the abnormally high prices of cotton and many adverse minor conditions, the Dingley law has given us through it all panic proof protection. This will be the issue during the coming campaign. The Dingley law brought prosperity, and that prosperity will continue as long as we do not tinker a tariff that insures panic proof protection.

BASIC CAUSE OF PROTECTION.

If we were to analyze the matter further we should find that the basic cause of this protection, which has proved to be panic proof, is the fact that employment and wages have not ceased, as they must when, under low tariffs, we let in a flood of foreign manufactures. Under protection we do in a large measure our own work; under practical free trade we pay some one else to do it for us. That is why we have gone through the unusual experience of the past months without a diminution of purchasing power, which is, after all, the very foundation of prosperity.

We can hardly expect, Mr. President, that in our industrial affairs we can so manage things as to enable us year after year to go on breaking the records without sometime meeting with a halt, or even temporarily receding. We do not measure the level of the sea by the crest of the highest wave. We do not gauge the speed of a locomotive by the abnormal time made for a short distance under unusual conditions. What we should look at are the splendid averages acquired from year to year and the substantial results which are gained and preserved, to be constantly added to in the long run, as shown by the results of stated periods of time. During every year since 1898 our pessimists have been saying that we had reached the end of prosperity, and it seems as if their predictions were accompanied by hopes, almost cruel, that disaster would come, in order that panic and ruin might be charged to the operation of the Dingley law. Most exultant were these pessimists as they beheld the tumbling prices of stocks during the months of last year, and yet as we went on from day to day, from week to week, and from month to month without recording any unusual commercial failures or any undue commercial disaster, the croaking of these pessimists ceased, and they must needs look elsewhere for comfort and a verification of their predictions and desires.

It would seem as if the future success of the Democratic party were absolutely dependent upon commercial disaster. To admit that times are prosperous means to this party, which has always been a party of disaster and destruction, continued defeat on election day. Twice, through deception, it has been able during the past sixty years to put upon the statute books tariff laws after its own liking, and twice the Republican party, with its policy of protection, has come to the rescue of our people and our industries. Not only have the tariffs enacted by the Republican party saved us from ruin and brought back prosperity, but they have resulted in the great industrial and financial strides to which we are able to point with such exultant pride. Not only this, but I will show that, in spite of the recent abnormal conditions to which I have alluded, the commercial outlook and the prospects for even greater prosperity than we have yet enjoyed seem most favorable.

INSTRUCTIVE FIGURES.

First, I wish to present a few figures as showing our principal financial and commercial conditions as far down as such figures can possibly be obtained, then I wish briefly to endeavor to refute the accusation made by our friends upon the points that I have mentioned, and I will also set forth the reasons why the outlook is so propitious, and why prosperity will not only continue to rule, but will rule with increased vigor in the years to come, if we continue to maintain our present tariff principles and do not allow ourselves to be converted to the disastrous and destructive economic doctrines of our opponents.

Our Democratic friends are fond of talking of a revenue tariff. The following table is instructive on that point, showing the difference between free-trade and protection revenue:

Year ending June 30—	Customs receipts.	Total receipts.
1895	$152,158,617	$313,390,075
1896	160,021,752	326,976,200
1897	176,554,127	347,721,705
Average	16 ,911,499	329,362,660
1898	149,577,062	405,321,335
1899	206,128,482	515,960,620
1900	233,164,871	567,240,852
1901	238,585,456	587,685,338
1902	254,444,708	562,478,233
1903	284,479,582	560,396,674
Average	227,729,694	533,180,509

It must be remembered that the internal-revenue receipts are affected by the tariff law as well as customs receipts, for in prosperous times, such as we enjoy under a protective tariff, the receipts from internal revenue are largely increased over the receipts during a low-tariff period. The result was that during the low-tariff years, 1895–1897, we had a deficit of over $76,000,000 added to a deficit in 1894 (which was also a practical free-trade year) of $70,000,000, or $146,000,000 in the four years, while during the four years ending 1903 there was a surplus of over $300,000,000. We have repealed war taxes to the amount of over $100,000,000, and still our receipts are in excess of our expenditures. This, Mr. President, illustrates the difference between the revenue under low tariffs, and protective tariffs. This is the reason why we are able to undertake the building of the great interoceanic canal, involving as it does the expenditure of between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000, and possibly even a greater amount than that.

So much for the Treasury surplus. Now how does the balance stand regarding our foreign trade, about which our Democratic friends are always so solicitous? The official figures are as follows:

Imports and exports of merchandise, 1895–1903.

Year ending June 30—	Imports.	Exports of manufactures.	Total exports.	Total imports and exports.	Excess exports.
1895	$731,963,965	$183,595,743	$807,538,165	$1,539,508,130	$75,568,200
1896	779,724,674	228,571,178	882,606,938	1,662,331,612	102,882,264
1897	764,730,412	277,285,301	1,050,993,556	1,815,722,968	286,263,144
1898	616,049,654	290,697,354	1,231,482,330	1,847,531,984	615,432,676
1899	697,148,489	339,592,146	1,227,023,302	1,924,171,791	529,874,813

INCREASE OF EXPORTS.

The Boston Herald, an independent Democratic newspaper, has recently called attention to the fact that the nine months ending with March rolled up a larger total of exports than any first three-quarters of any other fiscal year. The Herald further says that taken as a whole these are satisfactory figures for trade movement. The total volume of business amounted in exports and imports of merchandise to the enormous sum of $1,913,222,528, or almost two billions of dollars' worth of exports and imports of merchandise within three-quarters of a year. On this showing our trade for nine months in the current year is practically the same as the trade for the entire year 1899, and far in excess of the figures for any year previous to that time. Our trade has grown so enormously that the figures for three-quarters of a year now are almost double those for the whole year ending June 30, 1876.

It will be seen that under the operation of the Dingley law our exports have increased since 1895 by over 70 per cent and our total foreign commerce by over 50 per cent, while our sales abroad of manufactures have increased by over 100 per cent above the sales of 1895–96. Such has been the effect of the Dingley tariff on our National Treasury and the business of our country with foreign buyers—a deficit turned into a most substantial surplus, and sales averaging 50 per cent more than purchases. That we shall do still better, Mr. President, there is no doubt; nor is there any doubt that we would do much worse if we returned to tariffs for revenue only, the Democratic policy, which has never failed to work mischief to all classes of our people.

FOREIGN MARKETS.

Our Democratic friends seem particularly solicitous about foreign markets for our manufactures, and yet under our present tariff law our exports of manufactures have increased at a wonderful rate, and the present year seems likely to break all previous records. During the four years ending June 30, 1903, our exports of manufactures averaged more than double that of similar exports during the operation of the Wilson-Gorman tariff, while for the eight months ending with February, 1904, the exports were almost three times as much in value as they were ten years ago, and exceeded by considerable the exports during any similar previous period.

The truth is, we have captured the markets of the world for all of our products, both agricultural and manufactured, and in domestic products we stand to-day as the first exporting nation on the face of the earth. This has been accomplished under the operation of a protective tariff without sacrificing any of our own markets, without lowering our high scale of wages, and without submitting our own people to the competition of the pauper labor of other countries. It is the greatest and most substantial victory ever recorded in industrial warfare in all history, and yet this remarkable foreign trade, which has been built up under our protective tariff, is only a small part of our industrial achievement.

HOME MARKET BEST.

Foreign markets for surplus production is all very well in itself, and very welcome when it can be gained without sacrificing any portion of our home market; but it is this home market of ours, Mr. President, which has been built up and maintained through our protective tariffs, and particularly during the operation of the law now on our statute books, which is not only the pride of every American citizen, but the envy of every foreign producer. A most conservative estimate of the value of this internal commerce is $22,000,000,000 annually, equal in value to the combined markets of the world for the purchase of foreign productions. Could we control the sale of all the goods which enter every port on the face of the earth, it would only equal that which we now supply to our own home market, an assured market which is constantly increasing. This grand home market of ours can not be maintained if we let down our protection bars and adopt low tariffs, or if we enter into reciprocity arrangements in competing articles, which is the same, or at least a long step toward this same free-trade notion.

The value of our home market has never been more forcibly and clearly presented than by Hon. O. P. Austin, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor, in a speech delivered in the city of Rochester, N. Y., on Thursday, January 7, 1904, from which I take the following brief extract:

> The internal commerce of the United States was in 1870 seven billions of dollars, and in 1900 it was twenty billions. With this definite basis of twenty billions in 1900 and knowing what rapid development has occurred in all lines during that period, we may safely and conservatively put the internal commerce of the year 1903 at twenty-two billions of dollars—a sum which actually equaled the entire international commerce of the world in that year.
> Think of it, you producers and manufacturers and merchants and traders and bankers and transporters; think of it! The market of our own country, the home market, in which you can transport your goods from the door of the factory to the door of the consumer without breaking bulk a single time, is equal to the entire international commerce of the world.
> Not only is this true that our home market is equal to that offered by the international commerce of the entire world, but it is evidently growing far more rapidly than international commerce, for, as I have said, the internal commerce of the United States has grown from seven billions in 1870 to twenty-two billions in 1903, while the international commerce has grown from eleven billions in 1870 to twenty-two billions in 1903, or, in other words, while the international commerce of the world is now twice as great as in 1870, the internal commerce of the United States is now three times as great as in that year and equals the entire commerce between all nations.

This internal commerce of ours has been made possible only because of our splendid wage system, which has brought about a higher standard of living and a demand by our masses for more than the mere necessaries of life. It is not necessary for me at this time to more than call attention to this feature of our tariff and industrial system. It has been made clear time and time again, and yet it would seem as if our opponents persist in losing sight of this splendid market at our very doors in their desire to gain for our producers an insignificant percentage in our sales to foreign countries, thousands of miles away from our farms and factories. Much better would it be to sacrifice a large portion, or even the whole of our foreign sales, than any considerable portion of our home market. But the figures which I have given show that it is not necessary to make any sacrifices whatever under the beneficent operations of a protective tariff. We have not only maintained and increased our home market during these past few years, but we have constantly increased our foreign markets at the same time, and more rapidly than any other country of the world, which result, it seems to me, is the most beneficial that could possibly be brought about.

WAGES.

Now, Mr. President, I wish briefly to touch upon one of the assertions which is continually being made by our opponents, and which I believe can be shown to be a positive misrepresentation, and entirely at variance with facts. There is no attempt to deny that since the enactment of the Dingley law wages have not only increased in large measure, but employment as well. For nearly seven years now almost every man in the United States who has wanted work and was worthy to have it could not only obtain it for six days in a week and fifty two weeks in a year, but he has been paid for that labor at a rate never before known in this or any other country. There have been times in this period when it has been impossible to obtain the necessary help to harvest our crops, manufacture our goods and care for their transportation and distribution. There have been many times when several jobs were looking for one man, a much more desirable condition to the laboring classes than when several men are obliged to look for one job. It is true that there have been some exceptions to this splendid condition of affairs, and while for the most part wages have been increased year after year during this period, there have been instances, due to some unusual causes, where, after large increases, a slight reduction has been made. But I think I can safely assert, Mr. President, that during this period, and even during the past year, more men have been idle voluntarily than through necessity, and it must be fully appreciated that generally when a man is idle voluntarily it is necessary for other men to be idle for the whole or a part of the same period. The voluntary idleness of a hundred bricklayers or carpenters means as well the enforced idleness of a greater or less number of plasterers, painters, paper hangers and plumbers, and many others in kindred operations, to say nothing of the loss in manufacture and trade which must ensue in the way of furnishings and the various equipments that go to make a completed house or building of any kind.

STRIKES.

It is neither my province nor purpose at this time to say a single word for or against labor unions, or for or against the many strikes which have had such a serious result upon our laboring classes. I wish only to emphasize the fact that when a hundred men or a hundred thousand men are voluntarily idle for weeks or months, the loss is by no means confined to them alone, but involves other hundreds or other hundred thousands that are compelled to be idle because of the action of the men on strike.

It has been most conservatively estimated that the strikes of the year 1903 lessened the purchasing power of the people by fully $1,000,000,000, and I doubt even if that large sum would measure the entire loss if it could be accurately estimated. So when we are told by our friends on the other side that men are idle and that wages are being reduced and that prosperity is receding, it is well to know whether this condition of affairs is voluntary or compulsory.

But, be it as it may, I propose to show by a few figures that, in spite of what idleness there may have been and in spite of what loss of wages and decreased purchasing power may have resulted, the laboring classes of this country were more prosperous during the year 1903 than ever before in our history. This will be seen, in the first place, from figures showing the savings of the people. The aggregate deposits in our national, savings, State, and private banks and loan and trust companies last year amounted to over $10,000,000,000, which was twice the amount in the same institutions in 1896. Of this amount $3,000,000,000 were in the savings banks, and to show the amount of money in these banks during the past few years I will introduce the following table:

Deposits in savings banks.

June 30:		June 30:
1893	$1,785,150,957	1899	$2,230,306,954
1894	1,747,961,280	1900	2,449,547,885
1895	1,810,597,023	1901	2,597,094,580
1896	1,907,156,277	1902	2,750,177,290
1897	1,939,376,035	1903	2,935,204,845
1898	2,065,631,298	1904 (estimated)	3,176,000,000

It will be seen that more savings were withdrawn than were deposited in 1894, the first year of the Wilson-Gorman tariff law, and that the increase for the next year or two was very slight. Since 1897, however, when the Dingley tariff became operative, the increase each year has been large and continuous. For the six years it amounts to $1,000,000,000, almost two hundred millions of this being added in 1903. This indicates that our laboring classes, whose surplus earnings for the most part are found in our savings banks, had all that was necessary during last year and considerable besides, and it puts out of commission the so-often asserted Democratic claim that the cost of living has increased much more than the income of the people. But these savings-banks deposits are only a part of the laboring man's surplus. There are the large sums invested in building and loan associations; there are the installments paid upon the home, and perhaps upon the furniture, which is being acquired from year to year and from month to month; and there are also the premiums paid upon the life-insurance policy, a most desirable way of preparing for a rainy day or for the adversity that is liable to come to any of us. And while referring to this matter of insurance, it is interesting and instructive to examine the published figures of two of our great life institutions, known as industrial companies. I refer to these two companies in particular because their insurance in force consists largely of small policies made out to the wage classes, who pay their little premiums weekly and monthly.

LIFE INSURANCE DATA.

The exhibit made by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company is indeed marvelous. The outstanding insurance of this company at the end of 1893 was $353,177,217. Ten years later, at the end of 1903, it was $1,342,381,457, a gain of almost $1,000,000,000. The gain in 1903, its greatest year, was $398,889,074. The exhibit of the Prudential Insurance Company also shows a most remarkable increase, the gain for 1903 being $293,208,942, of which $190,386,294 was in the industrial department. These two companies alone have $2,273,000,000 of outstanding insurance, a large portion of it being in the industrial departments, and written during the past seven years. But though these figures illustrate the large amount of insurance taken out last year and other recent years chiefly by the working classes, the same wonderful increase of business was shown by our other great insurance companies among all classes of our people. The year 1903 was by far the largest known, proving beyond question that the American people—farmers, mechanics, clerks, merchants, manufacturers, and professional men—not only added largely to savings and other surplus, but were able more than ever before to take out life insurance, the best mode of saving and providing for the future.

These figures of surplus earnings refute most emphatically the statement that the cost of living has increased more than wages and incomes. I am quite willing to admit, however, that it does cost us all more to live than it did during free-trade times. It costs more to wear shoes than to go barefoot. It costs more to live in a comfortable house than in a single barely furnished room. It costs more to eat meat twice or three times a day than oatmeal, corn bread, or fr e soup. It costs more to wear well-made and fashionable clothes than it does to dress in rags and shabby raiment. It costs more to send the children to school and college than it does to have them in the street. It costs more to buy books and magazines and newspapers than it does to go without. It costs more to have a sewing machine than it does to work with the needle. It costs more to use gas and coal than it does to use candles and coke. It costs more, far more, to live as does the fully employed, well-paid workman in protection times than it does the idle or poorly paid laborer of free-trade times. It costs more, far more, to maintain the American standard of living than it does the hand-to-mouth existence of one-third the laborers of free-trade England and the entire population of some countries of continental Europe.

HIGH STANDARD OF LIVING MADE POSSIBLE.

This high standard of living, now reached and maintained by all classes of our people from one end of the country to the other, is made possible because of the fact that as a people we are doing almost all of our own work, and for this work are being most handsomely remunerated. When the millions of working people, so called, as well as the more wealthy classes, are consuming the farmers' products and are able to pay for them a reasonable and profitable price, then our thirty millions of agriculturists and their families reap the benefit which is reflected back in their own consumption of manufactures, and the luxuries and conveniences that go to make up the comforts of the American home.

It is not necessary to more than briefly refer again to the great prosperity which has been enjoyed by the agricultural classes of this country under the Dingley law. I showed in a speech made in this Chamber two years ago that the increase in the annual value of our farm products and farm animals had amounted to considerably over $2,000,000,000 since 1896. Again last year the value of our farm products and farm animals showed an increase over all preceding years.

Ten of our staple products—wheat, oats, corn, rye, barley, buckwheat, cotton, hay, tobacco, and potatoes, foot up in value over $3,000,000,000, while for the first time in our history the value of farm animals last year was also in excess of $3,000,000,000. By the census of 1890, Mr. President, the value of all our farm products was placed at less than $2,500,000,000, but in this period of good times and prosperity it is safe to estimate the total value of our agricultural products at from five to six billions of dollars. These figures for the most part represent labor, and should be included among the wages of our working classes just as much as are the wages of mechanics, artisans, and workers in our factories. It is not necessary to present figures proving that the American farmer has profited enormously under the Dingley tariff, and that to-day his prosperity is fully maintained and still pointing upward. The great agricultural States of the West and Southwest were never so prosperous as they are to-day.

TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES.

Closely allied with this great prosperity of our farmers, their demand for manufactures and luxuries, and the demand of the consumers of the whole country for the products of the farm, is the great volume of business enjoyed by our transportation companies. With the fall of certain industrial stocks during 1903 we beheld day after day railroad shares tumbling as well, yet these same railroads were carrying on their business limited only by the facilities at their command. Record-breaking figures were shown month after month, and the cessation only came when the elements seemed to conspire to prevent the normal amount of transportation. This, however, was temporary, and with the clearing of the tracks and the advance of spring we shall no doubt again return to the wonderful record which has prevailed year after year since the enactment of the Dingley law.

It seems pertinent, in passing, to show how our great railroad companies have withstood, under a protective tariff, the assaults made upon the values of stocks and bonds during 1903. From the Railway Age, of Chicago, I take the following figures:

Years.	Placed under receiverships.			Sold under foreclosure.
	Number of roads.	Miles.	Stocks and bonds.	Number of roads.	Miles.	Stocks and bonds.
			Dollars.			Dollars.
1893	74	29,340	1,781,046,000	25	1,613	79,924,000
1894	38	7,025	395,791,000	42	5,643	318,999,000
1895	31	4,089	369,075,000	52	12,861	761,791,000
1896	34	5,441	275,597,000	58	13,730	1,150,377,000
1897	18	1,537	92,909,000	42	6,675	517,680,000
1898	18	2,069	138,701,000	47	6,054	252,910,000
1899	10	1,019	52,285,000	32	4,294	267,534,000
1900	16	1,165	78,234,000	24	3,477	190,374,000
1901	4	73	1,627,000	18	1,139	85,808,000
1902	5	278	5,835,000	18	693	39,895,000
1903	9	229	18,823,000	13	555	15,885,000

Last year was the best year in American railroading, and the figures that I have quoted prove most emphatically that we are enjoying a protection that is panic proof, and that the railroad business of the country is established on a basis sufficiently strong to withstand the fluctuations of Wall street.

This great volume of business, Mr. President, inaugurated upon our farms and in our factories, and continued by our great transportation companies through the various channels of distribution to the consumer, is reflected in many ways, two of which I will refer to.

BANK CLEARINGS.

The figures of bank clearings, while to some extent deceptive in character, at least show the relative increase of business from year to year and from period to period. I wish to append here a table showing the amount of clearings from 1894 to 1903, inclusive.

1894	$45,028,496,746
1896	51,935,651,733
1897	54,179,545,059
1898	65,924,820,769
1899	88,828,672,533
1900	84,582,470,081
1901	114,819,702,046
1903	114,068,837,502

This shows an increase of 150 per cent for 1903 over the year 1894, and considerably more than 100 per cent over the best years of the period covered by the Wilson-Gorman tariff. While the bank clearings of New York City, which include the transactions in stocks and bonds, have fallen off somewhat during the past few months, yet in that same period the bank clearings of the country outside of that city have maintained or exceeded the high record already reached. For instance, while the clearings in New York City, in round numbers, decreased from seventy-seven billions in 1901 to seventy billions in 1903, the clearings in the country at large were one hundred and fourteen and some odd billions in both years, showing a most substantial gain in all parts of the country except Wall street.

INCREASED POSTAL RECEIPTS.

Turning, now, from these large amounts, which represent the great financial transactions attendant upon all business, I wish to call attention to the increase that has been made in our postal revenue during the past few years. The following table shows the revenue of the Department from 1893 to 1903:

1900	102,354,579
1901	111,631,193

This shows that the revenues for 1903 are 80 per cent greater than they were in 1893. It is expected that the receipts for the current year will exceed $150,000,000, while the appropriation carried by the bill which we have passed at this session amounts, I believe, to about $170,000,000, a gain of considerably more than 100 per cent over the receipts of ten years ago. These postal receipts reflect the condition of our people in a way just as much as does the hundreds of billions of bank clearings. They represent the necessary business communications in every industry, and they represent also the social communications of all classes of our people.

Kindred to the postal business of the country in a large degree is the business of our telegraph and telephone companies, and these, too, show that 1903 broke the record as has every preceding year since 1897. The increase in telephone business is shown in the following statistics of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and the operating companies connected with it:

Total employees	14,425	50,350
Total subscribers	325,244	1,277,983

—the increase in both employees and subscribers being almost 400 per cent for the ten years.

GREATEST INDUSTRIAL YEAR.

And so I might continue, Mr. President, and show that both the fiscal and calendar year of 1903 was as a whole the greatest industrial year of our history. Our pig-iron production increased from 6,557,338 tons in 1894 to 15,878,354 tons in 1901, to 17,821,307 tons in 1902, and to 18,009,252 tons in 1903. And while it is true there came a depression in the iron trade in the last months of 1903, it only lasted a comparatively short time and the resumption of activity is most marked. The Bulletin of the American Iron and Steel Association of March 25, 1904, says: "There is almost as much activity in the iron trade of this country as prevailed when the depression began nine months ago." As it must be admitted that the greatest depression experienced was in iron and steel, and as that has almost completely passed away, we need only consider it as a part of the adverse circumstances of 1903, which I have shown were without disastrous results on the general prosperity of the country.

EXPORT DISCOUNTS.

And now, Mr. President, I wish briefly to take up a subject that seems to have given our Democratic friends much concern and anxiety, namely, the question of export discounts, or the practice of selling our wares cheaper in the foreign than in the home market. When this contention is advanced by our opponents it is invariably asserted that it is the wicked trusts which adopt this pernicious business method, because they are protected by the iniquitous tariff, which enables them to charge exorbitant prices at home while they are satisfied with a moderate profit abroad. And so our Democratic friends offered $100, I believe it was, for a table showing such prices, and this table has been doing service until it has been literally worn threadbare. It reminds me of a table that was used by the Democracy in the campaign of 1888. At that time they were very solicitous about the poor farmer and his mortgages, so they got some free-trade statistician (than which there is no more clever individual on earth) to compile a table of farm mortgages in the several States.

This went the rounds of the Democratic press under the caption of "Western Farm Mortgages," and purported to tell of the great load of debt under which the poor farmers of Kansas, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Ohio were laboring. It was a very pretty argument for a time, till some one in examining the compendium of the Tenth Census found that the total value of the farms in those States was represented by identically the same figures as were found in the farm-mortgage table of the free trade press. Of course the bubble then burst, and the fraudulent table was withdrawn from circulation. There are many other such instances of free-trade compilation, but this will suffice as an illustration of their methods.

But to return to the export discount matter. The curious thing about it, Mr. President, is that in some respects it is true, and when we find Democratic statistics approaching the truth our suspicions are at once aroused, and we are compelled to examine more closely into the subject.

Now, to begin with, the policy in some instances of selling cheaper than the market price is a custom that prevails the world over in every line of industry and commerce known to the human race. It is practiced by the fruit vender on our sidewalks, who, at whatever price he can get, disposes of his fast decaying and almost unsalable wares. It is practiced by the merchant, when annually or semiannually he has his great mark-down sale to dispose of shop-worn and damaged goods, fabrics out of date, and of a surplus stock to make room for more seasonable goods. It is practiced by our manufacturers for several reasons. Sometimes it is to dispose of a surplus stock in order that the mill may not be shut down and that the workingmen may not be deprived of employment and wages. Sometimes it is to introduce into a foreign market a new article or a new model in order to gain a foothold, and to introduce a line of goods where they have not before been sold.

Sometimes it is to retain a market that, because of most zealous competition, is liable to be lost unless a temporary sacrifice is made to hold that customer. There are various other reasons why this business policy is sometimes resorted to, but, Mr. President, it is by no means a custom known only to American manufacturers. It is adopted by the manufacturers and merchants of every country on the face of the earth, and it is considered good business policy when it is undertaken, or else it would not be resorted to. It would be just as easy, however, to compile a table showing that in every instance where our goods are sold for a less price abroad than at home, there are similar or more instances where they are sold at a greater price. Particularly is this true of our agricultural implements, which are constantly being sold in Australia and other countries at a price much greater than they command at home. But this does not in any way seem to trouble our Democratic friends, so I will confine myself to the question of goods sold abroad at a lower price than at home.

I have admitted that goods are sometimes thus sold; but I must also emphasize the fact that the percentage of such goods sold as compared with our total output is so insignificant as to make the whole subject a mere bugaboo, not worthy of notice were it not for the fact that its constant reiteration has dignified it almost to the level of a campaign issue. Whoever will take pains to look into this question, studying most carefully the report of the recent Industrial Commission, which went into the matter fully, and whose report upon the subject is exceedingly clear and intelligible, will find that this percentage of goods sold at an export discount is, in round numbers, as follows:

Total annual value of manufactures	$15,000,000,000
Exports of manufactures	400,000,000
Value of exports sold at lower prices abroad	4,000,000

To this extent, then, we are willing to concede that our manufacturers resort to this practice of cutting foreign prices, for the reasons which I have already mentioned. In volume 13 of the report of the Industrial Commission there are tabulated 416 replies bearing upon this question. The report says:

> The great majority of the answers indicated that prices are no lower abroad than they are for domestic consumers, and a considerable number indicate that foreign prices are higher.

Among those who stated that they sell a portion of their goods abroad lower than at home the following reasons are given:

> Cash payments and large purchases in the foreign trade, whereas the domestic trade is based on credits and small purchases.
> The drawback or rebate of the tariff on imported raw material of goods manufactured for export.
> To overcome the tariff of other countries.
> To secure new markets.
> To hold a market against new competitors.
> To clear out surplus stock or to prevent a shut down and increased cost of production by keeping mills running and men employed.
> To get rid of samples and out-of-date goods.
> Because the expense of selling and advertising is less abroad than at home.

Now as to the amount which is sold abroad at these lower prices. I have already given it as $4,000,000 annually, although the total sales reported to the Industrial Commission were only about one-third of this amount, and the average difference in price, it may be added, was less than 5 per cent. Allowing the greatest margin possible then, we have a total amounting to only 1 per cent of our manufactured goods sold abroad, and these goods sold abroad amount to less than 3 per cent of our total output. This great bugaboo, then, consists of less than three one-hundredths of 1 per cent of our total manufactures, admitting, as we are quite willing to do, all that our opponents claim.

I may say further in this connection that 80 per cent of the replies to the Industrial Commission made assertions that sales were made abroad at the same or a higher price than at home.

With but one exception the manufacturers of agricultural implements reported that prices to foreign purchasers were either higher or no lower than to the domestic trade. Not a single textile manufacturer reported lower prices abroad, while the makers of typewriters and stoves, household utensils and ordinary wares, all reported that export prices are the same or higher than are the domestic prices.

In the face of these returns, which, by the way, are not prize statistics, but authoritative figures in every instance, shall we, because of the fact that three one-hundredths of 1 per cent, or $4,000,000 worth, of our manufactured goods are sold abroad at a lower figure than at home, tear down our tariff wall and submit the other $14,996,000,000 to the ruthless competition of the hungry horde of pauper-p id foreign competitors? It is, Mr. President, a most astounding proposition to come from even the Democratic press and the free-trade element of this country.

As this is one of the principal objections urged against our present tariff, it would seem as if our political opponents must be in the last throes of despair, being obliged to resort to the flimsiest arguments that have ever been put forth in support of any proposition. The export discount question is not worth a moment's thought in connection with the grand problems associated with our great tariff law and its operation, and yet because of the foolish contention that our "tariff-fostered trusts," as our Democratic friends call them, rob the American people, it seems best that the exact facts in the case should be made known.

TARIFF REDUCTION.

In order to expose these fancied abuses, which I have shown to be insignificant in the extreme, the Democratic party is to go forth in the coming campaign following the banner on which is inscribed "Tariff Reduction and Genuine Reciprocity." It is not necessary for me at this time to make and substantiate the claim that tariff reduction is nothing more nor less than practical free trade. The smallest hole in the bottom of the pail will let out the water just as well as the largest hole, though not as quickly. The tiny leak in the roof will let in the rain and damage the house quite as much, if not more, than the conspicuous leak which can readily be detected and mended. Any reduction of our tariff below the point where it ceases to be protective will work as much injury to an industry so affected as if the entire duty were at once taken off. It is admitted by economists of both schools that duties which do not compensate for the difference in the cost of labor are practically free-trade duties, so that when our friends who are fearful of pronouncing the dreaded word free trade resort to the expressions tariff reform or tariff reduction, they are begging the question.

But, Mr. President, this is not a time for equivocation or bandying of words. Our present most successful tariff is composed of schedules that will protect the American workingman from foreign competition. Some of these duties should be increased in order to carry out the full object of the law. It is possible that some might safely be reduced, and yet so perfect has the law proved to be in its entirety that the American workingman is quite satisfied to let it alone for the present rather than undergo the disturbance to business which always accompanies a tariff discussion and change of law. If, however, future conditions shall require changes to be made the Republican party will make them in such manner as not to bring about the disastrous consequences that have always resulted from Democratic tariff legislation.

The best assurance that possibly can be given on this point is the fact that since the enactment of the Morrill tariff law of 1861 the Republican party has made more than a score of changes in tariff schedules which experience had shown to be necessary.

DEMOCRATIC RECIPROCITY.

Now a few words, Mr. President, concerning the latest device to break down the wall which shelters our people and protects them from the competition of lower-paid workingmen in different parts of the world. Coupled with the words "tariff reduction" on this new and brightly painted Democratic banner unfurled for the coming campaign, we see the words "genuine reciprocity." No doubt in the coming Democratic campaign text-book we shall find a definition and an explanation of just what genuine reciprocity is. But, after all, I think that it will be found that the adjective is entirely superfluous, unless it is another instance of fear and deception. The same party that is afraid to use the term free trade and substitutes therefor the term tariff reduction is evidently afraid to use the term Democratic reciprocity, and so has coined the meaningless term "genuine reciprocity" to take its place.

This subject has been so fully discussed during the past year or two, so many speeches have been made, so many editorials and articles have been written, and so much has been said in general conversation, that the American people know pretty well by this time the true meaning of reciprocity, and they also know the difference between the Republican interpretation and the Democratic interpretation of that phrase.

But I contend, Mr. President, that there is no such thing in reality as qualified reciprocity. The word means one thing and one thing only. Go to the Century Dictionary and you will find there the following definitions:

FIRST: RECIPROCITY, Equality of commercial privileges between the subjects of different governments in each other's ports, with respect to shipping or merchandise, to the extent established by treaty.

SECOND: RECIPROCITY TREATY, A treaty granting equal privileges of commercial intercourse in certain specified particulars to the people of the countries concerned.

It will be seen then that reciprocity means equality of commercial privileges, and that a reciprocity treaty is a treaty granting equal privileges of commercial intercourse. Now whatever is equal can not be unequal, and any reciprocity treaty entered into between this country and any other nation should give equal advantages to both. A nation of 80,000,000 people can not enter into a treaty with a country of 6,000,000 in competing productions and make a trade that will be equal or reciprocal, and especially so if production is cheaper in one country than in the other. It is an absolute impossibility. When a boy trades a top which is worth a dime for a knife which is worth about the same amount, that is reciprocity; but when a boy trades a valuable four-bladed knife in perfect condition for a knife with one rusty broken blade, that is not reciprocity, but idiocy.

The Republican party and Republican leaders have been and are still in favor of reciprocity. They do not talk of "real" reciprocity or "genuine" reciprocity, because the simple word itself carries with it the full meaning of the policy. There is no such thing as real virtue or genuine virtue, there is no such thing as real honesty or genuine honesty, for one is either virtuous or he is not, he is either honest or dishonest. A treaty involving opportunities of more or less free exchanges of a country's productions will be either reciprocal or not. If it is not an absolutely equal interchange, with equal benefits and advantages, then it is not reciprocity; it is free trade or something worse, if there can be anything worse.

An example of reciprocity that reciprocated is found in the growth of our trade with Cuba under the reciprocity clause of the McKinley tariff act, and with Hawaii under the treaty of 1876. Those countries had articles that we could not produce, which they exchanged for our products which they could not produce. That is reciprocity of the proper kind. The result was that our exports to Cuba in 1889 amounted to $1,500,000, and in 1893 they had increased to $24,157,000. Our imports from Cuba in 1889 were $52,000,000, and in 1893 they had increased to $78,706,000. Our exports to Hawaii in 1876, the year in which the reciprocity treaty became operative, were $779,257, and in 1900, the year in which Hawaii was annexed to the United States, they had increased to $13,509,000. Our imports from Hawaii in 1876 were $1,227,000, and in 1900 they had increased to $20,707,000. It will thus be seen that our imports and exports increased in about the same ratio, and when it is remembered that the exchange was in noncompetitive products the wisdom of a reciprocity treaty of that kind is self-evident. No such reciprocal trade relations could possibly be established between this country and Canada, the products of both countries being substantially the same.

It is quite possible that a treaty of reciprocity might be entered into between the United States and Canada, or between the United States and France, or some other country, which might benefit or seem to benefit some one of our citizens or some group of our people, but just as surely would it endanger the interests of some other citizen or some other group of people within our boundaries. And so in considering this subject we must look at it from the same standpoint as have our Republican legislators when framing our tariff laws. We must know no sectionalism in this matter. We must not legislate, by treaty or otherwise, in a way that will prove advantageous to the industries of Minnesota at a sacrifice to the farmers of Iowa. We must not legislate, by treaty or otherwise, in a manner that may prove advantageous to a concern at Fall River, Mass., or Manchester, N. H., at a sacrifice to the farmers of any section of our country.

Human nature includes, I know, a considerable portion of selfishness, and yet if there is any spot in this country where this quality should be absolutely eliminated it is in these halls of Congress where we are sent to protect the interests of every portion of our country, and every class of our citizens. There has never been in any Republican platform an allusion to reciprocity which has not meant an exchange of noncompetitive commodities, to the disadvantage of no part of our country or portion of our people. There has never been a single utterance, not one, of any Republican statesman at variance with this definition of the word reciprocity, which means equality of exchange.

If we can enter into a treaty of noncompeting products that would give an advantage to our country equal to that which we give to the other, then the Republican party is ready to enter into such a treaty now or at any time in the future; but so long as this reciprocity, advocated by our friends on the other side—this so-called genuine reciprocity, this Democratic reciprocity, this free-trade reciprocity, which means giving much for little, which means giving something for nothing—is asked for, the Republican party will not consent to enter into any such jug-handle and unequal exchange, which is bound to work to the disadvantage of this country as a whole, and bring incalculable harm to the American people.

In order to show the result of our former experience under so-called reciprocity with Canada, I give the following table of our trade with that country, including the two years preceding and the two years following the operation of the treaty which existed from September 11, 1854, to March 17, 1866:

Fiscal years.	Imports into United States from Canada.	Exports from United States to Canada.
1852	$5,469,445	$10,229,608
1853	6,527,559	12,432,597
1854	8,784,412	24,073,408
1855	15,118,289	27,741,808
1856	21,276,614	29,025,349
1857	22,108,916	24,138,482
1858	15,784,836	23,604,526
1859	19,287,505	28,109,494
1860	23,572,796	22,695,928
1861	23,724,489	22,676,513
1862	18,511,025	20,573,070
1863	17,484,786	27,619,814
1864	29,608,736	26,574,624
1865	33,264,403	28,829,402
1866[a]	48,528,628	24,828,880
1867	25,044,005	21,020,302
1868	26,261,379	24,080,777

[a] Nine months of year under reciprocity.

Before the treaty we were selling the Canadians twice as much as we bought from them, while long before the termination of the treaty they were selling us much more than we sold them, and during the last year of the treaty their sales to us were double ours to them. That may be free-trade reciprocity or Democratic reciprocity or "genuine" reciprocity, but it is not Republican reciprocity. Now, look at our commerce with that country under the Dingley tariff law:

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF MERCHANDISE INTO AND FROM THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

Fiscal year.	Imports.	Exports.
1897	$40,309,371	$64,928,821
1898	31,870,486	83,714,086
1899	31,220,967	87,974,961
1900	39,369,074	95,319,970
1901	42,482,163	105,789,214
1902	48,076,124	109,642,993
1903	54,660,410	123,432,416

It seems to me that we are doing very well with Canada in spite of her preferential tariff of 33⅓ per cent in favor of goods from the United Kingdom.

INCREASE OF HOME MARKET POSSIBLE.

Referring very briefly to this quest of our Democratic friends after foreign markets, I should like to draw attention to the fact that we have at our very doors, without crossing the seas, with its expenses for freight and the various disadvantageous accompaniments of foreign exports, a market which seems well worth considering and well worth cultivating, but which sometimes is apparently overlooked by tariff reformers.

We are now importing annually over $1,000,000,000 worth of goods, about one-half of which could be produced in this country. We are importing over $50,000,000 worth of cotton manufactures, about $20,000,000 worth of woolen manufactures, some $50,000,000 worth of manufactures of iron and steel, $75,000,000 worth of sugar, $35,000,000 worth of manufactures of silk, and many other millions worth of manufactures in metal and wood, which could well be made in this country, giving to our own labor the advantages of employment in those industries. It is not necessary to break down our tariff laws by lower duties or treaties in order to obtain an increased market for hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of manufactured products in our own country. The market is right here in the United States, and while it is but a small proportion of the total value of our home market, which we already possess, it certainly is well worth acquiring.

TWENTY YEARS' PROGRESS.

The following table gives at a glance a view of the progress of our country in its material industries during the last twenty years, in spite of the disastrous results which we experienced under the low-tariff period of the last Democratic administration. These figures speak so eloquently for themselves that it is not necessary for me to more than call attention to them:

THE TRUE POLICY.

And now, Mr. President, I wish only to add that we have all heard of the Iowa idea, of the Minne ota idea, of the Massachusetts idea, and perhaps some corner or some ci izen of some other State or Territory may have some other idea; but, Mr. President, such ideas can not long live. There is only one idea that we should cultivate and nourish and maintain, and that is the American idea, a policy not beneficial to one locality or to a single industry, but a fiscal policy that protects all alike in every part of our great and growing country, that protects the farmer and the factory hand, the manufacturer and the artisan, the professional man, the laborer and income earner in every walk of life. Such a policy is fully exemplified in our present most successful tariff law, a tariff that was the causative factor in restoring prosperity, the saving factor in maintaining it, and best of all a tariff that when adverse conditions exist, when folly and finance for a time go hand in hand, when even the very elements seem to conspire against us, insures the preservation of prosperity, because of protection that is absolutely panic proof.

A CLOSING WORD.

Mr. President, in this great country of ours to all men of energy and enterprise the key of Opportunity is at hand, with which to open the treasures of the field, the mine, the factory, and the counting-room. There is no such thing in this land as an aristocracy of wealth, the road to wealth being open and free to all. The miner of to-day may be the millionaire of to-morrow. The man who operates the shuttles has before him the alluring prospect of becoming a captain of industry. For every young man a beacon light of hope is burning, and the beckoning hand of the goddess of fortune cheers him on his way to higher attainments and better things. The only real dangers in his pathway are his own weaknesses and the possibility of false and harmful legislative enactments. The one is in his own keeping—the other rests with us, the lawmakers of the nation. Let us be wise, and by continuing to uphold the principle of Protection keep wide open the door of opportunity to all of our people, thus strengthening the national character, and advancing the material, moral, and educational interests of the United States. For that I plead to-day, and confidently submit the question to the arbitrament of the American people when they shall register their verdict at the polls next November.

Mr. BACON. I did not deem it proper to interrupt the Senator at the particular point of his speech which suggested the inquiry I am about to make. I will state that I am asking for information and not for the purpose of entering into an argument. The Senator stated, if I understood him correctly, that the internal commerce of this country is worth $22,000,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I should like to know, as the Senator seems to have given very exhaustive examination to this subject, if he can state accurately or approximately how much of that $22,000,000,000 is represented by manufactured products?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I can not give the Senator the exact amount at this moment, but——

Mr. BACON. I suggest this to the Senator to see whether or not I am correct in something else I heard in his very interesting speech. I understood the Senator to say at another point in his speech that our manufactured product is represented by $15,000,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. And that our manufactured export is about $400,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is correct.

Mr. BACON. So, if I am correct in that statement, that possibly would answer the question which I propounded to the honorable Senator. Am I correct in that?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. According to that, then, the consumption in the United States of domestic manufactured articles would be somewhere between fourteen and fifteen billion dollars.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that I have in my committee room the figures representing those various points, but I did not differentiate; I took the total.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator is correct in the latter statement, as to the total amount of domestic manufactures in America and the amount exported, of course the difference would approximately represent the amount consumed in this country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I desired to make the inquiry because I myself wish to use it as the basis of some remarks.

Mr. President, with the permission of the Senate, I give notice that on Monday, after the conclusion of the morning business, I will request the courtesy of the Senate that I may submit some remarks upon the pending resolution and the amendment offered by myself, and with that view I would ask that they lie on the table until that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I am very glad he has raised this point. I will furnish him with the figures I had access to, covering the question he has asked, because we want to be accurate on this matter. I certainly do, and I know the Senator does.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Maine allow the Chair to dispose of certain matters on his table?

Mr. HALE. Yes; I yield to routine business.

GOVERNMENT OF CANAL ZONE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5342) to provide for the temporary government of the canal zone at Panama, the protection of the canal works, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment proposed by the House, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the committee of conference on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. KITTREDGE, Mr. HOPKINS, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN subsequently said: I desire, on a matter that has just been acted upon, to say a word. We could not hear very well on this side what occurred in regard to the Panama Canal bill, and I should like to have reported just what occurred. I am not aware what it was. The bill came back to the Senate with an amendment as a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] moved that the Senate disagree to the House amendment and ask for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate. That was done, and the Chair appointed the conferees.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Chair kindly have it announced who were appointed as the conferees?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conferees appointed are the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that in view of the oversight, as I have no doubt it was, on the part of whoever made the suggestion, to be excused from serving on the conference committee, and that the senior member on this side of the committee, as is always the rule, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], may be substituted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland declines to serve as a conferee——

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I respectfully decline to serve on that conference committee. I bow with humility to the breach of the rule by the Chair, that is known to the Senate, and accept the discourtesy that is shown to me with proper humility, I hope. I certainly will not consent under any conditions to serve on the conference committee under existing circumstances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I hope the Senator does not hold the Chair responsible.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know whom to hold responsible except the Chair, unless some Senator suggested it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair always appoints the conferees suggested by the committee.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that I may be excused from service on the conference committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks that he may be excused from service on the conference committee. The Chair hears no objection, and he is excused.

BULL RUN FOREST RESERVE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3036) for the protection of the Bull Run Forest Reserve and the sources of the water supply of the city of Portland, State of Oregon.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 8, to strike out all after "shall" down to and including "thereof," in line 9, and insert "knowingly trespass thereon."

On page 2, line 12, to strike out "less than one" and insert "to exceed five."

On page 2, in lines 12 and 13, to strike out "nor more than $1,000."

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

STATE CLAIMS FOR REIMBURSEMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1343) to amend an act approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain,' approved July 8, 1898, etc., and for other purposes."

The amendment of the House was, on page 2, to strike out all of section 2 and insert:

SEC. 2. That where the governor of any State or Territory has furnished military transportation, or has purchased or authorized the purchase of supplies, or incurred expenses for services rendered, and which purchases of supplies and expenses for military transportation and services rendered have been certified by the governor of such State or Territory as necessary, just, and reasonable for the organization, maintenance, transportation, and comfort of troops raised by him and accepted into the service of the United States Army in the said war with Spain, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow in the settlement of claims for reimbursement now on file in the office of the Auditor for the War Department, such items or parts thereof as have been disallowed in the consideration of said claims, for the reason that they appear to have been for stores furnished or expenses incurred or transportation furnished after the troops raised had been mustered into the service of the United States; and the certificate of the governor of any such State or Territory that such expenses were incurred in good faith, for the sole purpose of aiding the United States in the raising, organization, transportation, and equipment of troops, shall be held to be sufficient to authorize the final settlement and payment in full of such claims for reimbursement.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HARRY C. MIX.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask for the change of reference of a bill? It will take but a moment.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator would wait until to-morrow morning. I am beset by many Senators to give way.

Mr. BACON. It is not for any action except to change the reference of a bill.

Mr. HALE. Well, the Senator may do it.

Mr. BACON. The bill (H. R. 875) for the relief of Harry C. Mix was inadvertently referred to the Committee on Claims. I have conferred with the chairman of that committee. I ask that the bill be withdrawn from that committee and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so ordered.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me that I may submit a report that it may be printed before to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. That is morning business. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13860) making ap propriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report thereon.

This is, I believe, the last of the appropriation bills. I will ask the Senate to take it up to-morrow morning, provided the deficiency appropriation bill shall have been disposed of, or, if not, that the bill may immediately follow the consideration of the general deficiency bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER, LOUISIANA.

The bill (H. R. 14588) to revive and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Red River, in the State of Louisiana, at or near Shreveport," was read twice by its title.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5605) to revive and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Red River, in the State of Louisiana, at or near Shreveport," to report it without amendment, and I submit a report thereon.

It is precisely similar to the House bill, and I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill, and the Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the House bill be passed; it is only for the building of a bridge.

Mr. BERRY. It consists of only two sections. If the Senator from Maine will consent to its passage, I will be very glad to have it considered now.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a very important matter.

Mr. HALE. I am beset by a dozen different Senators who desire to have bills passed.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator from Maine will permit me to say one word, I will state that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] is especially anxious to have the bill passed, and the Senator, I think, will understand that the Senator from Louisiana does not often call on the Senate. I would be very much obliged if the Senator from Maine will let this bill pass. There are only two sections of it.

Mr. HALE. Two or three other Senators have told me that they have not called on the Senate at all before, and they desire to have bills passed. I have no more interest in getting the deficiency appropriation bill through in order to hasten adjournment than other Senators; but if Senators think it is more important to dispose of these bills, the deficiency bill will quite likely go over until next week, and we shall not adjourn at the time we all hoped. I should say that it is perfectly fair to all Senators if the regular order goes on and is considered, and the Senate considers on my motion the deficiency appropriation bill. But if Senators think that the time ought to be given up to the passage of these bills——

Mr. BERRY. I trust the Senator will make an exception in this case.

Mr. HALE. I shall not make an exception. If I yield to the Senator, I shall yield to half a dozen. I certainly shall do so.

Mr. BERRY. It is not a matter I am interested in, I will state to the Senator, but a matter in which the Senator from Louisiana is especially interested in. Of course, if the Senator declines to yield, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. HALE. If I yield in this case I will yield in half a dozen others.

THOMAS J. CAMPTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 10046) granting an increase of pension to Thomas J. Campton, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate; and it was indefinitely postponed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 4316) providing for the appointment of additional judges in the Indian Territory, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate; and it was indefinitely postponed.

MINERAL LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 3596) to amend section 2327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning mineral lands, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not exactly understand the situation in which the bill comes back. Was it rejected in the House and returned?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A similar House bill has passed and the Senate bill was recalled on the motion of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. This is the bill which was recalled yesterday?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was recalled yesterday. It will be indefinitely postponed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1554) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments be considered as they are reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. The Chair hears no objection.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED BILLS.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the ordinary routine business, we may go to the Calendar during the morning hour.

Mr. HALE. If the deficiency appropriation bill is still pending, as it is desirable and almost essential that it shall go through to-morrow, I can not consent to that now.

Mr. TELLER. I always except appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the routine business is completed, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. For unobjected cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under Rule VIII.

Mr. HALE. Not to interfere with appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not to interfere with appropriation bills. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11676) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation, of Montana, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect, and requesting a conference of the two Houses on the disagreeing votes thereon.

Mr. BARD. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the request for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. BARD, Mr. STEWART, and Mr. OVERMAN were appointed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14416) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. In the absence of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the request for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12647) to establish a supreme court for the Indian Territory and to provide for additional United States judges therein, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, and Mr. BACON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15054) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of State," on page 1, after line 8, to strike out:

To meet the annual share, for the fiscal year 1903, of the United States in the expenses of the International Sanitary Bureau, created by the First International Sanitary Conference of the American Republics in pursuance of a resolution of the Pan-American Conference during the winter of 1901 and 1902, $2,830.79.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill to tell us why this provision is stricken out? It is the appropriation of a small amount, and one that has been made in pursuance of an understanding at the international conference held in Mexico in 1901, and it is a matter of considerable importance. It is one growing out of continual service in this matter of the sanitary bureau, which all of the physicians of the country, I understand, regard as a matter of very great importance. I, myself, do not know of any reason why it should be stricken out, and I should like to have the Senator from Maine inform us.

Mr. HALE. It is difficult to hear what the Senator says.

Mr. TELLER. I wish we could have a little more order here. I can not myself hear the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. GORMAN. I inquired of the Senator from Maine why it was that this small appropriation, providing for our proportion of the expenses of the International Sanitary Bureau created under the agreement made in Mexico in 1901, is stricken out. It is a matter of very considerable importance, and has been regarded so by the whole medical fraternity of the United States. I understand that the appropriation is strictly in conformity with our share, and it is an insignificant amount. That agreement was entered into and is reported to us in Senate Document No. 13 by the Secretary of State.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is referring to the item at the bottom of page 1 and at the top of page 2?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, sir, I am.

Mr. HALE. That is already taken care of in the sundry civil appropriation bill and was struck out of this bill.

Mr. GORMAN. It was in the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE. It was in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and has already passed the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. So our proportion of that expense for the next year has been amply provided for?

Mr. HALE. Yes; that is the reason why it was stricken out here.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer an amendment, though we have not reached that point of the bill, so that it may be printed. It is on page 89 of the bill as it came from the House, section 3, which is now numbered section 5. It is that portion of the bill concerning Chinese immigration. I desire to strike out all of section 5 as now numbered and sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13 and substitute what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HALE. That will come up hereafter.

Mr. TELLER. I do not propose to take it up now. I only wanted to get the amendment in. I give notice that I am going to move it at the proper time unless we can make some changes in the existing text of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will lie on the table.

Mr. HALE. I have here a document which I ask may be printed, because it is referred to in the bill as a printed document.

Mr. BATE. Do I understand that the amendments are to be passed over until the bill has been read, or are the amendments being considered now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments are first to be acted upon. After the committee amendments have been finished, then the bill will be open to amendment on the floor of the Senate. The Chair did not understand the request of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the printing of a document because it is referred to in the bill as a document. I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after line 3, to strike out:

To enable the United States to participate in an international congress to be held to consider two drafts of international conventions relative to collisions and salvage, which were adopted at the last meeting of the International Maritime Committee, held at Hamburg in 1902, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 9, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of State, as an act of grace and comity, to reimburse the Compagnie Française des Cables Télégraphiques for expenses incurred in repairing its cables and property, which were cut and damaged by United States forces in Cuba during the Spanish-American war, $77,712.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Maine will give us some explanation in regard to the proposed payment to this French company for cutting their cables during the Spanish war.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Foreign Relations investigated this subject and reported it as an amendment. The papers in that committee show that the facts are as stated in the amendment, and the amount is fixed by correspondence with the State Department. But the representative of the Committee on Foreign Relations has the papers and knows much more about the details. It was upon that report and those papers that the Committee on Appropriations put in the item.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Maine will permit this amendment to be passed over.

Mr. HALE. Yes; until the representative of the Foreign Relations Committee appears on the floor. The documents have been sent for. The amendment may be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and continued to line 2, page 3, the last paragraph read being as follows:

For minister resident and consul-general to Santo Domingo for the fiscal year 1905, $5,000, and so much of the diplomatic and consular appropriation act for the fiscal year 1905 as appropriates for the salary of a consul-general to Santo Domingo is hereby repealed.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill state why that item is necessary.

Mr. HALE. Owing to the conditions in the island it was thought better to provide for the matter in the way the House has done, and that disposes, of course, of the services of the consul-general.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Foreign intercourse," on page 3, after line 2, to insert:

The consulate at Erzerum, Turkey, is hereby transferred to Trebizond, Turkey, and the appropriations for salary of consul at the former place for 1904 and 1905 may be applied to payment of salary of consul at Trebizond, Turkey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 25, to increase the appropriation to pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation for "Contingent expenses, United States consulates," for the fiscal year 1903, from $16,161.32 to $16,451.24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," on page 6, after line 8, to insert:

Payment to owners of Norwegian steamship Nicaragua: To pay to the owners of the Norwegian steamship Nicaragua in full for compensation for damage to said owners by reason of the rescue of an American citizen, John McCafferty, and the consequent quarantine of said ship at Mobile, Ala., in the year 1854, $4,926.67.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 6, to insert:

For fees and expenses, including remuneration for Special Assistant Attorney-General, in the investigation and prosecution of certain frauds upon the customs service, the same to continue available until expended, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Revenue-Cutter Service," on page 8, line 21, to increase the appropriation to pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation "Expenses of Revenue-Cutter Service," for the fiscal year 1903, from $13,539.56 to $13,643.36.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Collecting internal revenue," on page 9, line 13, to increase the appropriation to pay amounts certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation "Redemption of stamps" from $96.75 to $123.75.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 18, to increase the appropriation to pay amounts certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the appropriation "Refunding taxes illegally collected" from $75.33 to $82.83.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "District of Columbia," at the top of page 12, to insert:

Rock Creek Park: For amount due Glenn Brown for designs for concrete bridges in Rock Creek Park, to be expended under the direction of the board of control of said park, for the fiscal year 1902, $55.96.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 7, to insert:

That the appropriation of $12,250 for furniture for new school buildings and additions to buildings provided in the act making appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, is hereby made available for the equipment of such buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 23, to insert:

For amount required for the construction of an open underground drain for the Congress Heights engine house, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 2, to insert:

For amount required for deepening well, Congress Heights engine house, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 14, to insert:

For additional amount required for the necessary traveling expenses of sanitary and food inspectors while traveling outside of the District of Columbia for the purpose of inspecting dairy farms, milk, and other dairy products, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the following paragraph on page 16, from line 14 to line 21, inclusive:

Judgments: For payment of the judgments, including costs, against the District of Columbia, set forth in House Document No. 652 of this session, $5,335.40, together with a further sum to pay the interest, at not exceeding 4 per cent, on said judgments, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment.

Mr. HALE. On page 16, after the word "fifty-two," in line 16, I move to insert "and Senate Document numbered ——." I shall fill in the blank in conference. Then, in line 17, in the same clause, after the word "session," I move to strike out "$5,335.40" and to insert "$8,613.95."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, in line 16, after the word "fifty-two," it is proposed to insert "and Senate Document numbered ——;" and in line 17, after the word "session," to strike out "$5,335.40" and insert "$8,613.95;" so as to make the clause read:

Judgments: For payment of the judgments, including costs, against the District of Columbia, set forth in House Document numbered 652 and Senate Document numbered ——, of this session, $8,613.95, together with a further sum to pay the interest, at not exceeding 4 per cent, on said judgments, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 16, after line 21, to insert:

Writs of lunacy: For amount due Dr. D. Percy Hickling for services as witness in alleged lunacy cases, three certificates, at $10 each, for the fiscal years that follow:
For the fiscal year 1899, $20.
For the fiscal year 1901, $10.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCOMAS. I want to ask to return for a moment to page 7, line 17. I wish to offer an amendment there, which I hope will not delay the bill.

Mr. HALE. The order has been settled that committee amendments are first to be considered. Then, when they are disposed of, other amendments may be offered.

Mr. McCOMAS. Very well. I will wait until that time.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "War Department," on page 20, line 1, after the word "employees," to insert "provided by law for either of said offices shall be regarded as employees;" and after the word "bureau," at the end of line 2, to insert "and;" so as to make the clause read:

That whenever the office of the Adjutant-General and the Record and Pension Office shall be consolidated by operation of law any appropriation available at the time of such consolidation, or that may thereafter become available, for the support of either of those offices shall be equally available for the support of the bureau formed by the consolidation, and all employees provided by law for either of said offices shall be regarded as employees of the consolidated bureau and shall be exclusively engaged upon the work of that bureau, as required in the case of the employees of the Record and Pension Office by the acts making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal years 1904 and 1905.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the clause, from line 9 to line 15, inclusive, on page 20, as follows:

Claims for property taken from Confederate officers and soldiers after surrender: Payment to Confederate soldiers: For payment of claims filed with the Quartermaster-General under act of February 27, 1902, for horses, saddles, and bridles taken from Confederate soldiers in violation of terms of surrender, $125,000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator in charge of this bill to accept an amendment after the word "dollars," on page 20, line 15, in the following language:

Provided, That the time for filing claims under the provisions of the above-mentioned act and amendment thereto is hereby extended to December 31, 1904.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator wait? Under the order adopted the committee amendments are to be first disposed of. Then, when they are through, I shall be glad to have other amendments presented.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 20, after line 15, to insert:

Payment for damages to steamer Ragnar: To pay the owners of the Norwegian steamer Ragnar in full for damages inflicted on said steamer by collision on March 18, 1902, with the United States army transport Sumner in Yangtze River, China, $8,524.10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 21, to insert:

Payment for damages to steamer Hikosan Maru: For payment to the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha for damages to their steamer Hikosan Maru, caused by collision with a coal hulk owned by the United States Quartermaster's Department, on July 31, 1902, $600.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine who has charge of this bill, simply for information, how are these damages ascertained? What tribunal fixes the amount due and the question of responsibility as a matter of justice?

Mr. HALE. In the case of naval collisions a board is appointed that considers the entire question and reports which side is in fault. If the United States is at fault, the Department sends the finding in as an estimate to be paid; if the board decides that the foreign vessel is at fault, payment is made by its owners, and if not, suit is brought by the Attorney-General. In cases under the War Department the Quartermaster-General's Department takes the same course.

Mr. SPOONER. Through a board of officers?

Mr. HALE. Through a board of officers appointed for that purpose.

Mr. GORMAN. Does the same rule apply in the cases of the two steamers mentioned in the items following the provision for the Ragnar, which claim damages because of collision with coal hulks owned by the United States? Is it the rule that we are responsible for all damages occasioned by collisions with coal hulks or with sunken vessels?

Mr. HALE. As I have just stated, in all these cases of collisions at sea with a foreign vessel, and sometimes with our own vessels, where the fault is with the Government vessel it is so determined by a board, which is called for that purpose. We have always paid such items. If the report of the board is that the other side is at fault, they pay, and if they do not the Attorney-General brings suit. We have always done that, and every deficiency appropriation bill contains several items of this kind.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, after line 2, to insert:

Payment for damages to steamer Shirley: For payment to the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha for damages to their chartered steamer Shirley, caused by collision with a coal hulk owned by the United States, Quartermaster's Department, in Manila Bay, on March 23, 1902, $948.27.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 22, to insert:

Credit in the accounts of Maj. George T. Holloway: That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to open the accounts of Maj. George T. Holloway, additional paymaster, United States Volunteers, and to credit him with the sum of $123.53, as recommended, under authority of the Secretary of War, by the Paymaster-General, United States Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 8, to insert:

Claim of George W. Dant: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to make inquiry into the claim of George W. Dant for reimbursement for expenses incurred by him in legal proceedings growing out of the Ford Theater disaster on June 9, 1893, and report to Congress at its next session the facts in the case, and what amount, if any, should be reimbursed to said Dant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 21, to insert:

Sherman statue: To pay for extra work in the collection and assembling of material for the description of the ceremonies attending the unveiling of the statue of Gen. William T. Sherman, and the preparation of said material and accompaning papers, including the proceedings of the reunions of the different military societies, so far as they have direct relation to the said ceremonies, and for editing, proof reading, and other necessary expert labor in connection therewith, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," on page 26, after line 12, to insert:

All naval records, such as muster and pay rolls, orders, and reports relating to the personnel and operations of the Navy of the United States, from the beginning of the Navy Department to the war of the rebellion, 1861, including operations against the French navy, Tripolitan war, war of 1812, operations against pirates in the West Indies, Florida war, and the war with Mexico, now in any of the Executive Departments, shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Navy, to be preserved, indexed, and prepared for publication.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like the Senator in charge of the bill to explain whether this item on page 26 involves another great publication. It provides that all records, muster rolls, pay rolls, and so on, from the beginning of the Government down to the war of the rebellion shall be transferred to the Navy Department. I take it those records are transferred from the State Department, and that the item looks to the publication of all that data.

Mr. HALE. Yes; the Senator is correct. In many cases where the operations are purely naval, but have resulted from diplomatic negotiations——

Mr. GORMAN. We can not hear the Senator very well.

Mr. HALE. I can hardly hear myself. The papers in such cases have frequently, as they were at first sent to the State Department, continued to be sent to the State Department. So that papers purely pertaining to the operations of the Navy are not in the Navy Department. We have done it before in one or two cases in other Departments. This provides that papers shall be sent to the Navy Department and form a part of the archives, as they recite the history of naval events. That is the object of the amendment. There is no conflict, as I understand, between the different Departments.

Mr. GORMAN. Of course the mere transfer is all right, and probably the papers ought to be in the Navy Department. As we all know, the early records of the Army and the Navy were in the office of the Secretary of State.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. GORMAN. But the last line provides that the papers shall be indexed and prepared for publication. I have no doubt it would be a very valuable contribution, but we have 150 or 200 volumes from the War Department, and I do not know how many there would be from the Navy. I should like to know whether specific provision is made somewhere looking to indexing and preparing these data, or whether it is left to the Department. It will involve a large expense and will be a work which will last for the next ten or twenty years, as was the case with the former work.

I should like to have a more definite explanation as to just what is intended and under whose direction this work is to be carried out.

Mr. HALE. I am entirely willing to strike out those words.

Mr. GORMAN. I think we ought not to commit ourselves until we have a report from the Department.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator. I move, in line 22, page 26, after the word "preserved," to strike out the words "indexed and prepared for publication."

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me? Would it not be better to have them indexed if they are to remain there? They might be prepared for publication, so far as indexing and classification are concerned, and then be subject to such action by Congress hereafter, looking to their publication, as may be considered proper. If they are not indexed, it would be difficult to make intelligent use of a mere stored mass of unclassified documents.

Mr. GORMAN. We can not hear the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest to the Senator that he leave in the word "indexed" and strike out the words looking to their publication. There could be no intelligent use of the papers unless they are indexed and classified.

Mr. GORMAN. That is true. But I think the transfer, as suggested by the Senator from Maine, is the proper thing for the present. Then let us have a report from the Secretary of the Navy before the work is undertaken, with some sort of an estimate.

Mr. HALE. The indexing is rather an incident to publication than to their preservation, which is the main thing.

Mr. SPOONER. But it is the key to enable their utilization for any purpose.

Mr. HALE. They never will be of much use until they are prepared and published. So I think it is better to strike out all after the word "preserved."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Naval establishment," on page 32, line 7, after the words "League Island," to strike out "California" and insert "Pennsylvania;" so as to make the clause read:

For marine barracks, League Island, Pennsylvania, $66.97; in all, $714,970.18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of page 32.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, the amendments on which I wish to address the Senate have not yet been reached, but for special reasons suggested by different Senators, I will now make the remarks which I desire to submit upon those amendments.

Mr. President, in order clearly to comprehend the questions involved in sections 5 to 13, inclusive, of the bill under consideration, which are the amendments to which I referred, it is necessary to review our treaties with China on the subject of Chinese immigration and the principal Chinese-exclusion acts passed by Congress.

The first treaty containing any reference to immigration between the United States and China was the Burlingame treaty, of 1868. Article V of that treaty provided that—

The United States and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of the free migration and immigration of their citizens and subjects, respectively, from the one country to the other, for purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents,

Article VI of the treaty of 1868 provides that—

Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nations.

Those two articles in the treaty of 1868 are the only articles that refer to the question of immigration between the two countries.

But Chinese laborers came to the United States in such numbers that the people of our Pacific coast appealed to Congress to pass a law against such immigration. Congress, not desiring to violate the treaty of 1868, appropriated money to send a commission to China to negotiate a modification or substitute for Articles V and VI of the treaty of 1868. That commission negotiated the treaty of 1880, Article I of which provides that—

Whenever, in the opinion of the Government of the United States, the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States or their residence therein affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country or to endanger the good order of said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable, and it shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitation. Legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers will be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of immigration.

That is the main provision of the treaty of 1880, which gives only the power to suspend or limit or regulate.

Congress thereupon passed the act of 1882, suspending the coming of laborers into the United States for a period of ten years. An amendatory act was passed in 1884 containing further restrictions.

In 1888 a new and more drastic treaty on the subject of Chinese immigration was negotiated between the United States and China by which we were given the right to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States. That treaty was never ratified by the Senate, but Congress, anticipating its ratification, passed a very stringent Chinese-exclusion act, sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of which were absolutely dependent on the ratification of the treaty, and were never considered in effect because the treaty of 1888 was not ratified. Sections 5 to 14, excepting 12, were considered in effect by the Treasury Department, those sections not being dependent on the ratification of the treaty of 1888.

That opinion was given by the Solicitor of the Treasury, and the Treasury Department has always acted upon the theory that those sections were in force, while the first four sections of the act of 1888 were not in force because the treaty upon which they depended was not ratified.

The law of 1882 expiring by its terms in ten years, Congress passed the act of 1892, which continued all laws in force for the period of ten years and provided additional stringent rules governing Chinese immigration. An amendatory act was passed in 1893.

On December 8, 1894, a new treaty was negotiated between the United States and China providing that for a period of ten years the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States is absolutely prohibited.

That treaty was to remain in force for ten years and for an additional ten years if neither party denounced it. This is the treaty which has recently been denounced by China and which, unless such denunciation is withdrawn, will expire December 7 of this year.

The act of 1892 and the acts which it continued in force expiring by their terms in ten years, in 1902 the last act on the subject of Chinese exclusion was passed.

These are the immigration treaties and the principal acts of Congress on the subject of Chinese exclusion.

The act of April 29, 1902, in brief provides:

That all laws now in force prohibiting and regulating the coming of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent into the United States and the residence of such persons therein, including sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, and 14 of the act approved September 13, 1888, be, and the same are hereby, reenacted, continued, and extended, so far as the same are not inconsistent with treaty obligations, until otherwise provided by law.

That is the act of 1902, which contains the provisions I have just recited as part of the treaty, and which gives rise to the question whether the law is sufficient to keep out Chinese immigrants if the treaty should expire, as it will, unless the Chinese Government withdraws its denunciation.

On the termination of the treaty of 1894 on December 7, 1904, will the treaty of 1880 or the treaty of 1868 recur, the treaty of 1868, in Articles V and VI, having reference to immigration and nothing else, which I have read?

My opinion is that the treaty of 1880 was a complete modification of Articles V and VI of the treaty of 1868. The treaty of 1880 says that "it is a modification of existing treaties which shall not be in direct contravention of their spirit." The treaty of 1880 contains no limit as to the time when it shall remain in force. In terms it is a permanent treaty. The treaty of 1880 gave us the right to "regulate, limit, or suspend the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States or their residence therein." The treaty of 1894 absolutely prohibited, except under certain conditions, the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States for ten years. The treaty of 1894 does not in terms abrogate the treaty of 1880. In fact, it expressly refers to Article III of that treaty. When the denouncement of the treaty of 1894 becomes operative, the provisions of the treaty of 1880 will again come into effect, except in so far as modified or superseded by subsequent legislation. That is a position which I believe is correct.

Mr. President, under our Constitution treaties occupy a unique position. They are made by the Constitution a part of the supreme law of the land. They are a part of our municipal law, and Chief Justice Marshall early in our history held that a treaty of later date repeals an earlier law with which it conflicts, and that the law of later date repeals the earlier treaty if the law conflicts with the treaty. This is, however, only so far as our own municipal law is concerned. The other country could probably continue to insist that the treaty was binding.

In discussing this question I shall only discuss it in so far as it pertains to our municipal law. In our proper zeal to protect our own people from the results which would follow the extensive immigration of Chinese into the United States we have not shown that proper regard for our treaty obligations with China that we should.

The laws of 1882, 1888, 1892, and 1893 were all passed while the treaty of 1880 was in full force, and before the ratification of the treaty of 1894. The stringent provisions of the act of 1892, and perhaps other acts, were not in complete harmony with the treaty of 1880. The Supreme Court held that the act of October 1, 1888, was in direct contravention of the treaty of 1880. Therefore those acts, being of later date than the treaty, in effect repealed such parts of the treaty (so far as our municipal law is concerned) with which they conflicted, and the Supreme Court has so held a number of times in passing on Chinese-exclusion acts.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understood the Senator to say a little while ago that he thought the treaty of 1894 was a modification of the treaty of 1880 and that it expressly referred in Article III to existing treaties or existing rights.

Mr. CULLOM. I think there is a reference in the treaty of 1894 to the treaty of 1880, not in the way of modifying——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think there is a reference by name to the treaty of 1880, but a reference to the privileges which are enjoyed——

Mr. CULLOM. Under the treaty.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Under the treaty. But I was going to call the Senator's attention to the fact, if I remember it correctly, that the preamble to the treaty of 1894 recites that China desires to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States——

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Which is entirely different from the former treaties.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator is right in that respect. I have the treaty here.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Connecticut let me ask him a question, with the consent of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. SPOONER. The treaty of 1880 was without limit as to time?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, the treaty of 1894 was limited. Where a treaty is made with an express time limit, which conflicts with a treaty of indefinite duration, does not that of itself operate merely to suspend the prior treaty? Does it abrogate it?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think when China herself says she then desires—at the time of the making of the subsequent treaty—to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States——

Mr. SPOONER. For ten years.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It does not say so.

Mr. SPOONER. During the life of the treaty.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But in the preamble it states that she desires to do it without limitation.

Mr. CULLOM. The treaty of 1894 in its very opening paragraph says:

The high contracting parties agree that for a period of ten years, beginning with the date of the exchange of the ratifications of this convention, the coming, except under the conditions hereinafter specified, of Chinese laborers to the United States shall be absolutely prohibited.

As I stated. Then it provides:

The provisions of this convention shall not affect the right at present enjoyed of Chinese subjects being officials, teachers, students, etc.

Then in Article IV:

In pursuance of Article III of the immigration treaty between the United States and China, signed at Peking on the 17th day of November, 1880 (the 15th day of the tenth month of Kwanghsu, sixth year), it is hereby understood and agreed that Chinese laborers or Chinese of any other class, either permanently or temporarily residing in the United States, shall have for the protection of their persons and property all rights that are given by the laws of the United States to citizens of the most favored nation, excepting the right to become naturalized citizens. And the Government of the United States reaffirms its obligation, as stated in said Article III, to exert all its power to secure protection to the persons and property of all Chinese subjects in the United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It occurs to me that that reference to Article III of the immigration treaty of the United States is an exception to the general superseding of the treaty. The very fact that it is referred to in this way shows, if it shows anything, that the treaty is expressly superseded except as to that particular. The clause the Senator from Illinois quoted commences with Article III.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But in the preamble it says:

Whereas on the 17th day of November, A. D. 1880, and of Kwanghsu the sixth year, tenth moon, fifteenth day, a treaty was concluded between the United States and China for the purpose of regulating, limiting, or suspending the coming of Chinese laborers to and their residence in the United States; and

Whereas the Government of China, in view of the antagonism and much deprecated and serious disorders to which the presence of Chinese laborers has given rise in certain parts of the United States, desires to prohibit the emigration of such laborers from China to the United States; and

Whereas the two Governments desire to cooperate in prohibiting such immigration and to strengthen in other ways the bonds of friendship between the two countries——

Mr. CULLOM. It does not modify the prohibition at all.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But it is an expression of a desire on the part of China at the time the treaty was made in 1894 to agree with the United States in prohibiting the immigration of Chinese laborers.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; that is what I said.

Mr. LODGE. For a period of ten years.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is not for a period of ten years.

Mr. LODGE. You mean in the preamble?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In the preamble. It is expressly desired, without modification, to prevent the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. Undoubtedly.

The treaty of 1894, absolutely prohibiting the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States for a period of ten years, suspended the operation of the treaty of 1880 for that period, both internationally and municipally. When the treaty of 1894 is abrogated we will return to the treaty of 1880, in so far as it has not been superseded by subsequent legislation.

It is immaterial, as I view it, which treaty comes into effect when the treaty of 1894 is abrogated. The subsequent legislation by Congress has superseded the provisions of the treaty of 1868, as well as the treaty of 1880, in so far as that legislation conflicts with those treaties. In other words, the law as last passed controls the subject in so far as its provisions go.

But, Mr. President, the act of 1902 continues all existing laws in force "so far as the same are not inconsistent with treaty obligations, until otherwise provided by law."

It is very necessary to inquire. What is the meaning of the phrase used in the act of 1902, "that existing laws are continued in force in so far as the same are not inconsistent with treaty obligations?"

The whole thing is right there—in so far as they are not inconsistent with treaty obligations. To what treaty obligations does that act refer?

My view is that the treaty obligations to which the act of 1902 referred were the treaty obligations in force when that act went into effect—namely, April 20, 1902, and not any treaty that might spring up after the treaty that was then in force should expire by any means whatever.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Suppose it should be a subsequent treaty inconsistent with that act, would not the treaty provision prevail despite that?

Mr. CULLOM. If the treaty should be made after the act was enacted it would be superior to the act.

Mr. BACON. Exactly. Therefore the distinction which the Senator seeks to draw does not seem to me to be pertinent. The Senator seeks to limit the construction of the statute to an application to then existing law and not to have reference to subsequent enactments; but under the general rule, even if that were the intention, it would be subject to subsequent enactments.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It seems to me it may be very well contended that that clause was put in there for the very purpose of making the law conform to a future treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. It says "until otherwise provided by law."

Mr. BACON. Nevertheless, practically it would have to conform to it, whether so intended or not.

Mr. CULLOM. With the treaty or the law.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The language is "until otherwise provided by law," and the treaty would be the law then.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose the Senator has in mind the proposition that if any part of the treaty of 1880, if you please, should revive after the treaty of 1894 should die, that might be superior to the act which was passed after the treaty; but it would not, because the last act, whether it is a treaty or a law, prevails.

What were the treaty obligations in force when that act went into effect? They were the treaty obligations contained in the treaty of 1894, because there was no other treaty in force at that time that would come in conflict with it. There was no other in force at all, except provisions that applied to other things than immigration.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator thinks the treaty of 1894 repealed all former treaties.

Mr. CULLOM. It repealed all former treaties as to the question of immigration to this country from China. They were the treaty obligations contained in the treaty of 1894, with which treaty it was contended in this Senate during the last Congress that the drastic bill reported from the Committee on Immigration conflicted. The intent of that act was that the laws continued in force should not be inconsistent with the treaty of 1894. We tried to keep it down to the treaty of 1894. I do not think we succeeded fully. But whatever the law was when it was first passed and when the treaty of 1894 was in force, the law prevailed instead of the treaty of 1894 to the extent that it went beyond.

I say it was the intent of that act that the laws continued in force should not be inconsistent with the treaty of 1894. Parts of the treaty of 1880 had already been superseded by the legislation of Congress when the treaty of 1894 went into effect. The act of 1902 refers only to the treaty obligations then in force, and the only treaty obligation then in force was the treaty obligation contained in the treaty of 1894.

The existing laws have long since superseded that part of the treaty of 1880 with which they conflict, and that treaty will only come into effect in so far as it is consistent with existing laws.

The proper objection which China may make to the laws thus superseding the treaty of 1880 is another question and one which it is not necessary at this time to discuss, and that the treaty of 1880 will only be in force in so far as it does not conflict with existing laws; or, if the views of the advocates of the Chinese-exclusion bill during the last Congress is the correct one then without doubt all existing laws are continued in force indefinitely, regardless of the fact that such portions of the treaty of 1880 as are not in conflict with those laws will recur on December 7, 1904.

Notwithstanding, Mr. President, that it seems clear to me that all laws now in force on the subject of Chinese exclusion will remain in force even though the treaty of 1894 is finally abrogated on December 7 next, there has been so much doubt expressed on that subject by men whose opinions are entitled to serious consideration, and, like every other controverted legal question, it is doubtful until finally settled by the court of last resort. I am willing to remove any doubts that may exist as to the continuance of the Chinese-exclusion laws after December 7 next by voting for section 5 of the bill under consideration and striking out the balance of the bill.

I will therefore propose to amend the bill under consideration by striking out sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, and by amending section 5 of the bill by striking out, on page 91, in line 14, the words "except as hereinafter specifically provided." As all the sections after section 5 are stricken out by the amendment I propose, it is necessary to make this minor amendment to section 3, because nothing is hereinafter specifically provided.

I am willing to vote for a law which will remove any doubts as to the existing Chinese-exclusion acts being continued in force when the treaty of 1894 is finally abrogated, but I am not willing to vote for sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, because those sections are a material addition to the present Chinese-exclusion laws; they are entire new legislation on the subject, which have not received the serious consideration of the proper Senate committee; and the existing laws, which will, of course, be indefinitely continued in force if section 5 of this bill is enacted, are amply sufficient to prevent the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States.

Mr. President, I only desire to make these remarks suggesting the situation as I see it so that it may get clearly before the Senate. I hope that these drastic provisions, contained in sections 6 to 13, inclusive, will not be enacted. It seems to me to be very poor policy to place on an appropriation bill in the closing days of a session entire new legislation on this important subject before the Senate has had the time to give it that consideration which its importance deserves.

The enactment of section 5 of this bill will continue existing laws, remove any possible doubts as to the laws being nullified after December 7 next, and at the next session of Congress, if it then seems desirable, we can take up this subject, when there will be ample time to consider it both in the committee and in the Senate of the United States.

I do not think it wise, Mr. President, to take up so difficult and delicate a quest on as this, coming in from the Committee on Appropriations. I understand the Committee on Appropriations did not undertake to give the matter any special consideration, but brought it in because the House put it on the bill. I hope the amendment I have offered will prevail.

I have here a statement, a criticism, I might say, of the other sections of the proposed legislation, which I do not adopt especially as my own, but I think in view of the character and reputation of General Foster his views might be considered as worthy of the consideration of the Senate, having been Secretary of State and having held other distinguished positions. I will ask leave to put it in the RECORD following my own remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

General Foster, ex-Secretary of State, has gone over carefully these proposed sections from 6 to 13, inclusive, and has furnished me a memorandum pointing out wherein they are objectionable. I will read General Foster's memorandum in reference to the sections of the bill.

Section 6 of the bill under consideration provides:

SEC. 6. That the said laws so reenacted, extended, and continued shall be so construed as to permit the entrance into or residence within the United States, and any territory subject to its jurisdiction, of those persons of Chinese descent who are citizens of the United States by reason of birth and those who are specifically granted by law such privilege, and no others.

General Foster says in reference to this section:

This enacts into a law a contention which has been put forth by the Chinese immigration officials, but which the Chinese Government has insisted was in violation of the treaty and which has never yet been enacted into law. The effect of this amendment would be to exclude from the United States bankers, commercial brokers, and all persons of the higher classes of Chinese, in addition to laborers, who are not specifically named and described in the law.

Section 7 of the bill under consideration (section 5 of the House bill) provides:

SEC. 7. That the words "Chinese person" or "person of Chinese descent" as u ed in said laws shall be construed to mean any person descended from an ancestor of the Mongolian race, which ancestor is now or was at any time subsequent to the year 1800 a subject of the Emperor of China; and in any proceeding or examination relating to the exclusion or expulsion of one alleged to be such a person instituted or conducted by the Government the statement under oath of a duly appointed immigration or inspection officer that he believes such person to be a Chinese person or a person of Chinese descent shall constitute sufficient proof thereof unless such person shall establish by affirmative evidence to the satisfaction of the officer or tribunal charged with the determination of the question that such is not the fact.

General Foster says in reference to this section:

It fixes a meaning to the words "Chinese person" or "person of Chinese descent" not warranted by the treaty and establishes a practice as to the admission of evidence very unjust to the Chinese. It is further objectionable in that it gives to the immigration officers additional means to harass the Chinese in the United States. It is notorious that the immigration officers are largely recruited from an element antagonistic to the Chinese people, and this section will greatly aid them in their unjust treatment.

Section 8 of the bill under consideration (section 6 of the House bill) provides:

SEC. 8. That wherever the word "laborers" is used in the laws relating to the exclusion or expulsion of Chinese it shall be construed to include all persons of Chinese descent not specifically permitted by law to enter or remain within the United States; and so much of section 2 of the act approved November 3, 1893, as provides that "the words 'laborer' or 'laborers' wherever used in this act or in the act to which this is an amendment shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled manual laborers" is hereby repealed.

General Foster says in reference to this section that—

It so enlarges the meaning of the word "laborer" as to class as such all Chinese persons who are not specifically named in the law as officials, merchants, travelers, or students, and under the rulings of the Immigration Bureau bankers or commercial brokers are not merchants, and students are only those who come to the United States to pursue some of the higher branches of professional study for which facilities are not furnished in China. Under the operation of such a section the "exempt class" will only be such in name.

Section 9 of the bill under consideration (section 7 of the House bill) provides:

SEC. 9. That the officers of the Government shall have the same right to decide questions of fact upon which rests a claim of citizenship set up by any person of Chinese descent as they have to pass upon matters of fact relating to the admission or exclusion of persons conceded to be aliens.

General Foster says in reference to this that—

It is an effort to nullify the Constitution of the United States. This is shown by the remarks of Mr. HITT in the House explaining the purpose of the amendment. The Supreme Court has decided that under the Constitution a person born in the United States of Chinese persons is a citizen of the United States. By means of an amendment to the sundry civil bill of August 18, 1894 (passed without debate), the decision of the officers of the Immigration Bureau, if adverse to the admission of a Chinese, is made final, unless reversed on appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury. The object and effect of this law was to deprive the Chinese of the right to appeal to the courts. In giving to the officers of the Immigration Bureau "the right to decide questions of fact upon which rests a claim of citizenship set up by any person of Chinese descent," as is provided in section 7 (section 9 of the Senate bill), the determination of the question of citizenship is taken away from the courts, and the decision as to this inestimable birthright is intrusted to any officer of the Immigration Bureau into whose hands an unfortunate Chinaman may fall.

Section 10 of the bill (8 of the House bill) extends the immigration law of 1903 to apply to Chinese persons permitted to remain in the United States.

General Foster says, in reference to that section, it is unnecessary, as the provisions of the general immigration laws have always been enforced against the Chinese, and many of them otherwise entitled have been refused admittance into the United States on account of infectious or other diseases.

Section 11 (9 of the House bill) amends the present laws so as to give an appeal on behalf of the United States to the higher courts from the judgment of commissioners, etc.

Mr. Foster says, in reference to that section, that it can not be well understood without a fuller examination of the existing laws and decisions of the courts than the time at our disposal permits, etc.

The last section of the bill, section 13 (11 of the House bill), provides:

SEC. 13. That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may, in special cases where he is of opinion that such action is just and right and not contrary to the public welfare, relieve, under conditions to be determined by him, from the operation of the laws relating to the exclusion or expulsion of persons of Chinese descent, any person who came into the United States prior to December 8, 1894, or who has rendered the Government meritorious services.

Mr. Foster says in reference o this section:

This section is almost as objectionable as section 9. As explained by Mr. HITT, and as appears in the last phrase of the section, it would seem to be its purpose to offer a bribe to certain Chinese to testify against their country men. It can hardly be the desire of the Congress of the United States to establish such a disgraceful standard of justice in the administration of its own laws.

Mr. MCCREARY. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois a question before he takes his seat. I came in after he commenced. The effect of his motion to amend, I understand, is to continue in force the existing law on the subject of Chinese exclusion and to strike out all proposed new legislation.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; to strike out all after the first section on the subject, which is the fifth section.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to hear it read as proposed to be amended.

Mr. CULLOM. I propose to strike out all except the fifth section.

Mr. STEWART. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That part of the bill has not been reached.

Mr. CULLOM. It is not before the Senate for disposition at this time.

Mr. STEWART. Can it not be read?

Mr. CULLOM. I made the proposition to-day because Senators desired that my remarks might be printed before the question is considered. The bill is in the hands of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and we have not yet reached the subject for disposition.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, that is all right.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Illinois be kind enough to state just what his proposition is?

Mr. CULLOM. My proposition is to strike out all the legislation in reference to China except the first section on the subject.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. To leave in section 5 and amend it?

Mr. CULLOM. I leave in section 5, with a little amendment that I propose.

Mr. KEAN. In line 14.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator from Illinois propose to strike out section 4?

Mr. CULLOM. No; not section 4. I have not a copy of the bill before me.

Mr. MCCREARY. Section 4 is on another subject. The Senator from Illinois proposes to strike out all except section 5?

Mr. CULLOM. Except section 5, the first section on the subject.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Section 3 is the section the Senator from Illinois wishes to leave in.

Mr. CULLOM. It is now section 5 in the Senate print of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. In the bill as reported from the committee it is section 5.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has charge of the bill how many prints there are of it?

Mr. HALE. There is a print of the bill as it came from the House; there is a print of the bill as the Senate committee framed it; and then a print as the Senate committee reported it; and that is the only print the Senator need spend any time upon.

Mr. SPOONER. I have two prints here, with Senate committee amendments.

Mr. HALE. Quite likely.

Mr. SPOONER. They are different.

Mr. HALE. The only bill before the Senate is the bill reported by the committee and printed after having been reported by the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the bill we are now considering.

Mr. HALE. That we are now considering.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be continued.

For the payment of the judgments, except the judgment in favor of Joseph Sudsburger, No. 21254, rendered by the Court of Claims and reported to Congress in House Documents Nos. 654 and 672, and Senate Documents Nos. 287 and —— of the present session, $175,231.59, etc.

Mr. HALE. After the word "eighty-seven," in line 20, I move to strike out "and" and to insert "292 and 296," and in line 22, instead of "$75,231.59," I move to insert "$179,467.32."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Maine what are these judgments? Are they judgments of the Court of Claims?

Mr. HALE. They are additional judgments that have come in since the bill came from the House.

Mr. GORMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that the words "one hundred and," in line 20, ought also to be stricken out to make sense.

Mr. HALE. The clerks will fix that. There will be only one amount stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 75, line 25, after the word "expired," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That in the settlement by the accounting officers of the Treasury of the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the New York Indians, rendered by said court on November 22, 1898, contained in House Document No. 226, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, and appropriated for by Congress in the deficiency act of February 9, 1900, the distribution of the award to said Indians shall be made on settlements of Auditor for the Interior Department.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine what this means? It appears that in 1900 the appropriation was made, but the settlement was not made. Is this a transfer of these accounts from the Auditor of the Treasury to the Auditor of the Interior Department, or what does it mean? It seems to be a little obscure. It appears that this amount was appropriated by Congress in the deficiency act of 1900.

Mr. HALE. I have a letter from the Department covering it.

Mr. GORMAN. I should be glad to have some explanation in regard to the item.

Mr. HALE. It may be passed for the present. I will call it up later.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Judgments, United States courts," on page 76, line 12, after the word "of," to strike out "the final judgments and decrees" and insert "certain judgments;" in line 13, after the word "rendered," to strike out:

Under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States."

And insert:

By the United States courts and by the circuit court of Fond du Lac County, Wis., for which the United States is liable.

So as to read:

For payment of certain judgments, including costs of suit, which have been rendered by the United States courts and by the circuit court of Fond du Lac County, Wis., for which the United States is liable, certified to Congress at its present session by the Attorney-General in House Document No. 669 of this session, etc.

Mr. HALE. That item has been recast by the Department, and I ask to substitute for it what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 76 strike out all after line 11 down to and including line 3, on page 77, and insert:

For payment of certain judgments, including costs of suit, which have been rendered by the United States courts on mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States and by the circuit court of Fond du Lac County, Wis., and not appealed, for which the United States is liable, certified to Congress at its present session by the Attorney-General in House Document No. 669, except the two judgments in favor of the Coca-Cola Company, $57,372.79, together with such additional sum as may be necessary to pay interest on the respective judgments as may be authorized by law from the date thereof: Provided, That none of the judgments herein provided for shall be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired: Provided further, That hereafter estimates for the payment of all judgments against the United States, including judgments in Indian depredation claims and of United States courts, shall be transmitted to Congress through the Treasury Department, as other estimates of appropriations are required to be transmitted.

Mr. GORMAN. Ought we not to fix the rate of interest on these judgments from the date thereof at 4 per cent? I think it is left indefinite here.

Mr. HALE. There has been a question in some of these cases as to the amount of interest, whether it should be 4 per cent or otherwise; and as the Department is in some doubt about it, the provision here is that it shall be whatever the law prescribes.

Mr. GORMAN. I will say to the Senator that in nearly all cases of the payment of judgments Congress has arbitrarily fixed the rate of interest at 4 per cent.

Mr. HALE. That is the general rule; but there are cases where a question has arisen as to the rate.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest an amendment that the interest shall not exceed 4 per cent per annum.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that, and will modify the amendment in that respect.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I send to the Senator from Maryland, so that he may examine it, the letter, which I did not have at the time, respecting the other item about the Auditor of the Interior Department.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Judgments in Indian depredation claims," on page 77, line 8, after the word "seventy-one," to insert "and Senate Document No. 284;" and in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty thousand seven hundred and eighty-five" and insert "one hundred and seventeen thousand seven hundred and seventy-nine;" so as to read:

For payment of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases, certified to Congress at its present session in House Document No. 671 and Senate Document No. 284, $117,779, etc.

Mr. HALE. In line 8, I move to strike out "Document" and insert "Documents;" and after "eighty-four," in line 9, to insert "and two hundred and ninety-three;" and the total should be changed to "one hundred and nineteen thousand nine hundred and twenty-nine."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 78, after line 5, to insert:

JUDGMENT COURT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

For payment of the judgment of the Court of Private Land Claims entered December 14, 1903, against the United States in the case of Jose Chaves y Gallegos and others v. The United States, No. 57, Nicolas Duran de Chaves grant, as set forth in House Document No. 682, this session, $513.62.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 9, on page 79.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire some information about this provision in the bill:

For payment to Western Union Telegraph Company, interest on settlements withheld under act of March 3, 1875, $9,899.52.

I notice that the whole sum is said to be interest. Is it proposed to change the custom of the Government in reference to the payment of interest? As I understand, it has been for some years the settled practice of the Government not to pay interest. Is there any reason why this claim should be treated differently from others?

Mr. HALE. The item is put in because the Department has certified that it is an audited claim, and I can not go into the considerations that affected the settlement by the Auditor. What the committee does in these cases is to put in the claims that are estimated for and certified as audited claims. This was put in not by the Senate, but by the House. It is a House provision.

Mr. PETTUS. I understand that it was put in by the House, but I want to know on what principle it is put in. Has it been determined that the United States ought to pay interest generally?

Mr. HALE. I do not know——

Mr. PETTUS. You do not know why this is exempted from the general rule?

Mr. HALE. I do not know, except that it is estimated for and audited and sent here as an audited claim; but I can have that information hunted up in the Department, and I will furnish it to the Senator later. But I know now that it is in the House bill and was regularly audited and certified. What the reasons are that governed the Department in estimating this and in auditing it I do not know, because we do not examine into these individual claims.

Mr. PETTUS. I think we ought to settle it and ought to have one rule on the subject. Now, there was a large amount that was due to railroads——

Mr. HALE. I will have a dispatch sent to the Treasury Department asking for the basis on which this claim was audited, and why interest is allowed in contravention of the general rule that the Government does not pay interest, if that will satisfy the Senator.

Mr. PETTUS. It seems to me we ought to have a general rule on the subject.

I was going to say that there were a large number of railroads which presented claims here because they were disallowed in the settlement of their accounts on account of the railroad being what is called a land-grant road. The road to which I refer ran through different States. In some one of the States the railroad was a land-grant road and in the other State it was not. For instance, one of the railroads ran through Mississippi and Tennessee. The Department deducted 20 per cent under the land-grant act and refused to allow compensation even in the State where it was not a land-grant road.

The Supreme Court of the United States decided that that was a wrong construction; that the railroad ought to be allowed the full amount in the State where there had been no grant made; that the 20 per cent ought to be deducted in Mississippi, but not in Tennessee, in the particular case of which I speak.

Those claims were afterwards presented to Congress and many of them allowed so far as concerns the principal, but on not one of them that I ever heard of was interest allowed—not a dollar. It seems to me we ought to have a general rule. I move to strike out this item.

Mr. HALE. Let the motion be pending.

Mr. PETTUS. Let it be pending, and perhaps the chairman can get satisfactory information from the Department.

Mr. HALE. That may be done. The motion to strike out the item is pending.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, we have a law that where judgments are rendered by United States courts they shall bear interest.

Mr. PETTUS. I was not speaking of judgments at all.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No. I suppose that at the Auditor's department this must have been assimilated to cases of this kind; but I am very frank to say that I do not see how it could be.

Mr. HALE. The information that I get from the Department will disclose that very point, and I agree with the Senator from Alabama that we ought to have that information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to strike out is pending and will be passed over for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Claims allowed by the Auditor for the Post-Office Department" on page 87, after line 16, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That for the payment of the following claims, certified to be due by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1901 and prior years, unless otherwise stated, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in Senate Document No. ——, reported to Congress at its present session, there is appropriated as follows:

For collecting the revenue from customs, $28.
For repayment to importers excess of deposits, $19.06.
For Life-Saving Service, $537.85.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

For pay, and so forth, of the Army, $51.52.
For subsistence of the Army, $143.44.
For transportation of the Army and its supplies, $70.28.
For pay, transportation, services, and supplies of Oregon and Washington volunteers in 1855 and 1856, $107.85.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

For surveying the public lands, $4,575.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE STATE AND OTHER DEPARTMENTS.

State Department.

For pay of consular officers for services to American vessels and seamen, $256.90.
For relief and protection of American seamen, $40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, after line 14, to insert:

Department of Justice.

For pay of special assistant attorneys, United States courts, $200.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

For limited indemnity for lost registered mail, $5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, after line 21, to insert:

SEC. 4. For payment of a certain Treasury settlement heretofore certified to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury, namely, settlement No. 5000, in favor of the Eureka Insurance Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., William L. Jones, receiver, $5,000, reported in Senate Executive Document No. 5, Fifty-third Congress, third session.

To pay the State of Missouri, on account of interest and other incidental expenses paid in connection with the loans procured in raising troops to aid the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, as set forth in Senate Document No. 52, the present session, $475,198.13.

To pay to the State of Texas as reimbursement to said State for expenses incurred in maintaining a civil government, etc., in what was then known as Greer County, Tex., now known as Greer County, Okla., as shown by reports of the Secretary of the Interior contained in House Document No. 571, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, and House Document No. 571, part 2, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, $50,874.53.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to offer an amendment to the next section and also as applied to all the rest of the bill after the fifth section.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he is going to have his amendment printed?

Mr. CULLOM. I offer it that it may be printed. It is an amendment to the fifth section and also a motion to strike out the remaining sections on that subject.

Mr. LODGE. I have also an amendment to offer to this section, which I ask may be printed and go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] is desirous of going on with the pension bills; and as we have reached the part of the bill relating to Chinese, I shall not ask the Senate to go on with it further, because there are several amendments to those provisions that have not yet been printed or made known to Senators. I shall call up the bill in the morning immediately after the routine morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine desire the remainder of the bill to be read now?

Mr. HALE. No; that is not essential.

Mr. CULLOM. I rose to move an executive session, but I understand the Senator from North Dakota desires to make a request.

CROW INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

Mr. BARD submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, and agree to the same.

The report was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I simply wish to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of unobjected bills on the Pension Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. It is important that we shall have an executive session.

Mr. MCCUMBER. If I may make one statement to the Senator, nearly two-thirds of the Senators are asking me daily to get these matters disposed of and to get them disposed of before we adjourn. At some time we shall have to take them up, and I do not know of any better time. I have tried to find a time that would be more agreeable to Senators in general than this time.

We can get through with them in about an hour, and then I will guarantee that I will not trouble Senators to yield again for the purpose of considering the Calendar of pension bills. I sincerely hope the Senator from Illinois will not press his motion for an executive session at this time, because if the Senator insists on it I shall simply have to yield and say that I can not get up this Calendar during the balance of the session.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust another arrangement will be made for the pension bills. There will be no objection, I think, to taking them up to-morrow. It is late in the afternoon, and I object.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will not promise that he will not call up the pension bills that are to be put on the Calendar that the House are passing to-day. They are on pension bills to-day.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I have a hard enough time to get the consideration of those already on the Calendar without promising anything in future as to others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Daketa asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension cases.

Mr. GORMAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to move an executive session.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish it understood that any part of to-morrow can be yielded to pension bills, because the deficiency appropriation bill must go through to-morrow.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Then I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow at 4 o'clock the Senate shall proceed to consider unobjected bills on the Calendar, in case the pending appropriation bill is disposed of.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. HALE. There is no objection to that.

Mr. QUARLES. Will the Senator enlarge the order so as to include unobjected bills to correct military records?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I will do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock to-morrow the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not to interfere with appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not to interfere with any appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Mr. QUARLES. I should like to have the order amended. The Senator from North Dakota is willing that not only unobjected pension bills, but unobjected bills to correct military records may also be included in the agreement.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I have not the slightest objection. There are only a few of those.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair regards them, then, as included in the order.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 23, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CORRECTION.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. To correct the RECORD of an error in a report filed by the Committee on Claims. Through an inadvertence an error crept in an amendment by the Committee on Claims in House Report No. 2519, and I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to have the error corrected, and when so corrected that the report be reprinted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a report from the Committee on Claims shall be corrected and reprinted. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

APPREHENSION AND DETENTION OF INSANE PERSONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8692) to authorize the apprehension and detention of insane persons in the District of Columbia, and move concurrence therein.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement of the House conferees, to be found in the RECORD of April 21, 1904.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.

EAST WASHINGTON HEIGHTS TRACTION RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9331) to extend the time for the completion of the East Washington Heights Traction Railroad, and move concurrence therein.

The Clerk reported the conference report and statement of the House conferees, to be found in the RECORD of April 21, 1904.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

CONNECTING EUCLID PLACE WITH ERIE STREET.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 2134) to connect Euclid place with Erie street, and ask that it be read.

The Clerk reported the conference report, to be found in the RECORD of April 21, 1904.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter, as it relates to the policy of the two Houses in reference to the opening of streets in the District of Columbia. The older Members of the House will recall that some eight years ago we repealed what was known as the "highway act," and since that time a number of streets have been opened, but in each bill it was provided that the expense of the opening of the streets and the purchase of the ground for the highways should be paid by the District of Columbia and the property benefited and no part of the costs by the Government of the United States.

The organic act of 1878 provided that practically all the expenses of the District government should be borne one-half by the United States and one-half by the District. The House, in the matter of street openings, has enacted in every bill that has passed the provision that the entire expense should be borne by the District and the property benefited. The Senate refuses to concur in the amendments of the House to bills embodying this proposition, and maintains that the measures for street openings now under consideration, and those that are to come later, shall be under the organic act of 1878, which would be one-fourth of the expense to be paid by the General Government, one-fourth by the District of Columbia, and one-half by the property benefited. Your committee of conference felt that on account of the action of the House on all similar measures we could not consent to the position taken by the Senate without first submitting the matter to the House; and now, Mr. Speaker, in order to test the sense of the House on this proposition, I move that the House recede from its position and accept the Senate's proposition, which would entail a divided expense as between the General Government and the District, the same as in all other matters of expense in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] if he will yield to me for a few minutes on this proposition?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will vote down the motion to recede and concur on this bill. This question of opening streets in the District of Columbia may carry with it, if we establish this precedent, a very large expense against the Treasury of the United States. It seems to me there is a radical distinction between the proposition of opening and dedicating a street and the proposition of caring for that street after it has once been dedicated to public use.

I do not believe that it was the intention of the act of 1878 that the Government of the United States should buy from the residents of the District of Columbia their property for streets and then take care of the streets afterwards.

I remember one case, Mr. Speaker, where we passed a bill for the opening of S street where a property owner owning a large tract of property through which this street was to run received a consideration of nearly $50,000 for the property in the street, when his property was absolutely benefited by the street opening.

I submit to this House that if the Government of the United States is to pay one-half of this expense the cost of opening these streets will be very largely increased because of the fact that the payment for it is coming out of the General Treasury.

I submit further that in the vast majority of these opening cases the abutting property ought to pay practically all of the expense of the street opening. Mind you, this is only the condemnation of the land taken for the street. This does not include any part of the expense of grading or paving or improving. One-half of that does come out of the General Treasury.

But I submit that where, as is in many instances the case, the land must be taken in order that the adjacent property may be of any value the Government of the United States ought not to pay a single cent. I hope the House will maintain the proposition on which it has heretofore stood for now nearly ten years and will not agree to recede and concur.

Mr. BABCOCK. As I have stated heretofore, Mr. Speaker, the House conferees desired to submit this question for the consideration of the House. So far as this particular bill is concerned, the matter is comparatively unimportant; that is to say, the amount involved is very small.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Let me ask the gentleman whether this would not change our whole policy as to the manner of paying for opening or improving streets?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir; it changes the whole policy.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then it is a very important matter.

Mr. BABCOCK. I so stated; and I ask the attention of the House to the question, as it reverses the previous policy of the House and would not be in harmony with the measures heretofore passed relating to similar subjects—not that it would affect directly the measures heretofore enacted into law—but it would affect and change the general policy.

The simple question, Mr. Speaker, is whether Congress will authorize the opening of streets in the District of Columbia under the organic act of 1878 or will pursue the course that has been followed during the past ten years, and insist that the District and the owners of the property benefited shall pay the whole expense, thus relieving the General Government of any part of the costs. That is the simple question upon which I ask a vote. I move that the House recede and concur in the position taken by the Senate.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] explain the change that appears to be contemplated here? What is the present policy?

Mr. BABCOCK. I endeavored to make that as clear as I could, but I do not think the gentleman from Iowa was here at the time.

This is a bill for connecting Euc id place with Erie street. It is unimportant as an individual bill, but the principle involved is of a great deal of importance. During the past ten years the House has insisted that the District of Columbia and the owners of the property benefited should pay all the expense for the property taken as right of way wherever streets are opened. The Senate has now taken the position that these streets must be opened in accordance with the organic act of 1878, which provides that the expense of the District shall be divided between the General Government and the District of Columbia. The conferees of the House not feeling at liberty to depart from the policy of the House, we have submitted this matter for an expression of the House.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is not the uniform practice in all our cities that the expense of opening a new street through private property shall be thrown upon the abutting or adjacent property that is benefited by the improvement?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say to the gentleman that in many of the bills which we have passed at this session the property benefited bears all the expense, and the District and the Government of the United States none. The conditions are very different in different places. Sometimes the whole District is interested in opening a street; at other times it is only the abutting or adjacent property that is interested, and in the latter case the committee provides for the assessment of the whole expense upon the property benefited. But the present question is whether the general Government shall bear its proportion under the organic act, or whether the District shall bear the whole expense.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that whenever the Government of the United States requires any property in Washington for its use, for public buildings, etc., the value of the property immediately runs up to a pretty high figure, especially where condemnation is necessary. I know it has been advocated on this floor time and again that where the Government requires property we ought to buy it, even at an exorbitant price, from the owners, for fear that a commission or a jury may assess the damages much higher than would be demanded in an ordinary sale. For instance, I understand that this block over here, which was condemned for the use of offices of the House of Representatives, was assessed at something like $240,000; but the assessment made by the commissioners or the jury—I do not know which—for the purpose of condemnation was three times as great—about $750,000.

I understand this is always the case when the Government desires property and has to pay for it—that the Government has to pay the full value as it may be fixed upon in the minds of the gentlemen who testify; and of course their opinion on the value of the property is very high. Thus property costs the Government a good deal to condemn. But where the city of Washington or the taxpayers have to pay half the expense, it makes an appreciable difference.

I will ask the gentleman whether he believes that the House ought now to reverse what has been the policy of Congress for years and provide that the Government pay half the expense of opening these streets, instead of having the expense assessed (as is always done everywhere else in the United States) upon the property immediately benefited by the improvements?

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not think the gentleman from New York quite understood the proposition.

This in no way affects the assessment to abutting property; and I will say further, in reference to the juries, that with two or three exceptions the verdicts have been less than the estimates made by the Commissioners, caused doubtless from the fact that we provide in all cases that not less than one-half of the damages shall be assessed as benefits to the property benefited. The other half has to be provided. The property benefited pays half, and heretofore the District has paid all of the other one-half.

Mr. PAYNE. Why should not the District pay all of that half?

Mr. BABCOCK. I am not asking that question. I am trying to make it clear to the gentleman what this proposition is.

The Senate takes the position that the organic act of 1878 should apply to the opening of streets as well as to other District expenses, thereby making the General Government pay one-quarter, the District of Columbia one-quarter, and the property benefited one-half.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that the present rule?

Mr. BABCOCK. No.

Mr. PAYNE. That is the proposed rule. The present rule is that the abutting owners pay half and the District half.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I hope that will be the rule maintained by the House of Representatives at least.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Why should the Government pay one-quarter?

Mr. PAYNE. Nobody is able to state why the Government should pay a quarter.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In all cases do the property owners pay just one-half?

Mr. BABCOCK. In most cases the bills provide that they must pay not less than one-half, or else the whole proceeding is set aside.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I understand your bills, as a rule, provide they must pay one-half, but is it not a fact that they often pay all of it?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, yes; in several cases. We passed three bills here the other day providing that all the costs should be assessed as benefits.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In some cases the abutting property owners pay all the damages.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Now, if the Government contributed any portion, would not the gentlemen who assess damage always let the Government in to pay a portion?

Mr. BABCOCK. That question would not be affected, because the District now pays one-half. It is only a question of the contribution of one-quarter by the Government.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I understand that, but in all dealings between the citizens and the District they will assess as nearly as possible the correct amount of damages; but when the Government comes in to pay a portion of it, it is reasonable to suppose that they will never assess more than one-half the benefits to the abutting owners. I do not believe that the policy of this House that has existed for ten years ought to be changed. I believe it is the duty of the owners of abutting property and of the District of Columbia to pay the damages, and that the Government ought not to contribute.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the House recede from its amendment.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the House further insist upon its amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 14416), to nonconcur in all the Senate amendments, and to ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the sundry civil bill, to nonconcur in all the Senate amendments, and to ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations with reference to three items, which it seems to me run counter to the civil-service law and provide for the appointment of officers by the Departments without reference to passing a civil-service examination.

I ask the gentleman to give the House an opportunity to vote upon that question of the civil-service law as embodied in these three committee amendments in the Senate bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not know the amendments the gentleman refers to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have just secured a bill, and in the print of the bill I find the amendments, Nos. 95, 96, and 99, on pages 88 and 90. The amendments are as follows:

95. Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, and allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares.

96. Three hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars: Provided, That forestry agents, superintendents, and supervisors, and other persons employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior wholly with reference to their fitness and without regard for their political affiliations, and allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares.

99. That persons employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior at a compensation of $2 per day while actually employed, at such times and for such periods as the exigencies of the work may demand.

These are the three propositions I ask the gentleman whether the House will have an opportunity to vote upon. I do not want to surrender the right of the House to a vote upon that proposition unless the gentleman signifies his willingness to give us an opportunity before going at once into conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to get the floor. I want this to take the regular course, and I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; this matter ought to go to the committee, in the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, then, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the proposition. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the sundry civil appropriation bill, nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, in explanation of that I wish to state that the matter can pass over without prejudice until the minority member upon the subcommittee is upon the floor. I object simply because he is not here.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This is the usual motion, and it has been the custom.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. It can be again presented to the House at a later hour.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have no purpose of pressing an objection if the gentleman will give the House an opportunity for a vote upon the civil-service question involved.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS ON CROW RESERVATION, MONT.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11676, to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the following bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11676) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation in Montana, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. CURTIS, Mr. LACEY, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

DAVID T. TOWLES.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 1851) granting an increase of pension to David T. Towles.

[For conference report and statement see House proceedings of April 21.]

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I move to agree to the report of the committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN WEAVER.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8925) granting an increase of pension to John Weaver.

[For conference report and statement see House proceedings of April 21.]

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

ENOCH STAHLER.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I call up the conference report on House bill (H. R. 9256) to increase the pension of Enoch Stahler.

[For conference report and statement see House proceedings of April 21.]

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5583. An act to amend an act entitled "An act granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs," approved March 3, 1901.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 14416. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

MARY HEANEY.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13850) granting an increase of pension to Mary Heaney.

[For conference report and statement see House proceedings of April 21.]

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

INQUIRY REGARDING INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Indian Affairs and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution 318, being a resolution of inquiry, report back the following resolution in lieu of the same:

"Be it resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House, if not incompatible with the public service, what action, if any, has been taken by his Department upon the recommendation contained in the report of Charles J. Bonaparte and Clinton R. Woodruff, submitted by message of the President March 7, 1904, and what person or persons, if any, who were then in the service of the Government under the Dawes Commission, have, since the making of such report, been separated from such service, voluntarily or otherwise."

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND].

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, on the 11th of April I introduced a resolution of inquiry which I have sent to the Clerk's desk to be read. I ask to have it read in my time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 318.

Whereas the President of the United States, by his special message of March 7, 1904 (S. Doc. No. 189), transmitted to Congress the charges of Mr. S. M. Brosius, agent of the Indian Rights Association, relative to the abuses and irregularities in the public service in the Indian Territory, together with the report of Charles J. Bonaparte and Clinton Rogers Woodruff, special inspectors appointed under his direction to investigate said charges;

Whereas said charges, among others, contain the following specifications:

"The articles of agreement and incorporation of the Tribal Development Company, of Tishomingo, Ind. T., show that it was organized March 25, 1903, with a capital stock of $100,000 and $12,000 actually paid in.

"P. S. Mosely, governor of the Chickasaw Nation, is also a stockholder. The general nature of the business of the Tribal Development Company is to 'purchase, own, sell, encumber, lease, sublease, and exchange real estate, act as agent, and certify abstracts of title,' etc.

"The Muscogee Title and Trust Company was organized February 24, 1903, and is authorized to transact a general banking business, and in addition may 'buy, sell, and lease lands, and buy and sell stocks and bonds of other corporations,' etc. Tams Bixby, chairman of the Dawes Commission, is a stockholder and a vice-president of the concern. J. George Wright, Indian inspector in charge of Indian Territory, is one of the directors of the company.

"The Canadian Valley Trust Company, of Muscogee, Ind. T., was organized February 23, 1903, and is authorized by its charter to 'buy, sell, lease, and mortgage real estate,' and conduct a general banking business. Tams Bixby is a stockholder and president of this trust company.

"The International Bank and Trust Company, organized February 4, with its main office at Vinita, Ind. T., has the same general powers to 'buy, sell, and mortgage real estate and personal property.' Thomas B. Needles, a member of the Dawes Commission, is a vice-president and director of this company.

"C. R. Breckinridge, a member of the Dawes Commission, is also credited as being interested as a stockholder, either directly or indirectly, in the Eufaula Trust Company, Eufaula, Ind. T.

"Tams Bixby is understood to have been owner of real estate in various sections of the Indian Territory—Fort Gibson, Tahlequah, Tishomingo, and Sulphur Springs, among others.

"There are rumors afloat to the effect that Federal officers in the Indian Territory are financially interested in other transactions that would seem to preclude them from retaining their positions under the Indian Department.

"With the information in the possession of the various officers of the Government employed in the Indian Territory, it is clear that they possess a great advantage over others in pressing business with which they may have an interest, either through a trust company or otherwise. The prestige they have with the Indian and others by reason of their official relations is very important."

Whereas said special inspectors, upon investigation, found and reported, in respect of said charges, as shown by the President's message, in part as follows:

"All the statements of fact contained in the foregoing extracts from Mr. Brosius's report appear to be true, and the 'rumors' to which he refers are shown by the testimony taken before us to be well founded with respect to certain other Federal officers besides those named by him."

Whereas said special inspectors, further commenting upon the activity of the Canadian Valley Trust Company, of which Tams Bixby, chairman of the Dawes Commission, is vice-president, report that said corporation dealt in "lands to which the Indian title had not been extinguished" and is a holder of "leases as collateral for loans," and also find:

"This corporation occupies offices formerly rented by the commission and communicating with the offices now occupied by the latter body. The communication, which was by a spiral staircase, has now been cut off. We find that Commissioner Bixby's notorious interest in the Canadian Valley Trust Company, the fact that, as stated by Mr. Brosius, two former employees of the commission are now the principal officers of this corporation, and its occupancy of offices recently forming part of those of the commission, undoubtedly tend to identify, in some sort, the company with the commission, and to give the former a quasi-official status, which it is not entitled, and which may possibly afford it an illegitimate advantage in dealing with ignorant or otherwise incompetent persons."

Whereas the said inspectors further find and report "in our judgment, Commissioner Bixby's connection with this corporation impairs his usefulness as a public official, and, if he is to retain his present position, it should, in our judgment, be terminated without delay."

And that—

"His investments in what are known as 'possessory rights' in town-site lands seem to us yet more objectionable."

And also find and report that—

"Mr. A. L. Aylesworth, the chief clerk of the commission, and Mr. H. V. V. Smith, its disbursing agent, are identified in public opinion with supposed speculations in real estate in the Territory, especially in connection with town sites, to an extent out of proportion to their apparent means, and which has led to conjectures that they were acting, in some measure at least, as agents for other person or persons, and it has been suggested that Mr. Bixby may have been interested in their investments."

Whereas the said inspectors in summarizing their investigations of the Brosius report say thereof that—

"It in no wise exaggerates, however (on the contrary, it rather understates), the objectionable features of the administration of public affairs in the Territory, and its specific allegations respecting Federal officials are substantially true."

And further clearly intimate that action on the part of the Department is required "in the cases of Commissioners Bixby, Breckinridge, and Needles, and of Mr. Aylesworth and Mr. H. V. V. Smith."

And in conclusion say and recommend:

"Third. That conditions existing at present in the Indian Territory are exceedingly unfortunate. They involve imminent danger of ruin to the genuine Indian population and profound discredit to the United States, excite reasonable discontent on the part of all classes of the population, and demand prompt and drastic remedies on the part of Congress.

"Fourth. The Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes can be abolished with advantage, the remaining work of allotment intrusted to the Indian inspector and that of enrollment committed to the citizenship court."

And

Whereas Congress has failed to take any action upon said report or the President's message in relation thereto: Therefore

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to report to the House of Representatives forthwith:

First. Whether the said Tams Bixby, J. George Wright, A. L. Aylesworth, H. V. V. Smith, or any of them, are still retained in the service; and if retained, the reasons for such retention.

Second. Whether any of the persons in the public service in the Indian Territory, mentioned in said report as having been guilty of violations of law or of misconduct in the discharge of their official duties, are still retained in the public service; and if retained, the reasons for such retention.

Third. What steps, if any, have been taken by the Department to remedy the evils pointed out in said report and to restore to the rightful owners the lands of which they have been defrauded by the acts or connivance of the officers of the Government.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, as part of my remarks I shall publish an additional quotation from the report transmitted by the President's message.

In commenting on the activity of these corporations, it states:

Mention has been made of the interest of the trust companies in dealing in Indian lands. These companies have been organized by the score, and cover every field of the Five Tribes open to investment. They are the chief manipulators in Indian lands, either in leasing, subleasing, or (before the recent ruling of the Secretary of the Interior) purchasing of Creek lands. These trust and development companies are the available avenue for the influential excessive holder to retain the use of his lands in evasion of the law. The company employs men well equipped for field work. These, often in collusion with the excessive holders, buy out the latter's rights, and usually bring to the land office of the Dawes Commission ignorant members of the tribes and see that they make proper filing thereon. A lease covering five years for agricultural purposes is executed at the time in favor of the company or to the middleman who operates to their interests. The Indian who thus files on his allotment usually pays for the improvements by turning over the rents and profits of the land to the trust company, so that during the term of the lease the allottee receives but little or no benefit from the lands, while the excessive holder has in turn retained possession for another five years.

Here we have a state of facts that, if true—and they are reported by commissioners especially appointed by the President of the United States to make this investigation—I say, if true, not only should Congress have acted, but it is certainly the duty of this House to call for the information asked for in the resolution. This resolution of inquiry is not predicated on any charge of mine, nor upon any charge made by any individnal Member of this House. It is predicated solely upon the official report of a commission appointed by the President of the United States to investigate alleged abuses and irregularities in the public service of the Indian Territory. This commission in its official recommendation says: "The Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes can be abolished with advantage"——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LIND. Well, I ask for ten minutes more time.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, unless some member of the committee desires time, I will yield the gentleman ten minutes. I yield the gentleman ten minutes more.

Mr. LIND. I started out to state to the House that in its recommendations the commission appointed by the President to make this investigation states:

The conditions—

Referring to the conditions in the Territory—are such that they involve imminent danger of ruin to the genuine Indian population and profound discredit to the United States, excite reasonable discontent on the part of all classes of population, and demand prompt and drastic remedies on the part of Congress.

Here we have these specific charges, made after a most careful and exhaustive investigation by commissioners appointed under the direction of the President of the United States, showing that the men sent as guardians to the Indian population of the Indian Territory, sent there to protect the Indians, instead of doing so have organized themselves into various corporate schemes for the purpose, as is here charged—I am making no charge—of looting their wards, of profiting by their positions, of speculating in their official duties.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman that the commissioners, as I understand, make bold to assert their interest in these companies and corporations.

Mr. LIND. Well, it is a matter of record.

Mr. LITTLE. I am with you entirely on that proposition.

Mr. LIND. Now, I say in view of charges of this character it does seem to me that this House can not afford to emasculate the resolution which I presented. In this resolution no charges are made except those emanating from the commissioners of the President. Nothing is suggested by the House except that it calls for information. I would ask the members of the committee, I would ask the gentleman who presented this resolution, if a probate court or an orphans' court of his State would tolerate the continuance in office of a guardian for a minor or for persons put under guardianship who had been guilty of the conduct here suggested in the management of their estate.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LIND. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood the gentleman to say he made no charges.

Mr. LIND. I do not.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman is mistaken. I understand that these resolutions are his resolutions, and this language is his language, and I read:

Third. What steps, if any, have been taken by the Department to remedy the evils pointed out in said report and to restore to the rightful owners the lands of which they have been defrauded by the acts or connivance of officers of the Government.

Now, there is a clear and distinct charge of fraud made by the gentleman from Minnesota on his responsibility, and here is a crime charged against these officers of conniving at this fraud. This is his language; this is his resolution; this is his charge. Now, I want to know if there is anything known to the gentleman that sustains the criminal charge of fraud or the criminal charge of connivance with fraud on the part of these officers, and can the gentleman state it?

Mr. LIND. Well, in the ten minutes I have I have not the time to go through all of this report; but I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] this question——

Mr. HEPBURN. No, no; I have asked the gentleman a question. He has said that he has not made a charge, and I insist that he has made one.

Mr. LIND. I object to the gentleman's occupying all of my time. Now, the answer to the question depends on what the gentleman and I respectively consider fraud. If a guardian speculates in the estate of his ward, if he diverts it from its rightful course into his own pocket, I consider that fraud. This report demonstrates that the officials in the Indian Department have done that very thing. It demonstrates that it was the duty of the Commissioners to recommend and pass upon applications for town sites, and it indicates that before they made recommendations for town sites, or cotemporaneously with the recommendation, they obtained leases from the Indians for those town sites and then recommended the establishment of the town sites and dealt in the town lots.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, the report makes no such statement. The Dawes Commission has nothing to do with town sites.

Mr. LIND. I am discussing this report. I am not prepared to discuss intricate questions of law growing out of the bill. Let me read the gentleman a statement from the Brosius report, which this commission finds to be true.

Others well versed in the mode of securing Indians for the purpose of filing bring them in from remote districts and turn them over to the companies for the best figure obtainable, according to the demand and the shrewdness of the manipulators. On one occasion during my stay in the Territory I was informed that one of these rustlers had brought in thirty-four Choctaws and Chickasaws; another one twenty-six, and yet a third a less number, to be sold to the Tribal Trust Company at from $20 to $30 a head. The Indian who hesitates to take advantage of the offer is tempted into acquiescence by proffer of sufficient cash in hand to close the deal, and thus transfers all rights to his home for the time the lease is to run, and if the trade includes his better lands he will likely become a vagabond among his people, as the tribal relations are now broken up and the surplus lands will no doubt soon be disposed of.

Again referring to Chairman Bixby in this connection, the report (p. 22) says:

His investments in what are known as "possessory rights" in town-site lands seem to us yet more objectionable. Town sites are set apart by the Secretary of the Interior upon the recommendation of the commission. There is therefore a possibility that a member of the commission who had acquired the rights of possession previously vested in Indian occupants of land might have derived a profit from the selection of these lands upon its recommendation for town-site purposes, since he could thus purchase, at a greatly reduced price, an absolute interest in the lots laid out on the lands to which his possessory rights extended.

Mr. CURTIS. Does not the gentleman know that the report states as a fact that none of these companies in which the members of the commission were interested had bought any real estate or had leased real estate?

Mr. LIND. Well, I will read from the report and let the report speak for itself on that point. I am reading from page 22:

We have already stated that the allegations of Mr. Brosius respecting the ownership of stock in corporations doing business in the Indian Territory by three members of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and other Federal officers were shown by the proof, and, indeed, admitted by the parties concerned, to be accurate. None of the corporations mentioned by him were shown to deal in lands to which the Indian title had not been extinguished, with the exception of the Canadian Valley Trust Company, which is admitted to be the holder of a small number of leases as collaterals for loans. This corporation occupies offices formerly rented by the commission and communicating with the offices now occupied by the latter body. The communication, which was by a spiral staircase, has now been cut off. We find that Commissioner Bixby's notorious interest in the Canadian Valley Trust Company, the fact that, as stated by Mr. Brosius, two former employees of the commission are now the principal officers of this corporation, and its occupancy of offices recently forming part of those of the commission, undoubtedly tend to identify, in some sort, the company with the commission, and to give the former a quasi-official status to which it is not entitled, and which may possibly afford it an illegitimate advantage in dealing with ignorant or otherwise incompetent persons.

Mr. CURTIS. Does not the gentleman know that in the last Indian appropriation bill an item was inserted requiring all of these parties to dispose of their interest in the several companies at once?

Mr. LIND. I know that is the law; but now I ask the gentleman, as a lawyer and as a Member of this House, whether, if he were the judge of an orphans' court or a judge of probate, and it were shown that a guardian had swindled or connived at the swindling of his ward and in the squandering of the ward's estate, he would continue him as guardian, provided he disposed of the property illegally acquired?

Mr. CURTIS. I would not; but the evidence does not show that these people have squandered any of the lands of the Indians down there. In fact, they can not buy a foot of Indian land down there, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. LIND. No; but leases.

Mr. CURTIS. And the truth of it is that the gentleman is simply getting this into the RECORD for pol tical purposes, because Mr. Bixby happens to be chairman of the Republican committee of his State, and for no other purpose.

Mr. LIND. Oh, well, now——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, my time has been occupied by gentlemen on the other side, and I ask for more time.

Mr. BURKE. How much more time does the gentleman want?

Mr. LIND. Not over eight or ten minutes.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I think that I can yield only five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. LIND. Well, five minutes is enough. It is true that the chairman of this commission has run every political campaign in our State since his appointment, with the exception of one; but I have made no charge against him personally. I do not propose to. It would be too much of an undertaking to go into that, but I do predicate——

Mr. LITTLE. Did he not leave his duties as chairman of this commission in order to do that?

Mr. LIND I will not even charge him with neglecting his duties to run the political campaigns in our State. But these facts are charged against him by the commissioners appointed by the President.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas—and he can answer the question by "yes" or "no"—whether he, sitting as judge of a probate court or of an orphans' court, would continue in office as a guardian a man who had been guilty of acts such as are charged against the chairman of this commission in the management of the trust estate of his wards?

Mr. CURTIS. If the acts were proven to be true, no; but if they were proven to be untrue, I would continue him.

Mr LIND. Have these charges been investigated by any other person?

Mr. CURTIS. I am informed that they have been, and have been found to be untrue.

Mr. LIND. Where is the report?

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] informs me that a report has been made, and it is now a public document. I have not read it.

Mr. LIND. Oh, this is my time. I object to its being occupied in this way.

You say, then—and I want this to go into the RECORD—that this first report, made by the President's special commissioners, was not satisfactory, apparently, to the Administration, and they sent for another. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CURTIS. I do not say it was not satisfactory. I say the matter was thoroughly investigated, and in the substitute we ask the Secretary to inform the House what action he has taken on the report.

Mr. LIND. I do not care to yield further to the gentleman. All I ask is simply that this House say to the Secretary of the Interior: "These charges are made against men in public office in the Indian Territory under your control. If they are retained, why are they retained?" If their character has been established, if they have conducted themselves with clean hands, let the Secretary say so, and we shall all be content.

But to emasculate this resolution of inquiry and simply call upon him to make a general report without answering the specific questions that we are entitled to have answered is unfair to the House and unfair to the country. Least of all is it fair to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to occupy further time except to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not in order to ask for a vote on the original resolution offered by me instead of the one reported by the committee, or should the matter be reached by a motion to substitute the original resolution?

The SPEAKER. The committee has reported an amendment in the shape of a substitute for the original resolution, and the vote would first come upon that.

Mr. LIND. If that is voted down, then the original resolution would be submitted for the action of the House?

The SPEAKER. Of course the whole matter is in the possession of the House.

Mr. BURKE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I was not a member of the subcommittee that reported this resolution. That subcommittee was composed of the gentleman from New York, Mr. SHERMAN, the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. BURKE, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. FITZGERALD. The resolution was unanimously reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The committee was satisfied after investigation of the question by the subcommittee with this substitute resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The resolution was not unanimously reported. The minority, as the gentleman well remembers, did not join in the report.

Mr. CURTIS. No minority report is on file.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There may be no minority report on file, but the gentleman well remembers that every Democratic member of the committee voted against that resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know that. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was a member of the subcommittee and joined in the report of the subcommittee. I do not want to misrepresent this question. My recollection is that the resolution was unanimously reported. There is no minority report on file.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Only the Republican members of the committee joined in the report.

Mr. CURTIS. The report was made, the Democratic member of the subcommittee joining therein. In this resolution we ask for everything that is necessary. It is only fair to say here that the committee and Congress have taken steps to remedy the wrongs in the Indian Territory. In the Indian appropriation bill and in the deficiency bill—in each of those bills—we have placed $15,000 in the hands of the United States Indian agent and have authorized him to put every Indian there in free and unrestricted possession of his allotment.

Mr. LIND. We all approve of that; but will the gentleman yield for a question at that point?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. LIND. That is commendable. I congratulate the committee for having come to the rescue of the Indians; but, nevertheless, do you think it is right and proper to continue in the service of the United States officers who have been so derelict in their duty that complications like these have arisen?

Mr. CURTIS. If the gentleman has read the report, and if he has kept informed, he ought to know that three of the men mentioned in his resolution have already resigned and are not now connected with the service, and we have asked the Secretary of the Interior in this resolution to inform the House what action he has taken in regard to the others.

Mr. LIND. I do not so understand it.

Mr. CURTIS. If the gentleman wants to know, the committee were of the opinion that all of the preamble in this resolution, all of the whereases, were simply inserted there by the gentleman from Minnesota for political purposes and for no other. I hope that the House will adopt the substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. LIND. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not rise to a question of privilege in the time of the gentleman from Kansas. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. LIND. The gentleman from Kansas has charged me on the floor of the House within the last minute with improper motives in introducing this resolution, and I resent it, and I do hope the Speaker will apply the same rule to-day that he applied on yesterday. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to have my motives impugned by any man without resenting it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman inserted in his resolution matters that were already before this House.

Mr. LIND. And the House was doing nothing.

Mr. CURTIS. There is a report accessible to any Member of this House, which any person may read, and from that report he can draw his own conclusions. I say that the committee has thoroughly investigated this matter and reported a substitute, and we believe that it fully covers all of the ground of this resolution. I hope the substitute will be adopted.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he does not think that if he has accused the gentleman from Minnesota with being a partisan he ought to withdraw that?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly; if the gentleman objects to it, I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. One moment. On yesterday, it is proper for the Chair to state, he called the attention of the House and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the rule of the House. The Chair heard what the gentleman from Kansas said, and he does not understand that the gentleman in any way reflected upon the honor or the official deportment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CURTIS. I did not intend to.

The SPEAKER. And therefore the Chair did not think it was proper for him, upon his own motion, to interfere. The Chair states this because the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] demanded that the Chair enforce the rule to-day as he did yesterday. The Chair will enforce the rule when it is violated. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BURKE. I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL].

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, on the first day of this session, the 9th of November last, I introduced a bill (H. R. 4) to prevent discrimination against members of Indian tribes attending religious or private schools. The principle of this bill is embodied in the Indian appropriation bill, which has passed both Houses and is now in the hands of the President. I ask unanimous consent for permission to extend some remarks in the RECORD on that subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the privilege of extending his remarks on the House bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for the reading of the substitute resolution offered by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution 318, being a resolution of inquiry, report back the following resolution in lieu of the same:

"Be it resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House, if not incompatible with the public service, what action, if any, has been taken by his Department upon the recommendation contained in the report of Charles J. Bonaparte and Clinton R. Woodruff, submitted by message of the President March 7, 1904, and what person or persons, if any, who were then in the service of the Government under the Dawes Commission, have, since the making of such report, been separated from such service, voluntarily or otherwise."

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, the resolution in question was considered by a subcommittee, as stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and the resolution which has just been read was reported to the full committee by a unanimous report. It was considered by the full committee and reported unanimously—at least no minority report was made.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURKE. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that every Democrat present voted against the emasculation of the resolution and this report?

Mr. BURKE. If the gentleman asks me my recollection of the matter, I do not think it is a fact. I think there were two or three of the minority members who voted "no." But no minority report has been made, and having read the full resolution and having heard the remarks made by the gentleman from Minnesota it makes apparent the purpose he had in mind when he offered this resolution. The substitute resolution will furnish to this House all the information that the House desires. It is in the usual form of such resolutions and I ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LIND. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97; noes 91.

So the substitute resolution was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I present the following report from the Committee on Appropriations:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14416) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, etc., with amendments of the Senate, with the recommendation to nonconcur in all the Senate amendments.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Appropriations, I ask that the House nonconcur in all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will increase this pension by the addition of $10 a month. The Senate has passed the bill at $40 and this amendment will increase it to $50. This is a most meritorious case. I have never known one that made a stronger or more just demand upon the liberality of the committee and the House. I do not want to offer an amendment myself, but I hope the committee that reported this bill will, without any motion from me, propose the increase I have indicated.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the committee, I move to amend the bill by striking out, in line 9, the word "forty" and inserting in lieu thereof "fifty;" so as to make this pension $50 a month.

I want to say only a word. General Rice had four years and a half of service in the Union Army. He started in as a private, was advanced through the grades of captain, lieutenant-colonel, and colonel to that of brigadier-general. He participated in the battle of Vicksburg and of Kenesaw Mountain, having been wounded at both places. He also took part in the battle of Shiloh, the siege of Corinth, the battles of Chickasaw Bayou and Arkansas Post. For his gallant conduct at Vicksburg he was mentioned for special and meritorious service. His service was such as to make one feel proud that he was an American. I will not take further time of the committee, but ask to add as part of my printed remarks the record of General Rice, as furnished from the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Indiana will have permission to extend his remarks.

There was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, May 7, 1900.

SIR: In response to your request for the military and medical record of Americus V. Rice, late brigadier-general of volunteers, for use in connection with Senate bill 3890, I have the honor to inform you as follows:

It is shown by the records that Americus V. Rice was mustered into service April 27, 1861, as captain of Company E, Twenty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry (three months' organization), and that he was mustered out with his company, as captain, August 12, 1861.

He was again mustered into service September 2, 1861, as captain of Company A, Fifty-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, to serve three years; was promoted to lieutenant-colonel, same regiment, about February 8, 1862, and was mustered in as colonel, same regiment, February 19, 1864, to date May 24, 1863; was appointed brigadier-general of volunteers May 31, 1865, which appointment he accepted June 18, 1865, and was honorably mustered out of service as brigadier-general of volunteers in General Orders, No. 168, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, dated December 28, 1865, to take effect January 15, 1866.

From the date of his muster in as captain in the Fifty-seventh Ohio to May 22, 1863, when disabled at Vicksburg, Miss., he is shown to have been continuously on duty with his regiment, which formed a part of Gen. W. T. Sherman's command and participated in the western campaign, including the battle of Shiloh, the siege of Corinth, the battles of Chickasaw Bayou and Arkansas Post, and the siege of Vicksburg.

At Vicksburg he led his regiment in the assault on the enemy's works on May 22, 1863, when he was severely wounded below the knee and in the thigh of the right leg. On account of this wound he was absent thereafter until the spring of 1864, when he resumed command of his regiment. He led his regiment in an assault on the enemy's works at Kenesaw Mountain, Georgia, June 27, 1864, where he was again badly disabled, sustaining a wound of the left ankle and fractures of the shin bone and the thigh of the right leg, necessitating the amputation of the right leg above the knee. On account of this wound he was again absent until about April, 1865. Meanwhile, on December 14, 1864, by reason of physical disability from wounds received in action, a special order was issued from the War Department honorably discharging him from the service as colonel of the Fifty-seventh Ohio, but on the request of Colonel Rice and the governor of Ohio, supported by the earnest recommendation of General Sherman, this order was revoked and he was restored to his command by a special order from the Department, dated March 29, 1865, whereupon he rejoined his regiment.

Upon his promotion to brigadier-general of volunteers, he was, on June 17, 1865, assigned to the command of the Third Brigade, Second Division, Fifteenth Corps, on which duty he continued until August 19, 1865, after which date, his services being no longer required, he was at his home in Ohio on waiting orders to the date of his discharge.

This officer is informally mentioned in the reports of his superiors for skill and gallantry in the different actions in which he took part, and he was several times recommended for promotion to brigadier-general. In repeating the recommendation, under date of May 28, 1865, General Sherman said:

"I have heretofore recommended for promotion to brigadier-general of volunteers Col. A. V. Rice, Fifty-seventh Ohio Infantry, for special gallantry at Vicksburg and Kenesaw, at which latter place he was wounded terribly.

"I again renew my recommendation and state that Colonel Rice is one of those young officers who has served with me all through the time since Shiloh and enabled me to do the service I did. I know his capacity and fitness and know that the promotion is more than deserved. It is fairly due to put him on a par with his fellows who have already been properly promoted."

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Chief Record and Pension Office.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS,
United States Senate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, if I were going to select a volunteer soldier of the war for the Union as a typical specimen of the best development and most patriotic type of the American volunteer soldier, I think I would choose the subject of this pension bill—I mean General Rice. General Rice's career was a notable one. He was well educated and was entering life with every prospect of success and prosperity, but he had the patriotic idea. He was a devoted friend of the American Union. He was a strong Democrat in politics, but when the war began Democracy as a party slogan had no attractions for him. He left his home, his prospects, and all and went gallantly forth to fight the battles of his country.

He enlisted as a private soldier, was early advanced to the grade of captain, then lieutenant-colonel and colonel, and then brigadier-general. He fought in the battle of Vicksburg and at Kenesaw Mountain and was wounded at both places. Apparently he never got near enough to the enemy to be hit by their shot that he did not suffer. At Vicksburg he led his regiment in an assault on the enemy's works on May 22, 1863. He was severely wounded below the knee and in the thigh of the right leg. Again, almost disabled, he joined the forces and marched in the great campaign to Atlanta and led an assault on the enemy's works at Kenesaw Mountain, Georgia, June 27, 1864. There again he was badly disabled, sustaining a wound of the left ankle and fractures of the shin bone and the thigh of the right leg, necessitating the amputation of the right leg above the knee.

Almost any other man would have retired at the first wounding; every man except Rice would have retired at the second wounding. He did not do it; but on December 14, 1864, he was given an honorable discharge by special order of the War Department. He appealed from the War Department, and on the recommendation of General Sherman the order was revoked and he was restored to his command and joined his regiment March 29, 1865, and then was promoted to brigadier-general of volunteers and was assigned to the command of the Third Brigade, Second Division, Fifteenth Corps, on which duty he continued until August 19, 1865, and then went home discharged and bearing honorable wounds and bearing with him the love and affection of the soldiers who knew him. General Sherman wrote:

I have heretofore recommended for promotion to brigadier-general of volunteers Col. A. V. Rice, Fifty-seventh Ohio Infantry, for special gallantry at Vicksburg and Kenesaw, at which latter place he was wounded terribly.

I again renew my recommendation and state that Colonel Rice is one of those young officers who has served with me all through the time since Shiloh and enabled me to do the service I did. I know his capacity and fitness and know that the promotion is more than deserved. It is fairly due to put him on a par with his fellows who have already been properly promoted.

This was the splendid indorsement of that grim old soldier, Sherman, who never recommended a man for anything if he did not believe he was justly entitled to it.

Coming back to Ohio, as I have said, he again entered politics and was the Democratic candidate for lieutenant-governor of Ohio. He was a forceful, eloquent, and popular speaker, and on the stump occupied to politics much of the same leadership he had in war. But his terrible wounds impeded his progress in his profession. He was appointed by Mr. Cleveland pension agent at Columbus, and won the affection of the soldiers and their friends by the urbane and yet prompt and accurate discharge of his duties. When McKinley became President, he refused to remove General Rice until his full term should be served, and then saw to it that he should be provided with a fairly profitable position here in Washington, a position which, varying in degree, but always being a responsible one, he held until the time of his death.

We gave him a pension of $100 a month some years ago, and at that time it was shown that he had suffered beyond the power of man to describe. His was not the maiming and the disfiguring of the physical man which became sound and well but for the loss of members; his was a constant, never-ceasing agony of suffering.

He left a family, a devoted wife and a lovely daughter, faithful and loving to the General to the last, and they come here now and say on behalf of themselves through me and through this committee and through the committee of the Senate: "This much General Rice offered upon the altar of his country. You can not compensate him, his compensation will be in another world, but you can see to it that the sting of poverty shall be at least to some degree ameliorated in the case of those he loved and for whom he would have provided ample support but for the sacrifices to his country."

I know the House will pass the bill. I know the Senate will concur in this amendment. I know that the President will most gladly sign this bill.

The amendment offered by Mr. MIERS of Indiana was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EVERTON J. CONGER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14336) granting an increase of pension to Everton J. Conger.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Everton J. Conger, late lieutenant-colonel First District of Columbia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $100 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM J. BARCROFT.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12346) to correct the military record of William J. Barcroft.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman does not need to ask unanimous consent. We are in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PRINCE. I know that, and I think this bill almost comes within the rule. Yet there may be a slight question about it. Therefore I ask unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12346) to correct the military record of William J. Barcroft. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the political disabilities and charges now appearing on the records on file at the War Department against William J. Barcroft, Company H, Eighty-sixth United States Colored Troops, and grant him an honorable discharge in lieu of one that was issued and lost.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know what are the political disabilities of this gentleman?

Mr. LAMB. The bill speaks for itself, Mr. Chairman. It is to restore him to the same position he would have occupied if he had not lost his discharge; that is all.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. He is not under any political disability, is he?

Mr. LAMB. No. He lost his discharge, and we want to place him in the position he would have been in if he had not lost that discharge.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible for us to hear what gentlemen are saying.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, in order to explain this bill I wish to say that Mr. Barcroft served in the Union Army. He was dangerously wounded in the knee and almost lost his eyesight. He afterwards had some trouble with some one of his officers. He was tried by a court-martial and sentenced to receive a dishonorable discharge, and also to serve twelve or sixteen months, I think, in prison. He served about eight months. His case was afterwards reinvestigated, and by an order of the War Department he was discharged from imprisonment and directed to appear before the mustering officer and receive an honorable discharge. He started from Nashville to Mobile to receive his discharge. While on the way he lost his knapsack and his papers authorizing him to receive an honorable discharge. Being an ignorant colored man, not knowing his rights, after losing his knapsack and papers he did not go to the mustering officer to get his discharge.

The Military Committee have recommended that in view of the War Department's own records this charge of dishonorable dismissal be removed and that he be given an honorable discharge.

As a matter of fact, it is not a charge of desertion which would properly come up in the Committe of the Whole House as we are here to-day. For that reason I have asked unanimous consent that it may be considered, and I trust there will be no objection.

Mr. GIBSON. I have no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I have no real doubt, after hearing the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE], that this is a meritorious proposition; but I take this occasion to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois and his colleagues upon his committee that I have some knowledge that there are other meritorious bills pending before that honorable committee, some of which have been pending there for a very long time and have never received any attention at the hands of that committee.

I myself have had occasion to request the consideration of some bills of this general nature, and so far as I know my appeals have gone unheeded. And while I am not that kind that desires to obstruct any other meritorious bill because those introduced by myself for constituents of mine can not be considered, yet I hope this committee will see its way clear, if not at this session at the next session of this Congress, to give consideration to some measures I have introduced, and which are pending before that committee, that, in my judgment, are as meritorious as this or any other bill introduced in this Congress.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. PRINCE. I just want to say one word, Mr. Chairman. I presume that we have not taken up all of the bills before us that perhaps, if we would devote all our time to them, we could.

But I wish to say to the House that there are about 2,000 desertion bills before the Committee on Military Affairs. I think we passed at the last Congress about eight of these bills, and four of them were vetoed. For one, I am decidedly opposed, after forty years have intervened since that great struggle, most of the witnesses being dead, to place upon the roll of honor men who willfully deserted during those trying times. In this particular instance the record of the War Department discloses the fact that this man should be relieved, and we are asking Congress to grant it to him. But if gentlemen will watch our work in the committee they will see we have tried to give a full and fair hearing irrespective of party to any person who comes before that committee. I wish to say in advance I think the men who wear the button—on this side of the House—and the men who contended against them—on the other side of the House—will commend the committee for standing between deserters and the men who fought for the flag from 1861 to 1865.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Now, the gentleman has said that the committee is opposed to granting relief in cases of desertion. Does it not appear that the cases where the circumstances attending the desertions appear to be worst that they get relief, and does not the gentleman think that where there is merit in the claim, and where a man was wrongfully and falsely charged, he should be relieved? Now, there are cases where they have lived for thirty or forty years without knowing that those charges were made against them, and here is the only place under heaven that they can get relief.

Mr. PRINCE. That may be true. We favor granting relief in every worthy case. If the Member who introduces this class of legislation will carefully look over the military record of the applicant for relief he will be convinced, in nine cases out of ten, that he has introduced a bill at somebody's request that ought not to be considered by this House.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to know if unanimous consent has been given?

Mr. SIMS. I am not here objecting to your bill——

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent has not been given.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. You say you are opposed to giving relief in these cases of desertion, or so-called "desertion"——

Mr. GIBSON. I object to this discussion, and call for the regular order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee (continuing). Because forty years have elapsed since the charge was made——

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are we not pensioning people forty years after the war, and letting them give evidence in their behalf?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LAMB. I would like to say one word.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for.

Mr. LAMB. This man was wounded in the service, and if I, who fought on the other side, can ask for his relief, I think other gentlemen might not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the various bills passed in the Committee of the Whole to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPALDING, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration various bills on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report them to the House, some with amendments and others without amendments, with the recommendations that the amendments be agreed to and the bills do pass, and that the bills without amendments do pass.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the bills and amendments to their final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on all these bills and amendments to their final passage. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SUPREME COURT IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12647, with Senate amendments.

Mr. CLARK. I would like to reserve the right to object until I know what this bill is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12647) to establish a supreme court in the Indian Territory and to provide for additional United States judges therein, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair announces the appointment of the following conferees: Mr. JENKINS, Mr. THOMAS of Iowa, and Mr. LITTLE.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the several bills were passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5342) to provide for the temporary government of the canal zone at Panama, the protection of the canal works, and for other purposes, had asked for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KITTREDGE and Mr. HOPKINS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2268) to authorize the absentee Wyandotte Indians to select certain lands, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4769) validating certain conveyance of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company.

TEMPORARY GOVERNMENT OF THE CANAL ZONE AT PANAMA.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 5342) to provide for the temporary government of the canal zone at Panama, the protection of the canal works, and for other purposes, with the House amendment disagreed to by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the following Senate bill with the House amendment disagreed to, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what the amendment is.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, it is very brief, and I will ask that the Clerk report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That until the expiration of the Fifty-eighth Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the territory acquired by the United States from the Republic of Panama by the terms of the treaty ratified on the 26th day of February, 1904, be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing governments of the said territory or granted by the terms of said treaty to the United States, shall be vested in such person or persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct for the government of said territory and maintaining and protecting the inhabitants thereof in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. LOVERING, and Mr. ADAMSON.

HOMESTEAD LAWS WITH REFERENCE TO CERTAIN LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 14826) to amend the homestead laws as to certain unappropriated and unreserved lands in Nebraska, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House do nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. LACEY, Mr. MONDELL, and Mr. LIND.

DEVELOPMENT OF AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7056) creating a commission to consider and recommend legislation for the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes. The bill has been already read. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LUCKING].

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. As much time as may be agreed upon between the gentleman and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SPIGHT], who has control of the time on that side of the House.

Mr. LUCKING. Mr. Speaker, it has been understood that whatever time there was on this bill should be divided, as I have understood, between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the House has not as yet consented to that arrangement.

Mr. LUCKING. I understood that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] would ask that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that order may be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the time for debate on this bill shall be controlled by himself on the majority side and by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LUCKING] on the minority side, and shall be divided equally. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCKING. Mr. Speaker, I now request that gentlemen who make remarks upon this bill on either side of the House may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that gentlemen who speak upon this bill shall have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. One moment, Mr. Speaker. I would ask if there has been any length of time fixed within which these remarks shall be extended?

Mr. LUCKING. For five legislative days after the vote on the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well.

The SPEAKER. For five legislative days after the vote upon the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Has any limit been fixed upon the time for debate upon this measure?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of any.

Mr. LUCKING. Mr. Speaker, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SPIGHT].

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, there are two objections to this bill, the first of which is that we do not recognize the necessity for any commission to investigate the needs of our merchant marine or the remedies to be applied in the correction of existing conditions. Repeated hearings have been had before committees in both Houses of Congress covering several years, and volumes of testimony have been taken, all of which is now available; and if further testimony should be desired, it could be heard just as well before the committees as before the so-called "commission," and these committees would at last have to report upon the matter to their respective Houses of Congress.

The House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries consists of seventeen members and the Senate Committee on Commerce also of the same number. It is now proposed to take the consideration of this subject out of the hands, temporarily, of thirty-four Members of Congress and place it in the hands of ten Members of Congress, to be chosen in equal numbers from the two Houses, to go over the very same ground that has already been fully covered, and have these ten men, under the name of a commission, to report the result of their findings to the next session of Congress after an expense of $20,000, unnecessarily, as we think. Not only has a great mass of testimony been taken, but a large number of books have been written on both sides of the question, all of which are accessible to every member of the two great committees and to any other Member of Congress who desires to investigate the matter, and may be found in the Congressional Library. And what good would result from the report of this commission? If they should favor a ship subsidy or discriminating duties and tonnage taxes in favor of American vessels or that nothing be done, the whole matter would again be referred to the respective committees of the Senate and House and leave the whole question at last just where it is now, with little or no additional information to better enable those committees to determine what ought to be done.

We recognize the fact that our merchant marine is languishing, that much too large a percentage of our exports and imports is carried by foreign vessels, and that some remedy is needed and ought to be applied as speedily as possible. The remedy which we propose is a return to the system of discriminating duties and tonnage taxes in favor of American vessels. In other words, upon every cargo of goods imported into this country in an American vessel there shall be such a reduction in the rate of duties as will encourage shippers of goods from foreign countries to ship in American vessels instead of foreign, and at the same time discriminate in tonnage taxes. There are two objections urged to this plan; that treaties and conventions with other nations would have to be abrogated or modified, and that it might bring about retaliation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I understand that the gentleman's proposition is to terminate the commercial treaties——

Mr. SPIGHT. Yes; by giving notice.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is it your idea to negotiate other treaties or go on without any treaties?

Mr. SPIGHT. That would be a matter to be determined by Congress.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is your own judgment?

Mr. SPIGHT. I am referring to treaties which prohibit us from imposing these discriminating duties; we have no other treaties on that line.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is it your idea that we should have to negotiate new commercial treaties or go on without commercial treaties; or have you not thought of that subject enough to express an opinion upon it?

Mr. SPIGHT. That is a matter, I think, to be determined by Congress.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In other words, you have not any opinion to express on that question now?

Mr. SPIGHT. No, sir; I am not prepared to express an opinion now. But what I want to do is to abrogate the treaties now in existence, so as to enable us to impose these discriminating duties in those cases in which we may deem it proper.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And the gentleman has not thought enough about this subject to be satisfied in his own mind whether we should negotiate new treaties?

Mr. SPIGHT. No, sir; I do not think we ought to have any more of this kind.

It is admitted that such a discrimination would be in contravention of existing treaties with a number of nations, but they all provide that either party to the convention may modify or wholly abrogate such treaties by giving the prescribed notice, varying, I believe, in time from six months to two years, most of them, perhaps, requiring one year's notice. This can be done without any bad faith or even discourtesy on our part, and simply exercising our rights reserved under the treaties themselves. Proceeding in an orderly and legal manner, we can do this without subjecting ourselves to criticism. And what right would these other nations have to complain at such action on our part? They are all seeking in one way or in another to build up their own shipping interests, and why may not we? The truth is, they and not we are benefited by the provisions in these treaties by which we have obligated ourselves to make none of those discriminations, especially in view of the fact that the percentage of our foreign carrying trade has grown so ridiculously small that we are now carrying only about 9 per cent of our foreign commerce, although we have a registered tonnage in the foreign trade of about 900,000 tons.

As to retaliation by other nations in the event we should adopt the system of discrimination I have thus briefly outlined, my judgment is that it is a mere "scarecrow." Let us examine for a moment and see what danger of retaliation really exists. We are not only the greatest producing nation on earth, but we are able to make and do make almost everything we need or want, and in addition the civilized world is largely fed and clothed by our products. The United States is not only the richest nation in the world, but our exports are larger than those of any other nation in the world. We exported during the last calendar year goods to the value of $1,457,565,782. The United Kingdom of Great Britain during the same time exported goods to the value of $1,415,617,552, a difference in our favor of more than $40,000,000. Germany was the third in value of exports, reaching about $1,200,000,000. France comes next with about $800,000,000. The great wealth of the United States is founded upon its agriculture.

Of the $123,000,000 increase in our exports for the year 1903 over 1902, cotton alone furnished $88,000,000, and the total value of the cotton crop in the United States for 1903 will reach in the neighborhood of $700,000,000. Add to this the enormous value of our corn, wheat, oats, sugar, molasses, tobacco, and other products of the farm, and the aggregate value is beyond the comprehension of the finite mind.

While, as I have said, the United States is a producing nation, all the other great nations, except Russia, are emphatically consuming nations. We can do without the silks of France far better than France can do without our cotton. We do not need Germany's sugar, but Germany needs our cotton, grain, oils, and provisions. We no longer depend on Great Britain for high-class textile manufactures, cutlery, etc., because we make all these things at home. But they all need something which we have to sell, and any effort to exclude our products or to load them down with burdensome taxes would only oppress their own people, and this none of them desire to do.

With Great Britain's boasted maritime supremacy and her immense manufacturing and commercial wealth, deprive her of our cotton and food stuffs and her looms would stop, her ships would rot, and her people be left to starve and freeze. So with France and Germany. We can do without any of their products, while they are compelled to have ours. Then how foolish it is to be frightened at the ghost of retaliation. In our early history, when the United States was an infant in swaddling clothes amongst the great nations of the earth, under this same policy of discriminating duties retaliation so bitter as to amount to persecution was resorted to, and instead of suffering under it we grew stronger year by year and prospered wonderfully in our commercial and maritime affairs.

The conditions have not materially changed, except that we have grown infinitely stronger and better able to defy their retaliation, and now it would be cowardice to stop at the threat of retaliation from any source. There is no nation on earth so thoroughly prepared for entire self-support and independence as the United States. We want foreign trade because we have a surplus to sell, but we don't want it bad enough to sacrifice our own people and beg for it on bended knees. We can get it on far better terms. We need only to show the "front of a man" and the world is compelled to have our products, even though we should demand that they be taken from American vessels. [Applause.]

Looking to the building up of our merchant marine, our First Congress, under the leadership of the fathers and founders of the Republic, imposed a tax of 50 cents upon every ton of foreign shipping which entered our ports and only 6 cents per ton on American ships. The report of the Commissioner of Navigation shows that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, 24,697,692 tons of shipping entered our ports from foreign countries, and of this only 3,881,036 tons were American, and upon this our own ships paid, under existing laws, the same rate of tonnage tax as was paid by the foreign ships. Our theory is to reduce or totally remove this tax from our own vessels and at the same time give them lower charges as import duties, and thus enable our ships to give lower freight rates and compete more successfully in the foreign carrying trade, and also help them to reimburse their owners for whatever difference there may be in the cost of operating their vessels as compared with the cost of operating ships under foreign flags.

Mr. GILBERT. When the gentleman speaks of foreign ships, he means all ships excepting those that bear the American flag?

Mr. SPIGHT. Yes, sir.

Mr. GILBERT. Is the gentleman prepared to state what proportion of the ships carrying foreign flags are really American ships, owned by American capital?

Mr. SPIGHT. I have no figures that would enable me to determine that question.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There are no statistics on that subject.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. If I understood the gentleman aright, he said that he proposes to return to the system of discriminative duties which was so successful in the early days, from 1789 to 1825.

Mr. SPIGHT. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is that the proposition the minority make in their report?

Mr. SPIGHT. That is a part of it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think not, Mr. Speaker. The proposition of the minority report is to return to quite a different kind of discriminative duties.

Mr. SPIGHT. I do not care to be interrupted for a speech. The gentleman can have his own time in which to present his views.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. May I read a line?

Mr. SPIGHT. I beg leave to decline to be further interrupted for the present, as I am limited in time.

At the old rate established by our fathers there would have been collected during the last year from tonnage taxes from American shipping engaged in the foreign trade only $232,862, while from vessels under foreign flags we would have received the princely sum of $10,408,128. It will not do to say that the foreign owners wouldn't stand this heavy discrimination. They would have to stand it or go out of the trade and leave it just where we all want it—in the hands of our shipowners. They not only had to stand this tonnage tax in the early history of our country, but they had to stand also discriminating tariff duties, which we favor also.

It has been the policy of our Government almost from the beginning to discriminate in favor of our own vessels, one feature of which has been retained through all the generations, and that is the restricting of our coastwise trade to American vessels, as a result of which policy we have to-day a magnificent array of American-built vessels engaged in this trade, and some of them in the foreign trade, but the advocates of the shipbuilding interests seem to lose sight of the fact that the building of ships alone does not mean the winning of business in the foreign trade when we are met by the competition of the world. We are now laboring under a serious disadvantage. Foreign ships control the carrying business not only of the outer world, but also of the United States, and in order to overcome this state of things and win a part of the trade that belongs properly to us we must give some kind of assistance to our own vessels engaged in the foreign trade. We propose to do this by discriminating duties and tonnage taxes, as did the fathers of the Republic under whose wise guidance our shipping interests developed so wonderfully.

Mr. GILBERT. I hope it will not interrupt my friend if I ask another question.

Mr. SPIGHT. Oh, no; I will be glad to answer the gentleman, if I can.

Mr. GILBERT. Our Democratic doctrine is that every duty imposed upon imported goods is ultimately paid by the consumer of the goods. Now, if we adopt the discriminating duty against foreign vessels, will not the consumer of the imported goods pay that discriminating duty?

Mr. SPIGHT. Not necessarily. The duty would be less upon goods imported in American bottoms than upon goods imported in foreign bottoms. We do not increase the duty; but we make it less on goods imported in American vessels than on those imported in foreign vessels.

Mr. GILBERT. Will not that necessarily result either in excluding the foreign vessel, or if the foreign vessel comes here with goods in spite of the discriminating duty, will not the American citizen pay the difference to the extent of the importation of goods in foreign vessels?

Mr. SPIGHT. I think the duty would be less than it is now. The practical effect would be a reduction of duty, because the foreign vessel, in order to compete at all with the American vessel having a reduction of duty in its favor, would be compelled to put its freight rates down. And the goods would really cost the American consumer less than now.

I am not a protectionist in the modern sense, nor am I a free trader, but when we can build up our merchant marine by a system of protection which hurts only the foreign shipowner and helps our own people to recover what justly belongs to them I have no scruples. The policy of discriminating duties is not a partisan question. It has been practiced and advocated by all parties, and in recent years national platforms, without regard to party, have pronounced in its favor. The lamented McKinley advocated it with as much zeal as any Democrat of this or a past age. So that the only real question now is, not one of politics, but what is the wisest, surest, and most equitable method for the rehabilitation and speedy upbuilding of our merchant marine.

That the ultimate purpose of this proposed legislation to create a commission is to provide an excuse for a ship-subsidy bill along the lines advocated by prominent Republicans for a number of years I have no doubt. During the Fifty-sixth Congress a bill was passed by the Senate and favorably reported by a majority of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, providing for a system of subsidies which was so manifestly unfair, unjust, and burdensome that its friends in the House dared not call it up and put it upon its passage, and it was suffered to die. In the Fifty-seventh Congress the same efforts were made, but without result. And in this the first session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, with Presidential and Congressional elections staring them in the face, the Congressional advocates of ship subsidy are not willing to trust the judgment and verdict of the American people by even attempting to pass such a measure through either House of Congress.

The President himself, foreseeing the danger, sounded a note of alarm and suggested a commission even more obnoxious than the measure now pending, providing that several Cabinet officers of his own choosing should be members of that commission, but this feature was so revolting to his own party associates that it was promptly rejected. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The evident purpose of this commission idea is twofold. First, it is a cunning evasion of a most dangerous proposition which is loaded with possible, if not probable, disaster to the party in power, when the people, the free and untrammeled voters of the country, are given an early opportunity to pass judgment.

Second. If something is not done to pacify and give hope that some legislation will be enacted to meet the demands of the aggregated shipbuilders and shipowners, with their enormous capital, there will be a fearful slump in campaign contributions from this source, and therefore this scheme was hatched by which the people are to be fooled into false security and interested capitalists are to be induced to "cough up." If this bill should be enacted into law, there is but one thing that will, in my judgment, prevent the ultimate passage of a ship-subsidy bill, and that is the defeat of the Republican party in the November elections. If the opposition to the measure should be encouraged by a Democratic victory, if confined only to a majority in this House, and we hope for much more [applause on the Democratic side], it could not be passed in both Houses of Congress during the short session of three months next winter.

This view of the case naturally leads me to discuss the main question, that of ship subsidy. I do not care whether it shall come in the form of any of the bills which have been heretofore presented or in some other garb designed to be less objectionable, sugar coat it as they may, it is vicious, un-American, and the worst kind of class legislation. It is conceived in the sin of the unholy idea that the Government has the power and the right to tax one industry, profitable or unprofitable, to build up another industry, to make it more profitable. I do not doubt that there are men who honestly think that they believe certain things are right in politics, in business, in morals, and in religion, and yet they may be very far from the truth.

While I hope that I have none of that exclusiveness and narrow-mindedness which would lead me to arrogate to myself the position that I am right and that everybody else is wrong, I can not understand how any thoughtful man with a proper regard for the rights of others can hold that a subsidy or gift without some adequate consideration can be conferred by the Government upon one business at the expense of every other. The principle is unfair and is founded upon injustice, no matter how specious may be the arguments in support of it. It is necessarily taking from the profits of one industry to build up another. Many industries are now, in effect, subsidized by the policy of protection for protection's sake, to the great detriment of other equally worthy industries and enterprises which are not embraced in the favored classes.

I am not opposed to incidental protection to a limited degree, nor do I favor such radical and instantaneous changes in our tariff laws as would result in the destruction or serious crippling of any legitimate business or enterprise, but I am opposed to any and every thing that tends to build up a monopoly to the injury of other enterprises. How a ship subsidy, such as has been proposed from time to time, can be anything else than incidental, if not direct, robbery of other industries, whether protected or not, I fail to see.

Mr. GILBERT. I should like to ask the gentleman what proportion of foreign vessels are subsidized?

Mr. SPIGHT. I should say not more than 3 or 4 per cent.

Mr. GILBERT. How many lines of steamers ply between the ports of Philadelphia and New York and foreign ports?

Mr. SPIGHT. I am not able to answer that question.

I can not do better in this connection than to quote from a report made on this subject in the Forty-fifth Congress by the present distinguished Speaker of this House, in whose integrity and sound, practical business sense we all have great confidence. In discussing a proposition to subsidize two steamship lines, one from New York and the other from New Orleans, running to Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, "not primarily for the mail service, but for the purpose of promoting our foreign commerce, stimulating manufactures by finding a market for the products of the United States, and for the further purpose of enabling our merchant marine to carry the freight on the ocean now carried by vessels sailing under foreign flags," Mr. CANNON said:

> Such a subsidy would be a tax upon other industries of the country, taking from one industry which is self-supporting to give to another which is not.

He said further:

> Unless our products can be furnished by us to foreign markets as cheaply as they can be procured from other sources, we can not compete successfully for the trade, and if we attempt to do so by making grants from the public Treasury to steamship lines to carry such products, the steamships will run if we grant them sufficient subsidies only so long as the same are continued, and, as in the past, when the subsidy ceases the steamship line will cease to be operated.

Both of these statements of Mr. CANNON, made in 1878, are as true to-day as then.

I have already shown, and it can not be denied, that agriculture is the great source of our national wealth, and without the immense market value of our farm products our commercial supremacy could not last a year. It furnishes the very lifeblood of all our prosperity and feeds and clothes the men engaged in every other avocation. The sweat drops of the humble toilers on our farms are coined into the glittering gold which goes to make the aggregate of our national wealth, and when the laborer in our cotton, corn, and wheat fields lies down at night with tired limbs and sweat-stained garments he can justly feel that other millions have been added to the great volume of the wealth of the land he loves, even though the law, by its unjust discriminations, may deny to him the merited fruits of his labor.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. LUCKING. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for five minutes longer.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, appropriations have grown so enormously that many Government officials, including Members of Congress, have come to regard a few million dollars taken from the United States Treasury as a mere trifle, forgetting that every dollar spent by the Government is obtained by taxation in some form from the hard earnings of the toiling millions of our country. Then will some one tell me how it is possible to pay a subsidy of $8,000,000 or $10,000,000 annually for a period of ten years or more to shipbuilders and shipowners without imposing an additional burden upon the agricultural and other producing industries of the country?

We can't console ourselves with the delusive reflection that the farmer and the laborer in the factory or in the mine don't feel it. If their wives and children haven't sufficient clothing to protect them from the blasts of winter, or are sometimes compelled to go to bed hungry, or if the young, God-given minds intrusted to their care are, by the hard conditions of life, denied the training and instruction which would fit them for greater usefulness and honor in the coming years, will any man dare to tell me that these producers of all wealth are unreasonable in demanding exemption from further burdens in the way of taxation? Have they not the right to expect fair and just treatment at the hands of the Government which they have made so powerful and rich? [Applause.] While we of the South have prospered because of the remunerative prices obtained for our last year's cotton crop, we are by no means the sole beneficiaries of the enhanced value of our great staple.

The balance of trade is in our favor because of the cotton produced in the South, and without which it would be against us, and through it American indebtedness in foreign hands has been largely canceled. To this result the grain growers of the West and Middle West have contributed their full share. Yet who has ever heard of a proposition to subsidize either of these great industries, of far greater value and importance to the country than shipbuilding and shipowning? On the contrary, this proposition for a ship subsidy is one to levy tribute upon these millions of toilers for the exclusive benefit of the few individuals and companies engaged in another business. Already the protest of these millions has been heard, and if they can only be brought to understand the enormity of the proposition embodied in ship subsidy, with the power of a wild storm they will sweep from their place the political party which advocates this iniquity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am not unfriendly to the shipping interest, but would do everything that can be done legitimately and honestly to aid in building it up; but I am not willing and will never consent to take from the pockets of the people, by direct or indirect taxation, money that belongs to them to build up shipping or any other exclusive interest. Not one dollar that is taken from the United States Treasury but was put there by the people by taxation in some form.

To recapitulate: The commission provided for in this bill is unnecessary and expensive, and the same result can be reached through the regular channel of the two committees of Congress. We propose a remedy which if enacted into law will give more speedy and effective relief to our shipping than a subsidy would provide. A subsidy would give only temporary relief, if any, and would be unfair, unjust, and burdensome to the masses of the people, who are the wealth producers and who would derive no benefit.

Mr. Speaker, I would appeal to no prejudice or passion, but I am opposed to any species of class legislation, and this subsidy proposition is that, pure and simple. I represent a district and a State which have no protected industries, but are almost wholly agricultural; and in behalf of all the farmers, all the merchants, and all the operatives in mines and factories everywhere I protest against any step looking to the granting of subsidies and hope this bill will be defeated. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, being temporarily in charge in the absence of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], I yield one minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Speaker, in pursuance of leave heretofore granted me to extend my observations in the RECORD, it seems to me that the subject of the restoration of our merchant marine has acquired additional importance by reason of the acquisition of our insular possessions. As a masterly exposition of conditions in the Philippine Islands, I submit the following:

[Address of Secretary of War W. H. Taft on the Philippines before the Chamber of Commerce of New York City, April 21, 1904.]

Your president, Mr. Jesup, has been good enough to invite me to address you. I should have declined the invitation because of many other engagements but for the opportunity which it gives me to bring to the attention of the solid business men of New York the problem which we have on our hands in the Philippines.

The people of the United States have under their guidance and control in the Philippines an archipelago of 3,000 islands, the population of which is about 7,600,000 souls. Of these, 7,000,000 are Christians and 600,000 are Moros or other pagan tribes. The problem of the government of the Moros is the same as that which England has had in the government of the Straits Settlements or India. The government of 7,000,000 Christian Filipinos is a very different problem, and one which it has fallen to the lot of the United States only to solve.

The attitude of the American people toward the Philippine Islands may be described as follows: There are those who think that the Declaration of Independence forbids our accepting or maintaining sovereignty over them; there are those who, without respect to the Declaration of Independence, believe that colonial possessions are likely to lead to expense and corruption and demoralization, have little faith in the solution of the problem by teaching the Filipino the art of self-government, and are anxious to get rid of the islands before they have done any harm to the United States.

Then there are those who hold that fate brought these islands under our control, and that thus a duty was imposed upon us of seeing to it that they were not injured by the transfer. As a friend of the Filipinos it is my anxious desire to enlarge that class of Americans who have a real interest in the welfare of the islands, and who believe that the United States can have no higher duty or function than to assist the people of the islands to prosperity and a political development which shall enable them to secure to themselves the enjoyment of civil liberty. [Applause.]

A RESULT OF THE WAR.

The war with Spain led us far away from Cuba, whose condition was its cause, to these beautiful islands in the oriental Tropics. After Dewey's guns had brought the whole archipelago potentially within American control there was no escape from the dilemma which was then and thereafter presented to the people of the United States, except the one which they took. Three courses were suggested: First, that after peace with Spain we should turn the islands back to her. But in the legitimate course of the campaign we had called to our assistance as allies Aguinaldo and his forces, with whom the people of the islands were largely in sympathy. It would have been a breach on our part to have delivered them over to Spain with the bloody conflict which would inevitably have followed.

Could we have delivered the islands over to the government of Aguinaldo? Aguinaldo's government was a military dictatorship, having actual control, and that not always complete, in from eight or ten of forty provinces. A convention had been called of Aguinaldo's friends. A large majority of the delegates had been directly appointed by him. They formulated and adopted a constitution as the basis of a popular government. The constitution was mere paper. It was taken from the Constitution of the United States, that of Mexico, and that of the Argentine Republic. It had no life, for it was never at any time put into force. The actual government was despotic and oppressive to even a greater degree than the Spanish Government ever had been, and resistance to its authority, caused by its dishonesty and oppressive measures in the provinces in which it had authority, was frequent and disturbing.

The adoption of the constitution at Malolos was not indicative of the capacity of the people to maintain popular self-government. It represented only an academic aspiration by the drafters. The result was mere committee work, without the slightest evidence of the practical operativeness of the instrument from previous actual experience in government by the people. The only real government which existed under Aguinaldo was that of the one-man power, arbitrary and inconsiderate of the people. With these facts before the United States, I submit that there was no escape from the dilemma except the acceptance of a transfer of the sovereignty of Spain and the assumption of political control over the Filipino people until by proper measures and patient governmental training and experience they could be given self-governing capacity.

NO INJURY TO AMERICANS.

Concerning the objection that this is a new business for the United States which will have a demoralizing effect upon the nation, I think no one is able to point out any injury which has thus far resulted to the people of the United States except the expense attendant upon the maintenance of law and order in the islands during the insurrection and the regrettable loss of life which occurred. Certainly no one thus far can show the baleful effects of that dreadful spirit of greed which the opponents of the policy are so prone to see in everything done with respect to the Philippines. I challenge them to point out anything which has been done to the Philippine Islands, either immediately under the government there established or by the United States, which savors in the least of a selfish use of those islands for the benefit either of the individuals in the United States or of the Government itself.

The only thing which can be seriously made the basis of such a charge was the attempt during the present session of Congress to put in force the coastwise trading laws for the benefit of the marine shipping of the United States in respect to the trans-oceanic trade between the islands and the United States, and that by act of Congress has now been postponed for two years longer. There has been a rebate provided of the export duty on hemp imported directly from the islands into the United States.

This has not affected injuriously the trade of the islands, because the demand for hemp is so great that the islands have a monopoly in respect to it. There has unexpectedly been caused by the rebate a reduction of the income in the islands of about $250,000, because the equivalent which was provided as a counter benefit, to wit, the duties to be collected on imports from the islands into the United States, has not equaled the aggregate rebate on the hemp.

This, however, was a miscalculation by the legislators that was pardonable and can be easily rectified. In every other respect the legislation which has been enacted has been in favor of the islands, including a gift of $3,000,000 for the purpose of relieving distress there. The attitude of those who support the Government in its policy is altruistic. It is that of one which out of a friendly feeling to the Filipinos would sacrifice much to accomplish the purposes of the administration there. It is a feeling which does the nation credit, and a feeling that a nation of the wealth and power that this nation has may well afford to encourage.

A CHARGE WHOLLY UNFOUNDED.

General denunciation of the Government's policy as one of the suppression of freedom and an attack upon liberty has rendered uneasy many of our people, but the charge is wholly unfounded. There has been established in the islands a government of law and order, in which the administration of justice is quite as good as it is in half of the States of the Union. It has secured to every man, woman, and child among the Christian Filipinos all the rights contained in the bill of rights in the Constitution of the United States, except the right to bear arms and the right to trial by jury.

The right to bear arms is one that might very well be restricted in the United States. [Laughter and applause.] The freedom with which firearms are sold, the unlicensed character of the business, will readily account for many of the homicides which disgrace the criminal annals of our country. The right of trial by jury is one which the people of the islands do not understand, and which it is wise to postpone the exercise of until they who are to constitute the jury shall be better qualified to exercise the function of administering justice.

As it is to-day in the islands, no man need be convicted of a crime except by the judgment of a judge of first instance, concurred in by a majority of the seven judges of the supreme court. The appeal on the facts and law to the supreme court of the islands, which consists of three Filipinos and four Americans, certainly offers sufficient security against mistakes or prejudices of one judge.

All the substantial civil rights, then, are secured to the Philippine people. They do not themselves exercise complete political control, but that is a very different thing from civil liberty. Women and children and other nonvoters in this country have the civil liberty secured by the Constitution, but do not exercise political control. If we abandoned the islands, we should be turning their political control over to the violent and the turbulent and the agitators, and civil liberty would at once cease to exist there.

CIVIL RIGHTS NOT UNDERSTOOD.

The great difficulty that we have now in making our grant of civil liberty useful to the inhabitants is their failure to understand what their rights are and their incapacity to maintain them. I remember one morning, early in my experience in the Philippines, I was visited by an elderly Tagalo, who spoke no Spanish, but who presented a petition, written for him by some one else, in Spanish, in which he set forth that his son had been arrested for a crime under the Spanish régime, had been held for six years without trial, and was still in Bilibid prison.

Calling on me at the same time was a distinguished lawyer of the islands, one of the three persons who had drawn up the constitution adopted at Malolos, which had attracted so much admiration from our anti-imperialistic friends. I turned the petition over to him and asked him to confer with the old man, which he did. He said to me: "How can we redress this grievance?" I suggested: "Under an order of General Otis the writ of habeas corpus is in force; you ought to sue out for such a writ."

He asked me what the writ of habeas corpus was, and I explained it to him and at his request drafted a petition for the writ. Taking the petition he went to Bilibid prison and found that there were ninety persons in prison in the same situation as that of the son of my early caller. He filed a petition for the writ in each of these cases and succeeded in securing the release of all. His success in the matter was a revelation to him, as it was to the people of the community, in respect to what was practical civil liberty of the individual. Yet it was he who had penned the constitution supposed to secure such liberties to his fellow-citizens some two or three years before.

My experience in the Philippines and that of others who have been there justify me in saying that were the Americans to leave the islands to the government of Aguinaldo or some person of his views all the guaranties of civil liberty would be lost in the effort of the executive head of the government to maintain his position against hostile cabals and conspiracies. In other words, a surrender by us of political control in the islands, as they are at present peopled, means the suppression of civil liberty.

Hence it is that those of us who are in favor of only the gradual extension to the Filipinos of political control, retaining a guidance under the Government of the United States, are the real defenders and protectors of the liberties of the Philippine people, while the so-called and self-styled "anti-imperialists," who demand an immediate surrender of the islands, are, in effect, advocating a policy which makes for absolutism and tyranny, or a political chaos which is even worse than either, and which will end, for a long time to come, all hope of the liberty of the individual. The course which the so-called "anti-imperialists" seek is the easy one. The course which we have on hand is a difficult one

BREACHES OF THE DECLARATION.

If we pursue the policy which is now being pursued in respect to the islands, the policy of holding the islands for the benefit of the Filipinos and of doing everything we can to elevate and educate the people, to increase their prosperity, and to furnish them full opportunity for the pursuit of happiness, we need trouble ourselves little about the alleged violation of the principles of the Declaration of Independence. If that instrument is to be so construed as to prevent us from taking the course which the dilemma already presented required us to take, then the history of the American Republic has been nothing but a violation of the principles of that instrument from the beginning.

Women and children and slaves were not permitted to exercise any political control at the time that the Declaration of Independence was signed. Those who, by their suffrage, had all the political control there was in the various colonies were in many instances in the minority of male citizens. Every property qualification, every educational qualification that excluded from the suffrage any male citizen over 21, violated the Declaration of Independence, if it is to be given the wide construction contended for by our opponents.

When Thomas Jefferson, who penned the Declaration, directed the purchase of Louisiana, the French residents and the Spanish residents of that country protested against the transfer by Napoleon to the United States on the ground that it was made without their consent and they were thereby converted into subjects of a sovereign to whom they had never willingly sworn allegiance. When we took in New Mexico and Arizona from old Mexico, we agreed that we would ultimately give them State government and independent control. More than fifty years have passed since that time and they are still held in a condition of dependence without the rights of sovereign States. For fifty years, then, we have been violating the Declaration with respect to their people.

When the war came on and the issues of slavery and State rights were presented 20,000,000 people coerced 10,000,000 people to remain in the Government from the control of which they had withdrawn their consent, and now to-day in the Southern States, by grandfathers' clauses and by property qualifications and by educational qualifications, the white people are seeking to exclude from the ballot those colored voters whom they deem to be unfitted to exercise political control in their respective communities.

For either the Southerner or the New Englander to rest his opposition to what we are doing in the Philippines on the Declaration of Independence involves an inconsistency that robs what he says of weight. In every instance it will be seen that the principles of the Declaration of Independence are always qualified by the statement that the people who are to be consulted with respect to their own government shall have sufficient capacity to govern themselves and better themselves by such self-government.

FILIPINO UNFITNESS—THE JAPANESE.

In the Philippine Islands 90 per cent of the inhabitants are still in a hopeless condition of ignorance and utterly unable intelligently to wield political control. They are subject, like the waves of the sea, to the influence of the moment, and any educated Filipino can carry them in one direction or the other, as the opportunity and the occasion shall permit. The 10 per cent of the Filipinos who are educated have shown by what they have done and what they have aspired to and what they are that they may be taught the lesson of self-government and that their fellows by further education may be brought up to a condition of discriminating intelligence which shall enable them to make a forceful and useful public opinion. But that it will take more than one generation to accomplish this everyone familiar with the facts must concede.

It is true that the marvelous development of the Japanese in the last fifty years may justify the hope that the period will be shorter than I have stated, but it is to be noted with the Japanese, first, that they are a more industrious people and a more thrifty people than the Filipinos; second, that they have always had an independence and natural government, proceeding from the feudal system and the continuance of the traditional governmental influence of the imperial household.

The Spanish régime of four hundred years stamped out all tribal relations and everything akin to the feudal allegiance, and to a natural government among the Filipinos, and there is nothing but the dead level of a people whose only hope is education up to popular self-government under the guidance of some one who meantime shall secure to the people the inestimable benefits of civil liberty.

My own idea of the mission of the United States in the Philippine Islands is that it ought to be maintained and encouraged by the people of the United States without regard to the question of its cost or its profitable results from a commercial or financial point of view. Opponents of the policy of the Administration strive to frighten the taxpayer with a review of the cost which they say the Philippine Islands have been and will prove to be to the United States. I am not familiar with the statistics, but it is possible that the war of the insurrection cost the United States about $300,000,000. That is spent. The object of the war has been accomplished. Tranquillity and good order prevail in the islands.

The number of white troops in the islands has been reduced from 75,000 to 15,000 men. The Army of the United States numbers 65,000. In any event, whether we have the Philippines or not, 65,000 regular soldiers are not too many for a nation of 80,000,000 of people. Therefore all that can be properly charged to the Philippine experiment from now on is the additional cost of keeping 15,000 men and transporting them from the United States to the Philippines and back every three years over what it would cost to keep them in the United States and transport them to and from the stations in the United States. This is a comparatively small sum.

Then it is said that our Navy has been enlarged on account of the Philippines. I do not think that our Navy is too large, whether we have the Philippines or not. Our commerce must be protected. Our nation must occupy a dignified position before the other nations of the world, and certain it is that the protests of a nation with a respectable navy are more respectfully listened to than when it has only a few wooden hulks to represent its nationality.

There will be the additional cost of fortifying Manila, Iloilo, Cebu, and Subig Bay, as part of the coast line of the United States. Beyond that there will be no considerable additional expenditure out of the United States Treasury.

REVENUES OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The islands themselves give every indication of furnishing revenue sufficient to carry out the plans which the United States may properly carry out in the material and intellectual development of the country and its people. The taxpaying capacity of the country is, of course, determined by that which it produces for domestic and foreign uses.

For the last two or three years the wealth produced in the islands has been seriously impaired and reduced, not only by the war and the cholera, but also and chiefly by the loss of draft animals, 90 per cent of which have succumbed to the rinderpest. Agriculture has been dependent upon such animals, and the recovery from this blow must necessarily be slow. Congress appropriated $3,000,000 to assist the islands in restocking plantations, but the enormous difficulties attending the importation of cattle from other countries which are able to live in the Philippines are only known to those who have attempted it.

I am glad to say, however, that our scientists on the islands have discovered means of preventing a recurrence and spread of the disease, so that when the plantations are restocked rinderpest will have no terrors for the farmer. With normal conditions in agriculture, when the cattle shall have been restored by breeding and otherwise to the usual number, the islands will always be self-supporting, and will doubtless furnish a surplus of revenue with which to meet the demands for improvements which present themselves in every part of the islands.

The Philippine Archipelago is the only country in which can be produced what is known as "manila hemp" or what is called in the Spanish language "abaca." This is a fiber of enormous strength, of from 6 to 15 feet in length, which is stripped from the stalk of a banana plant—not the ordinary banana plant, but a plant of the same family which does not produce fruit. The leaf is slightly different from that of the fruit banana, though one may easily be mistaken for the other. The plant grows on the side hills. For the first two years it needs shade from the tropical sun and some cultivation around the foot of the stalk. After two years the stalk is strong enough to afford the fiber of commerce, and, though cut down, will reproduce itself each year for six or seven years, and this with very little cultivation.

The chief labor in the production of the fiber is that of stripping the fiber of the pith of the plant. It is done by pulling or drawing it under a knife edge. If the fiber be drawn under a serrated knife edge, the work is very much easier than if drawn under a straight edge, but the fiber is not so clean and its value and quality are much reduced. The tremendous increase in the demand for manila hemp has made profitable production of the cheaper and poorer qualities.

Women and children are able to draw the hemp with a serrated knife, while only the stronger adults are able to draw and clean properly the finer fiber. Many machines have been invented for the purpose of drawing the hemp, but in none of them as yet has the hemp producer been able to secure a result which justifies their use commercially. They either break the fiber or they discolor it. There is the opportunity for an invention which will revolutionize the hemp business in the Philippines as completely as the cotton gin revolutionized the production and preparation of cotton in the South.

EXTENT OF HEMP GROWING.

Of the forty-one provinces of the Philippine Islands at least fifteen now produce commercial quantities of hemp. To-day, owing to the insufficient means of communication and transportation, many fields of hemp are allowed to rot and are not stripped or used. In many of the provinces there is wild hemp, which is not so good in texture, and which it would be necessary to replace by cultivated plants were the opportunity offered to put it on the market. From experiments by our Agricultural Bureau I have no doubt that the number of provinces in which hemp could be raised might be doubled. The demand for hemp is so great that while an increase in its production might reduce the price, the total product would far exceed in value that which the statistics now show.

Many parts of the islands are very rich in cocoanuts. The cocoanut grove is planted 20 to a hectare; that is, 200 to 2½ acres. It takes four or five years for cocoanut trees to bear. After that they will bear for 100 years, and a low price a tree for annual rent is $1 Mexican, or $40 gold a year an acre. In the province of Laguna, within the last two years since the war was over, there have been planted more than five times the number of trees which were there before. There is a constant market for copra, which is the dried meat of the cocoanut, and the price is rising.

Since the demand for hemp and cocoanuts has increased so largely, planters have abandoned the raising of rice, preferring to buy their food out of the profit of the hemp or cocoanut industry. Therefore for ten or fifteen years it has been the habit of the islands to import rice, although there are no islands where rice will grow to better advantage than in the Philippines. The amount of importation, however, was comparatively small until the destruction of the draft cattle three years ago, which reduced the actual amount of rice production in the islands far below what was necessary to feed the people, and during the last year about $12,000,000 in gold had to be expended in importing rice from French China.

SUGAR—TOBACCO—WOODS.

The sugar and tobacco industries in the islands are capable of a considerable increase. The island of Negros contains sugar land as rich as any in the world, and the provinces of Cagayan, Isabella, and Union contain tobacco lands which, next to Cuba, produce the best tobacco in the world, but the trouble is that the markets for such sugar and tobacco have been, by tariffs imposed in various countries, very much reduced. Should the markets of the United States be opened to the Philippines it is certain that both the sugar and the tobacco industry would become thriving, and although the total amount of the product in each would probably not affect the American market at all, so extensive is the demand here for both tobacco and sugar, it would mean the difference between poverty and prosperity in the islands.

I know that the reduction of the tariff for this purpose is much opposed by the interests which represent beet sugar and tobacco; but I believe that a great majority of the people of the United States are in favor of opening the markets to the Philippine Islands, conscious that it will not destroy either the beet-sugar or the tobacco industry of this country, and feeling that as long as we maintain the association which we now have with the Philippine Islands it is our duty to give them the benefit of the markets of the United States and bring them as close to our people and our trade as possible.

Nothing else will justify the application of the coastwise trading laws to the transoceanic trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands; but if they be invited to partake of the benefits of the protection theory they may well be subjected to the rule that, as between the United States and themselves, the products are to be transferred in American bottoms.

Another immense source of wealth in the islands is the almost inexhaustible supply of the most beautiful woods of rubber and of the most valuable gums. These sources of wealth are hardly developed.

TRADE WITH THE PHILIPPINES.

And now what as to the existing trade between the United States and the Philippines? It is still quite small, not exceeding $5,000,000 in any one year of merchandise transferred from the United States to the Philippines, but increasing largely in the products transferred from the Philippines to the United States.

The latter increase, however, is not a natural one. It is brought about by Congressional legislation, already mentioned, which confers the benefit of $7.40 a ton rebate from export tax upon all hemp transported directly from the Philippines to the United States. The total business done between the United States and the Philippines is something like $17,000,000. With the restoration of normal conditions in the islands, with the construction of railways and other material development there, I have no doubt that this trade between the United States and the islands would be trebled in the course of five years.

The condition with respect to the business of the United States merchants in the islands to-day is unfortunate, and its cause can easily be traced. The Government of the United States went into the islands under a distinct promise that it would govern the Philippines for the benefit of the Filipinos; that it would extend self-government to the Filipinos as rapidly as they showed themselves fit for it, and that as many Filipinos as possible would be used in the personnel of the Government.

This has always been the attitude of the Government, and never, so far as I know, has there been a single step of departure from it. It was the attitude declared before the war of insurrection began, while it was pending, and at its close, and no resistance on the part of the natives has varied our position in that regard. This policy did not meet, as was natural, the ready assent of all the Army or of those persons who were in sympathy with the Army.

SENTIMENT AGAINST FILIPINOS.

The adventuresome spirits who followed the Army for the purpose of establishing a business in its wake found that they had all that they could do to supply the demand made by the Army for American goods, and as American capital came in driblets or in larger sums it was turned into the business of supplying the Army with those things which the Government did not supply.

Four or five trading companies were thus organized, embracing substantially all the American enterprise that has appeared in the islands during the first three or four years of American occupation. American merchants thus situated easily caught the feeling of hostility and contempt felt by many of the soldiers for the Filipinos, and were most emphatic in condemning the policy of the Government in attempting to attract the Filipinos and make them, so far as might be, a part of the new civil order.

The American newspapers which were established readily took the tone of their advertisers and their subscribers, and hence it is that the American community in the Philippines to-day is largely an anti-Filipino community. The 75,000 soldiers, whose demands for supplies have made their business so profitable, have now been reduced to 15,000, and the market which made the American merchants for a time independent of the Filipinos has now almost entirely disappeared.

The condemnation by such merchants of the civil government continues, and they do not hesitate to make the government the scapegoat for the failure of business to improve. The fact is that their customers have gone back to the United States and that their attitude toward the Filipinos is such that the Filipinos are not disposed to patronize them. This is unfortunate, and there must come into the islands a new set of merchants, who shall view the situation from an entirely different standpoint.

There are 7,600,000 Filipinos. Of these, the 7,000,000 Christian Filipinos are imitative, anxious for new ideas, willing to accept them, willing to follow American styles, American sports, American dress, and American customs. A large amount of cotton goods is imported into the islands each year, but this is nearly all from England and Germany. There is no reason why these cotton goods should not come from America, except the fact that there are no American houses in the islands that have devoted their attention to winning the Filipino trade. I am not a business man, but I know enough to know that it is not the best way to attract custom from an alien people to call them names, to make fun of them, and to decry every effort toward their advancement and development. In other words, the American merchants in the Philippines have got off on the wrong foot. There should be a radical change.

EXTENT OF RAILWAY LINES.

There are a few railroad lines in the Philippines which it would be possible to induce capital to build without a guaranty of income, but it is wiser, it seems to the commission, to attempt to introduce a general system of railways than to have a link built here and a link built there, and to await the process of time before trunk lines shall be established.

For instance, it is quite probable that a short line of 40 or 50 miles would be constructed without a guaranty in the province of Legaspi, where is the rich hemp business, and where it has been customary during the last two or three hemp seasons to pay $40, Mexican, a day for a carabao cart; so, perhaps, it would be possible to secure the construction of a line without guaranty from Manila south to Batangas, though of this I am not certain.

With the hope, however, of bringing capital in considerable amount to the islands a bill has been prepared, which has passed the House, authorizing the government to grant franchises for the construction of railroads, with a guaranty of income of not more than 5 per cent on the amount actually invested for not exceeding thirty years. In most cases a guaranty of a smaller percentage would be sufficient, but my impression is that with respect to the main trunk line from Aparri to Manila the difficulties of construction and the delay in securing a profitable business would probably require an assurance of 5 per cent dividends.

The opposition of those who oppose the investment of any American capital in the islands, which shall furnish a motive for a longer association between the two countries than is absolutely necessary, may postpone the passage of this bill until the next session of Congress. I shall deeply regret the delay, but I am not discouraged, for as long as I continue in my present position I expect to press the legitimate claims of the Philippine Islands upon a just and generous Government for such authority in the local government as will permit a proper development of the material resources of the islands, and the delay in legislation, which is incident, not to the opposition of a majority, but to the opposition of a small minority, while it is apt to try one's patience, ought nevertheless not to discourage.

CHARACTER OF FILIPINO LABOR.

I come now to the question of labor, which has been made the basis for the most discouraging accounts of conditions in the Philippine Islands. The Filipino is a tropical laborer. In times past a large amount of rice has been raised in the islands, a large amount of tobacco, a large amount of sugar, and a large amount of hemp, and they all involve, as a material part of the cost of their production, the labor of the natives.

The Chinamen, who have been said by mistaken persons to number a million and a half in the islands, in fact do not number 100,000, and none of them do any agricultural work of any kind in the Philippine Islands. The Filipino is naturally an agriculturist. When you go through his village in the middle of the day you will probably see him lounging about the window or on the seat in front of his house, and you will ascribe to him the laziest habits, because you do not know that he has been up at 4 o'clock in the morning and has worked from that time until 9 or 10 in the fields and that he will begin work again at 4 o'clock and work for two or three hours until sundown or later.

The American merchant is loud in his denunciation of the insufficiency of the Filipino labor. This is because the price of labor has probably doubled since the Americans went there, and he has heard the tales of how cheap labor was before the Spanish régime ended. He also compares the cost of labor in the Philippine Islands with that in Hongkong, and he finds that it is very considerably less all over China. I am not contending that the labor in the Philippines is as good as Chinese labor, for that labor is the best in the world, probably, when economy in wages and efficiency in product are considered, but what I wish to dispute is that the labor conditions in the Philippines are hopeless.

The city of Manila has under its control and in its employment about 3,000 laborers, and they are paid all the way from 50 cents, Mexican, to $1.25, Mexican, and there is no complaint whatever on the part of the authorities that their work is not properly and well done. The Quartermaster's Department of the Army has about the same number, and their reports of the efficiency of Filipino labor are exceedingly encouraging. We have now employed really as coolies on the Benguet road, in the most difficult drilling and construction work, about 3,000 natives, and while their efficiency is nothing like that of the American, in the accomplishment of work in proportion to the pay they probably get through about as much.

The men who are constructing the harbor works at Manila—the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf Company—have employed upward of eight hundred to a thousand Filipinos in their quarries. At first they found it very difficult to secure workmen, but now they have more labor than they need. They use about 8 per cent of white foremen and the rest natives. They give to the natives houses, furnish a church, a band, a cockpit, and a school. On their fiesta days they give them vacation. They have fewer desertions, less absenteeism, than with Americans.

These experiments show only that the solution of the labor problem in the Philippines is teaching the Filipinos how to work. Sir William Van Horne reports that he found much difficulty originally in the construction of the Cuban railways, because the natives were not acquainted with how the work should be done, but that, by means of white foremen, they were easily taught, and that then they made good laborers. I feel sure that the same thing will prove to be true of the Filipinos.

MINES, STREET CARS, ELECTRICITY.

There is doubtless a great deal of mineral wealth in the islands, but it will be available only after transportation shall have been introduced. It is not an island with a bonanza mine in it, though at some distant day such a vein may be discovered there. There is certainly coal in the islands in commercial quantities. There is now between the islands a considerable inter-island trade, and there are quite a large number of ships engaged therein. Without it the islands could not live; it is their arterial circulation.

The present system might be much improved by introducing American generous methods of dealing with the public. About $2,500,000 capital has been invested in a street railway in Manila, which will be completed next Thanksgiving Day. This will certainly change one of the annoying and expensive features of Manila life, and will give to the residents of the city opportunity to cut down their present expenses of living at least 25 per cent.

There is no city in the world where there is so much traveling done in carriages, due to the fact that people may not walk about safely under the tropical sun. The presence of a street railway will do away with the necessity for many of these conveyances and the streets will be less used and their condition much improved. There is sufficient continuous fall of water in streams within practicable distances of Manila to furnish electrical power exceeding 15,000 horsepower. With the high price of coal, this is an important aid to manufacture.

The English houses and the Spanish houses who have dealt in the export trade in the islands have earned large profits during the occupancy of the United States.

HEALTH OF THE ISLANDS.

It is said that the health of the islands is such as to preclude Americans from going there. This is not true. The climate does prevent one from going into the sun in the middle of the day, and so prevents his working in the fields as a laboring man, but it is entirely possible for one to live in the islands for years and, if he does not neglect the ordinary rules of hygiene, to be free from bad health.

The province of Benguet, which is 150 miles from Manila, and which will soon be reached by a railroad and an electric road in twelve hours, offers a climate quite like the summer climate of the Adirondacks or of Canada. Under the land regulations, which go into force at the time of the adjournment of Congress, a summer capital is to be established at Baguio, and town lots in the same place will be offered at public auction. Americans engaged in business may at small cost buy lots and erect houses and live there as many months of the year as they choose, except the months of August and September, which are usually so wet as to make it unprofitable.

During the remaining months of the year the climate is beautiful, the temperature going down as low as 35° F., and rarely, if ever, reaching 80°.

It is estimated that not more than 5,000,000 acres of land are owned by natives in the islands, and that the remainder, 65,000,000, is owned by the Government. This remainder will, under the land regulations, be opened for settlement and purchase at the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

There is every prospect that the land will be taken up by both Filipinos and Americans. The maximum limitation for purchase by a company is 2,500 acres. This limitation is much too low for the cultivation of sugar, but is sufficiently extensive for the cultivation of other products. There is a provision in the law by which irrigation companies may own stock in land companies, so that probably the limitation may be evaded if private profit requires. The future of the Philippine Islands, of course, would be dangerous to prophesy with certainty, but with a change in the hygienic conditions that surround life, due to an effective board of health, with a supply of pure water from the sinking of driven wells all over the country, which the pending bill in Congress will encourage, I feel sure that the population will rapidly increase.

THE ANTI-IMPERIALIST PETITION.

We hold the Philippines for the benefit of the Filipinos, and we are not entitled to pass a single act or to approve a single measure that has not that as its chief purpose. But it so happens, and it fortunately so happens, that generally everthing we do for the benefit of the Filipinos and the Philippines will only make their association with the United States more profitable to the United States.

I do not base my prayer for a continuance of the present policy toward the Philippine Islands on selfish grounds, but as this is a chamber of commerce, and as it is naturally interested in the possibilities of commerce in those distant islands, I have felt justified in referring more than heretofore to the industrial conditions existing there and the possibility of improvement and the increase of trade between the United States and the Philippines.

The first requisite of prosperity in the Philippine Islands is tranquillity, and this should be evidenced by a well-ordered government. The Filipinos must be taught the advantage of such a government, and they should learn from the government which is given them the disadvantages that arise to everybody in the country from political agitation for a change in the form of government in the immediate future. Hence it is that I have ventured to oppose with all the argument that I could bring to bear the petition to the two political conventions asking that independence be promised to the Filipinos.

It is not that I am opposed to independence in the islands, should the people of the Philippines desire independence when they are fitted for it, but it is that the great present need in the islands is tranquillity; the great present need in the islands is the building up of a permanent, well-ordered government; the great present need in the islands is the increase of the saving remnant of conservative Filipinos whose aid in uplifting and maintaining the present government on a partly popular and strictly civil-liberty basis shall be secured.

A promise such as that which is petitioned for can not but introduce at once into the politics of the islands the issue of independence, of present fitness for self-government, and will frighten away from the support of the present government the conservative element which is essential to its success, and yet which is always timid lest by a change bringing the violent and the irreconcilable to the front they shall suffer by reason of their prominence in aid of the present government.

The promise to give independence helps no one. There is no need of that promise to secure tranquillity, because we have tranquillity in the islands. It is certain to be misunderstood as a promise to be complied with in the present generation, and if, as is probable, the people shall be fitted for self-government in the present or the next generation, then the failure to give it will be regarded as a breach.

Why not let the politics of the islands take care of themselves? Why should the good people who signed the petition intermeddle with something the effect of which they are very little able to understand? Why not take the broader policy, which is that of doing everything beneficial to the Philippine Islands, of giving them a full market, of offering them an opportunity to have railroads built extensively through the islands, and of having a tranquillity which is essential to the development of their business and their property; why not insist on the spread of the educational system, of an improvement in the health laws, and subject everything that is done in the islands to an examination as to whether it is beneficial to the Filipino people, and then, when all has been done for the Philippines that a government can do, and they have been elevated and taught the dignity of labor, the wisdom of civil liberty and self-restraint in the political control indispensable to the enjoyment of civil liberty, when they have learned the principles of successful popular self-government from a gradually enlarged experience therein, we can discuss the question whether independence is what they desire, and grant it, or the retention of a closer association with the country which by its guidance has unselfishly led them on to better conditions.

EXHIBITS AT WORLD'S FAIR.

And now, gentlemen, there remains one thing to say which is more or less a matter of business. In order to familiarize the people of the United States with the Philippine Islands, and in order to bring the Philippines closer to the United States, the commission has deemed it wise to expend about $750,000 in making a satisfactory exhibit at the world's fair at St. Louis. In making the ethnographical exhibit the collectors have brought here natives of the various wild tribes of the islands. Naturally, as an exhibit, they would not bring the civilized tribes, as they are shown in the battalions of scouts and constabulary which are here.

The educated, the cultured, and the refined Filipinos would, of course, not appear in an exhibit, and yet the attention likely to be attracted to the wild tribes may blind the people to the fact that these wild tribes do not correctly represent the general average of civilization in the islands. For that reason the commission deemed it proper to appropriate a considerable sum of money to bring to the United States a delegation of from forty to fifty prominent Filipinos, prominent at the bar, prominent in business, prominent in the provinces, prominent in literature, in order that by going about the country and the different cities they might become acquainted with the institutions and appearances of this country, and at the same time the business and prominent men of the cities of the United States might have acquaintance with the best element of the Filipinos.

The appropriation is not large enough to justify such extensive visiting to the various cities as we should like, and therefore we have thought it wise to appeal to the commercial bodies of each city to assist us in the entertainment of these gentlemen while they are here. I venture to suggest, therefore, to the chamber of commerce that some action be taken in the nature of the appointment of a committee to confer with Doctor Wilson, who is in charge of the Philippine exhibit and also in charge of the delegation of Filipinos, to care for them while in New York. I am sure that there is in New York, as there is elsewhere, a sufficient interest in the people of those far-distant islands to invoke some effort on the part of individuals to see that the hospitality of the city of New York is properly extended to them.

The first virtue of a Filipino city or village is hospitality, and should any of your number ever visit the Philippines and become acquainted with the Filipinos you will understand why it is that those of us who have enjoyed the hospitality of the people of those islands are so anxious that the Filipino gentlemen, with their standards of hospitality, shall not be disappointed in what they receive here.

I thank you, gentlemen of the chamber of commerce and Mr. Chairman, for your kind attention. [Great applause.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a hundred years ago we had shipping to the amount of 600,000 tons engaged in foreign trade. From 600,000 tons one hundred years ago our registered shipping went up to two and one-half million tons at the outbreak of the civil war. To-day it is back at 900,000 tons. It has shrunk since the civil war began from two and a half million tons until now we have a beggarly nine hundred thousand engaged in the foreign trade.

One hundred years ago our international commerce only amounted to $150,000,000, while to-day it amounts to two thousand millions. Yet we have but little more shipping to-day engaged in foreign trade than we had a hundred years ago. Instead of having two and one-half millions of tons, as we had at the outbreak of the civil war, our fleet has disappeared from the ocean.

A hundred years ago we carried 85 per cent of our own commerce in our own bottoms, and to-day we do not carry 9 per cent. In other words, we have totally abandoned one of the most fruitful fields of human endeavor, one of the noblest callings on earth, abandoned it to the foreigner, apparently without a struggle, and it behooves us to ascertain the cause and search for a remedy.

The commercial side of this question is important, but the political side may become vital at any time. All of you remember that in our hundred days' war with Spain we took such of our merchant marine as we had, and splendid service it did us, scouting service, transport service, second line of defense, and supply service. We managed to buy fifty ships at exorbitant prices from foreign nations before the war broke out. We just managed to pull through a hundred days' war with that assistance. We could not have got any more vessels without violating the neutrality laws.

But let us suppose that instead of being a hundred days' disturbance with Spain it had been a war to the death between Germany and Great Britain, who to-day carry practically the whole of this two thousand millions of dollars which constitutes our foreign trade. Suppose that Germany and Great Britain begin to sweep each other's commerce off the seas. Who is going to carry that two thousand millions of dollars' worth of goods? If they are not carried, the congestion in our cities on the seashore will be far worse than it ever was during the Napoleonic wars, when the same sort of thing happened. Violate neutrality laws we must, if we wish our export trade to continue, and even the most sanctimonious crier of "Peace, peace!" must admit that the violation of neutrality laws is a serious business. If a war between Germany and Great Britain comes and finds us without a merchant marine, God help our foreign trade! Perhaps war will never arise between Germany and Great Britain. Perhaps it may arise in this decade. Who knows?

Mr. LUCKING. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. LUCKING. Is it not true that in case of war between these countries the shipping of those countries will seek shelter under neutral flags at once?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I am informed that it can not be done after the declaration of war without rendering such vessels liable to be fired on by the belligerents. And I further know that such was exactly the result during our civil war. Moreover, a large part of Great Britain's and Germany's steam tonnage is under contract to those Governments for use in war time.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is not only our shipping that is in this parlous state. Our shipbuilding industry is nearly bankrupt. In 1900 and 1901, owing to the fact that shipping men speculated upon the passage of a ship-subsidy bill, our shipyards seemed to have gained a new lease of life. Many orders for vessels were received, but the bubble soon burst. Since June, 1901, not a single keel has been laid in an American yard for a steel seagoing steam vessel. I want to read to you what our Commissioner of Navigation says in his current report.

Mr. GILBERT. What did he say in 1893 and 1894?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I will leave that for you to tell us in your time.

This is what Commissioner Chamberlain says:

> The outlook for steel-ship building on the seaboard has not changed since the last report of the bureau. It was then stated, "New vessels have not been ordered to take the place on the ways of large ocean steamers which have been launched and have been completed or are nearing completion." Five of these large steamers, of which four have been launched, remain to be completed, and when these are in commission the building of steel steamers on the seaboard, unless conditions change in the meantime, will again be restricted to other demands of our coasting trade. These are insufficient to give full employment to our shipyards. Unless they are supplemented by large orders for war ships, by next summer our shipyards on the seaboard will probably be able to work barely one-third of their capacity or less.

Now, the experience of many years has shown that the Congress of the United States is divided on this question into three classes of men. One class believes that nothing should be done, and that we should devote our energies to more lucrative objects. Another class believes that the true remedy lies in the repeal of our present navigation laws. The third class believes in constructive legislation, discriminating duties, discriminating tonnage charges, mail subsidies, Government aid to shipbuilding, and the like.

Now, I do not expect anyone who believes that nothing should be done to support this bill; but I fully believe those who believe in free ships and those who believe in other forms of remedy ought to join together and ask for a commission that can ascertain the true facts, as they have never yet been ascertained.

Every nation engaged in shipping to any extent subsidizes its merchant marine in one form or other, especially during infancy. Next to the fact that Englishmen are by nature and circumstances particularly adapted to the sea, I believe that the greatest factor in England's maritime supremacy was the extremely liberal financial assistance rendered by the British Government in the early days when steam was first beginning to supplant sails as a motive power.

I am going to publish in the RECORD certain tables showing the difference in the cost of building a ship in American yards and building a ship in English yards; also tables to show the different cost of wages paid to crews of different nationalities, my object being to show that while the subsidies of our rivals in part create the difficulty, they by no means constitute the whole. The greatest obstacle to our competition rests on the higher rate of wages in American shipping industries. About four or five years ago, in the Fifty-fifth Congress, a tabulation of figures was made from evidence furnished the United States Senate. The tables show that at that time, in the United States, it would cost about $300,000 to build a freighter of 4,000 tons, a tramp steamer of 11 knots trial speed—practically 8 or 9 knots actual speed. On the other hand, it would cost about $240,000 at that time to build the same vessel on the Clyde.

The report showed that the wages of an American crew of fifty, required to man a vessel of that sort, would amount to about $500 more per month, or $6,000 more per year, than the wages of an English crew on the same vessel.

The analysis revealed the fact that the disadvantage to the American vessel in cost of operation, insurance, interest, and depreciation annually would amount to about $18,000, or sufficient to wipe out the whole profit on the investment. Observe that these figures are somewhat antiquated. I shall give some more recent but less complete tables in the RECORD.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. BAKER. I understand you to say that the cost of building ships in American shipyards is a great deal more than the cost of building them in English yards?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER. And I understand you to say that is on account of the difference in the price of labor?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER. If that is so, will the gentleman please explain, in view of the fact that the per diem wages paid to labor is less in shipyards in France than it is in Great Britain, and that the British yards pay a higher per diem wage than is paid in French yards, why it is that ships are constructed in the English shipyards cheaper than they are constructed in France, where the rate of wages is lower than in Great Britain?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, assuming the gentleman's facts to be correct, which I believe to be the case, I suppose that it is for the same reason that we can build steam engines and steel rails cheaper while England can build cotton machinery cheaper.

Mr. BAKER. Do I understand the gentleman to contend that there is not equal skill among American laborers and American mechanics in American shipyards that there is in English shipyards on the part of Englishmen?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object to a question of that sort; but I will answer him in the words of Mr. Donald Crawford, a leader in one of the shipbuilding labor organizations. In his evidence before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, on another matter connected with shipping, he asked how could they be expected to be so skillful when they have to be looking for a job one day in San Francisco, then be out of a job for three or four months, and look for employment at Bath, Me., then be out of a job for three or four months again, and look for another with Mr. Olcott, at Newport News. I may not be quoting the gentleman exactly, but that is the substance of what he said, if my memory serves me.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago we were informed on that side that there was a great ocean of idle vessels at San Francisco and Manila Bay owned by Americans, and we passed a law giving those vessels a monopoly of the freight between here and the Philippines. Now, how is it there are so many vessels over on that side, practically the young side of the United States, and such a dearth of vessels on this side? Why should they be all at the Golden Gate and none at Hell Gate?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I do not understand the gentleman's question, but I believe that the Minnetonka and Minnewaska were mentioned in that list——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will you please——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to answer the question? Those two vessels are, I understand, laid up on the Atlantic coast and not on the Pacific coast. Now, Mr. Chairman, my time is limited and——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will ask my distinguished friend from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] if it has not been stated that there is a great ocean of vessels over there at San Francisco and Manila to whom we have granted a monopoly in——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield my time to discussion in which I have no part.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. But, Mr. Speaker, I will further say that this is a question of a matter of fact and not a matter of theory. Now, I do not believe anyone will deny that the high rate of wages in this country is the result of our protective system——

Mr. BAKER. I do.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts (continuing). Even free traders admit this, although they claim that the high rate is nominal rather than actual, owing to the correspondingly high prices which protection, in their opinion, also encourages

Be that as it may, we have adopted the policy of taxing our imports for the upbuilding and maintenance of our great industries, believing that the result in greater prosperity far more than compensates the people for this exaction.

In pursuing this course we have left our foreign shipping reft of the last vestige of protection, granting it no assistance at all except in the form of small mail subsidies in the last decade, in the decade prior to the civil war, and sporadically at other times.

I am now going to take up the chief objections made in the minority report on this bill. I think they show as completely the reason why the bill should be passed as does the report of the majority.

In the first place, the report of the minority is based on the false assumption that this is a ship-subsidy scheme, pure and simple. Until I read it in the report I was not aware of the fact that I myself am necessarily an advocate of ship subsidies. On the contrary, I believe that the truth may be found in a combination of some of the various different systems which prevail all over the world.

On the basis that this is a ship-subsidy measure, pure and simply, the minority proceeds to erect an argument, an argument full of misstatements, excusable, perhaps, because quoted from previous misstatements on this subject. The purpose of this argument is to show that ship subsidies have proved failures. Perhaps they have, perhaps they have not; I do not know, nor does anybody else, and that is one of the reasons why we need a ship commission, because then we can get at the facts.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. For a question of fact.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has stated that it is necessary, in his judgment, to have a commission. Does the gentleman not believe that there has been enough written and that literature enough exists——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Oh, I will come to all of that in a minute, if the gentleman will wait. I am coming to that question.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He will answer that later. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The question I desired to ask is this: Whether the gentleman did not believe that after the Members of Congress had been so well informed on the subject of ship subsidy, and after so much had been written, and after so many reports on the subject had been written from time to time, and so much spoken in the House of Representatives, we have sufficient before us without going to the expense of creating another commission, to be composed of the Members of this House and of the Senate? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it may be possible that the RECORD to-morrow morning will develop a question mark in that long sentence, but I confess that I do not understand the gentleman's question, nor do I care for its repetition.

I may say that I have read much of the literature and most of the recent debates on this subject, and I find running through all a mass of misstatement and contradiction on both sides. Therefore I believe that we ought to create a commission that will get together, ascertain the exact facts on which Republicans and Democrats alike can agree, and then proceed to frame an issue or prescribe a remedy. Until we agree on the facts we can not intelligently prescribe a remedy.

Let me give some illustrations of the difficulty of getting at the facts. The minority report quotes Senator Vest as saying that not over 3 per cent of the merchant marine of Great Britain is subsidized. On the other hand Mr. W. W. Bates, ex-Commissioner of Navigation, an opponent of subsidies, whom the minority also quotes, says in his book on the American merchant marine that the tonnage of the British steamers earning subsidies or subventions is 13.75 per cent of the entire steam tonnage of Great Britain, both coastwise and foreign. Of course, coastwise shipping does not need a subsidy. Therefore, the proportion of competitive or foreign shipping that is subsidized vastly exceeds this 13.75 per cent. Next I find in a report made to the Senate in 1899 that out of 357 steamships in the world over 14 knots in speed, 289 were at that time subsidized in one form or another, 44 were not subsidized, and with regard to the remaining 24 the facts were not obtained.

Now, which side is right? Nothing but a commission can decide the facts in the face of such contradictions. The minority report says that the British merchant marine has not been built up on subsidy. On the other hand, ex-Commissioner of Navigation W. W. Bates says that fifty years ago, when the United States and Great Britain were engaged in a struggle for the commercial mastery of the ocean, every ton of steamer that went to sea received treasury support from the British Government. Which of those statements is correct? I do not pretend to be an expert on this question, but I will make the statement that in the sixty years from 1840 to 1900 Great Britain expended nearly two hundred and fifty millions in subsidies, or more than all the rest of the world put together.

I hold in my hand the new Cunard Line contract with Great Britain. It passed the House of Commons by a majority of over 5 to 1. It provides for the building of two great steamships, the best that the world can produce, at a cost of $13,000,000. The Government is to lend the money, and the company is to pay interest at the rate of 2½ per cent and repay the principal in twenty annual installments. On the other hand, the Government is to pay the company for carrying the mails a sum equal to the annual interest charge, and is to pay the two vessels yearly as an Admiralty subvention a sum sufficient to provide for the annual installment of principal repaid.

Commissioner of Navigation Chamberlain says of this contract in his last report:

> By this agreement in effect the British Government agrees to build and give to the Cunard Company the two best steamships Great Britain can produce, and the company agrees to operate them at its own cost.

Is the minority perfectly sure that subsidy plays no part in Great Britain's maritime policy?

The minority report says that France subsidizes her merchant marine and that it is dwindling. Lloyd's Register shows that from 1893 to 1900 instead of dwindling it increased 54 per cent. The minority report says that the Italian merchant marine is dwindling. Lloyd's Register shows that it is increasing. Let a competent commission sift these conflicting statements.

The minority report goes on to say that hitherto every effort to aid our merchant marine, except by the discriminative duties system, has resulted in undisputed failure. It says that every subsidy we ever granted, every mail contract, has so resulted. Now, I want to read from another book on American merchant marine, by Winthrop L. Marvin. He calls attention to the fact that the ocean-going steam fleet of the United States under subsidy increased from 55,000 tons in 1847 to 115,000 in 1855. Which statement is correct? We do not know.

I have heard again and again that the mail act of 1891 was passed exclusively for the American Line of steamers, and I have heard that they are the only ones who ever benefited by it; that it was a great boon to them. I have read of the amounts of money that they are supposed to have made out of those contracts, yet I tell you that the last report of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails shows that the American Line received last year less money for carrying the mail from New York to Southampton than it would have received if the act of 1891 had never been passed. For carrying this mail last year the American Line received $660,000. If it had carried mail under the act of 1872, as the Pacific Mail does, the bill to this Government would have been $700,000, for that was the full amount of sea and inland postage. In other words, the American Line received $40,000 less than they would otherwise have received if the alleged bonanza had never been given them.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Oh, I can not yield now. I make that statement and the other side makes another statement. Now, which is correct? I hear statements made about Chinese crews which are incorrect; I hear statements made about crews shipped in foreign countries which are incorrect; I hear statements made about the nationality of our crews which are incorrect. I say the statements are not correct; other men say that the statements are correct. Now, let a commission get to work to ascertain the facts and frame an issue, so that they can say, "We Democrats and Republicans agree that such and such are the facts." Then we can proceed to discuss what shall be the proper remedy.

Now, sir, the minority announce their intention of moving to recommit this bill with instructions that the committee report a measure providing for discriminative duties. I do not know what they mean by that. I know well enough what discriminative duties are as ordinarily understood. A policy of discriminative duties means that we shall charge one rate of duty on goods brought here in American bottoms and another rate of duty on goods brought here in foreign bottoms. I am by no means sure that there is not a great deal of helpfulness in that suggestion of the minority. But, before we recommit the bill, I want to know whether the proposition is to reduce the present rates of customs duties on goods brought in American bottoms, as the gentleman from Mississippi said, or whether the minority intends us to return to the ways of our fathers, which they tell us were such a great success between 1789 and 1825. If they intend to revert to that method, they must abandon their scheme for the reduction of import duties on goods brought in American bottoms. The fathers maintained the full schedule on goods brought in American bottoms, charging an additional rate on goods brought in foreign bottoms.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not true that at that time the tariff rates were infinitely less than the tariff rates are now? That is a question of fact.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think that probably they were. But I do not know how that matter affects the present question. There can be no doubt whatever that the discriminative duties, or, perhaps, rather the discriminative tonnage taxes between 1789 and 1825, were very successful; but except during five years of that period the system was not the system recommended by the minority—a system of reduction from the schedule rates. For all those years, except five, an addition to the schedule rates was charged upon goods brought here in foreign bottoms.

Mr. LUCKING. Is it not true that the five years which the gentleman excepts was the period during which the commercial marine flourished and was built up the most—from 1789 to 1794?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. My impression is that it did not flourish to the extent that the gentleman would intimate; but it did flourish quite as much during that period, comparatively speaking, as during any other. There was an upward trend. But the reason why the system was changed was not what the gentleman would intimate. It was changed for entirely other reasons than those concerning the merchant marine. It was changed on account of the nature of our industries and their prosperity at that time.

Mr. LUCKING. Was it not because of a desire to raise more duties at that time? Was not the tariff very low?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. If the gentleman so informs me, I will yield to his superior knowledge. I can not tell what all the motives were in 1794.

Probably most of the Members of the House have heard over and over again that there are some twenty to twenty-five treaties that will have to be abrogated before we can establish a system of discriminating duties. I do not mean to say that it would not be wise to abrogate those treaties; but before we do so let us have a commission to examine the provisions of those treaties; let us decide whether it is practicable to abolish all those treaties, most of them requiring for their abrogation a year's notice. Most of them, if abrogated at all, must be abrogated in their entirety, and not with reference to particular clauses.

Let us have a commission to look into the question and ascertain the facts. Let them decide whether it is advisable to abrogate those treaties; because if Great Britain, for instance, or some other nation thinks that the abrogation of a given commercial treaty is going to help our merchant marine, I believe we shall experience considerable difficulty in the speedy construction of new treaties to take the place of the old ones. I do not assume that that is an insuperable objection. I simply say that I should be glad to have a commission to look into the matter.

Mr. BENNY. How old are those treaties?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will wait till I finish my remarks, I shall be glad to hand him the report on that subject made by ex-Senator Edmunds. The treaties are of all ages.

Mr. BENNY. Were most of them made before or since 1896?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I am unable at this moment to say. I can easily explain the origin of those treaties. They were treaties calling for reciprocal action on our part. Our legislation from 1815 down to 1840 sought to take care of this very question.

Mr. Speaker, as I have only one minute more, I want to say a word to those persons who say that this matter can be best handled by Congress. I want to call their attention to the fact that it never has been properly handled by Congress. Committees of the House and committees of the Senate have sat on particular bills. They have had ex parte statements, but no one to check the facts. They have had no method of comparing notes, and each committee has had a vast number of other matters under consideration. Men's minds invariably get facts confused when they are considering a large number of different measures. The proposition made to you in this bill to-day is for nothing more nor less than a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress to consider this question of the merchant marine, and to consider nothing else. It is especially desirous for them to get at the true facts, because even after we have got the facts we have still the remedy to prescribe. [Applause.]

APPENDIX A.

WAGES OF CREWS.

The following is reprinted from Senate Document No. 60, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session. The figures given are for the monthly pay roll of a "tramp" steamer of 4,000 gross tons, capable of developing a speed of 10 knots an hour:

COMPARATIVE WAGES OF CREWS IN 1898.

The rates of wages paid at American and foreign ports can be ascertained without difficulty, as maritime nations require seamen's contracts for labor to be made out in the presence of government officers, by whom they are filed. The salary of the master, however, is a matter of private agreement and can not thus be officially determined. Certain bonuses frequently enter into it, and occasionally he is under contract for a long period or is a part owner of the vessel. When stewards are employed fees are a factor, and boys are sometimes shipped virtually for their keep and instruction, with little or no pay. Following is a statement of the monthly pay roll of a vessel of the kind under consideration, engaged in trans-Atlantic trade at American, British, German, and French rates of wages. Norwegian rates have not been ascertained precisely, but they are about equal to the German rates:

Comparative wages of crews.

Crew.	American.	British.	German.	French.

APPENDIX C.

COMPARATIVE COST OF SHIPBUILDING (1899).

[Reprinted from Senate Document No. 60, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session.]

The price of a steel steamship of 4,000 gross tons and about 11 knots speed, for the transoceanic freight trade, is now about $237,000 in the United States and $238,000 in Great Britain. No steamship of this description has been built in the United States for that sum or any other sum; but several firms can be found to undertake the work for that amount or a slightly larger sum. Numerous British vessels of this description have been built for less than the amount named, but in the present pressure of work in British yards, and with the machinery which would be accepted by an American owner, the figure named is reasonable. This price is distributed among the following items, the builders' profit entering, of course, into each:

	American.	British.
Hull:
Labor	$124,000	$74,000
Plates, angles, beams, rivets, etc	57,000	68,000
Anchors, rigging, cement, paints, sails, chains, and general outfit	35,000	22,000
Machinery:
Labor	41,000	25,000
Material	40,000	39,000
Total	297,000	238,000

The prices for the materials are for the materials laid down in the shipyard, and the labor cost included covers the labor in the shipyard in putting the materials together and also cost of plans and of general superintendence. It has not been feasible to ascertain the cost of similar construction in Germany, but though wages are lower than in Great Britain, the cost of construction is higher. German shipbuilders are now engaged in endeavoring to induce the Government to reduce freights on shipbuilding materials on the Government railroads, in order to compete on better terms with Great Britain.

Mr. LUCKING. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BREAZEALE].

Mr. BREAZEALE. Mr. Speaker, availing myself of the latitude of debate allowed on the pending bill, I desire to discuss a bill reported from the Agricultural Committee, now on the House Calendar, and which its friends sincerely hope will be called up for consideration by the House before this Congress adjourns.

Primarily I want to say that however anxious I am to return to my home, however much my political interests will be promoted by my early return, I would willingly and cheerfully remain here in Washington the remainder of the summer if by doing so the bill I refer to could be enacted into law.

Among the many meritorious bills introduced in this House, which are either dead in committee rooms or languishing in a paralytic condition on the Calendar, there is not one more important than H. R. 14098, introduced by Mr. ADAMS of Wisconsin, and reported favorably by the Agricultural Committee of the House on March 24.

This measure has in every detail of its provisions received the most careful and searching inquiry and investigation by the committee. Its consideration by the committee provoked thorough and careful analysis, with the result that it received practically the unanimous vote of the committee.

Considering the vast and overwhelming importance of the agricultural interests of the nation it has been to me a matter of the deepest astonishment to find the small, I might with propriety say the infinitesimal, consideration it has received at the hands of the nation's lawmakers.

The total amount appropriated by the present Congress for the Agricultural Department at Washington for the present year is only $6,000,000 in round numbers. A beggarly sum when the magnitude of the interests is considered.

The primal wealth of the nation is the farm.

Agriculture is the mud sill of the industrial and social fabric; the foundation upon which the whole superstructure of the nation's wealth and prosperity rests.

Commercial and manufacturing welfare depend entirely upon the success and prosperity of the farmer.

Crop failures produce widespread bankruptcy in all branches of commerce and industry, and are followed by panic and ruin.

It is the duty of Congress to encourage and foster this great interest, to look after the welfare of the farmer, to assist and encourage him, not along paternal lines, but within the just limits of the Constitution and by appropriations which will tend more directly to his immediate benefit.

The bill H. R. 14098, to provide for an increased annual appropriation for agricultural experiment stations, will in my judgment accomplish this object.

It has been but a few years since Congress inaugurated the policy of assisting the State experiment stations.

In 1887 Congress passed what is known as the "Hatch Act," which appropriated $15,000 annually to each State and Territory for the purpose of establishing therein agricultural stations. That was seventeen years ago. This amount has not been increased by Congress during that time.

The object of experiment stations and the laws governing them require original research or verifying experiments on the physiology of plants and animals; the diseases to which they are severally subject, with the remedies for the same; the chemical composition of useful plants at their different stages of growth; the value of rotative cropping; the analysis of soils and water; the composition of manures; the value of various grasses and forage plants; the composition and digestibility of foods for domestic animals; the scientific and economic questions involved in the production of butter and cheese, and such other researches as might bear directly on the agricultural industry of the United States.

Let me say a word of praise and commendation to the farseeing statesmanship of the patriotic Missourian who conceived the idea and induced Congress to enact the law that bears his name.

Under its wise provisions during the seventeen years of its life countless thousands of dollars have been saved to the American farmer.

The work of these experiment stations has been of incalculable benefit to the farmer of the nation. They have stimulated and developed the agricultural interest of the United States to a marvelous extent. They have eliminated more errors from farm practices and have added more to the profits and comforts of farm life than any other single agency. By the dissemination of bulletins and farming literature they have contributed in a wonderful degree to the agricultural education of the country, and in their great practical benefits are circumscribed only by the meager support accorded by the Government.

The sum in the aggregate appropriated by the Hatch bill has been more than repaid in dollars and cents saved by the farmers of the country in the work of the experimental stations in exposing the fallacy of feeding cooked food to stock and domestic animals. Millions of dollars were invested in appliances for this purpose. Several State experiment stations made exhaustive tests in feeding experiments to determine whether or not this practice was profitable. It was clearly proved it did not pay, and to-day there is scarcely a farmer who does not save this expense.

So, too, in the improved development of new varieties of wheat and in the selection and breeding of corn, whereby a larger proportion of protein is infused in the grain, the Minnesota and Illinois stations have saved a world of money to the individual farmer.

The Louisiana experiment station, through its fertilization tests, has nearly driven useless and fraudulent fertilizers out of the market, thus saving by this act alone thousands of dollars to the farmers of that State.

I might easily multiply these citations a thousand fold, but it is not necessary. These alone demonstrate that the experiment stations have saved more money to the farmers of the United States than their total cost since their original establishment.

In the practical object lessons along every line of agricultural industry the experiment stations have been a boon to the poor farmer.

The man enjoying sufficient wealth can engage in experimentation on his own account, but the poor man is denied this costly pleasure. His poverty prevents his purchasing rich and fertile lands; he is compelled to contentment with inferior, poor, and sometimes sterile soil. To know how to improve that soil, the character and kind of fertilizer best adapted to it, the most improved and scientific method of cultivation and its adaptability to distinctive crops, and a thousand and one other things, assist him to a wonderful extent in "earning his daily bread in the sweat of his face."

For the poor farmer, and in his name particularly, I appeal and ask the consideration and passage of the Adams bill.

This bill appropriates $5,000 the first year, and $2,000 annually in addition thereto each year until the limit of $15,000 each year is reached, in addition to the present appropriation for experiment stations in the States and Territories of the Union.

The total amount carried for the first year in the bill is the beggarly sum of $240,000.

This money can not, under the provisions of the bill, be used other than for agricultural purposes. To meet a criticism based upon this ground, I suggested, and there was adopted by the committee, an amendment to the bill that permits 5 per cent only of the sum appropriated to be used under any pretense whatever for the "purchase, erection, preservation, or repair of any building or buildings, or to the purchase or rental of land, or to the payment of the salary of any official or instructor."

Ninety-five per cent of the appropriation, or practically the whole of it, is to be used and "applied only to paying the necessary expenses of conducting original researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States, having due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States and Territories."

If it be urged that the several States should increase their respective appropriations for experiment stations, I answer that perhaps this criticism is just as regards some of the States, but unjust as regards others.

I have been kindly furnished by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] with a partial list of State appropriations in aid to State experiment stations. It shows the following annual appropriations:

State aid to experiment stations, 1903.

1. New York	$87,000
2. Illinois	85,000
3. Minnesota	42,000
4. Missouri	26,000
5. Louisiana	23,000
6. Ohio	21,000
7. New Jersey	20,000
8. Connecticut	17,000
9. Wisconsin	15,000
10. Texas	15,000
11. California	12,000
12. Massachusetts	11,000
13. Iowa	10,000

Iowa, the greatest agricultural State in the Union, stands thirteenth in the list of those receiving State aid for experimental work along the lines of agriculture.

I am pleased to call your attention to the position occupied by my State, Louisiana. She comes fifth on the list, and annually gives in aid of this great work a little more than one-fourth of the amount given by the great States of New York and Illinois; more than one-half of the amount given by the rich State of Minnesota, and only $3,000 less than the rich and powerful State of Missouri.

It shows the progressive spirit of the State and is a monument to the public spirit and advanced ideas of the people of Louisiana.

Compared in population and wealth to New York, Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri, the above table easily places Louisiana at the very head of the list and stamps her as by long odds the most progressive State in the Union, having a full appreciation of the far-reaching effect and importance of the experiment station on the agricultural interest of the State.

Mr. Speaker, the insignificant and paltry amount carried by this bill can not affect the Republican party in the approaching Presidential election.

I am aware that your policy is to limit appropriations to the minimum and to adjourn Congress as soon as possible. But do you and the Republican majority here consider that you have only a few days ago appropriated $100,000,000 for an increased Navy and $75,000,000 for the War Department, and that we only ask a few thousand dollars for the farming interest of the nation? Do you fully appreciate the enormous significance of these figures?

Mind, I am making no criticism of the naval and war appropriations. I believe in a strong and powerful navy. But I do submit, sir, that the farmers of the country pay the greater portion of the taxes of the nation, and thus make it possible to establish and maintain a great navy, and when they ask for a small pittance that will encourage and aid them; that will make the burden of life a little more bearable; that will lighten a little the almost overwhelming burden of taxation, I do submit their voice should be heard, their appeal granted. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for permission to extend and amplify my remarks and to include various reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that that consent has already been given by the House.

Mr. LUCKING. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON].

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Speaker, the subject of Federal taxation by means of duties on imports or tariff taxation has been discussed so often and so ably in this country that nothing new can be said except as tariff laws from time to time bear especially hard on some particular class of citizens, and it would seem that long ere this the matter of Federal taxation should have been permanently settled. Indeed, Republicans tell us that "protection is the settled policy of this Government." I deny it. We are declared to be a "free government." I insist that you can not finally settle anything in a government like ours that is not just in its make-up to all classes of our people.

The wage-earner of every class and in every part of our country is entitled to an even chance in the race of life. The professional man, the merchant, the farmer, the miner, and the day laborer are entitled to have the burdens of Federal taxation fairly distributed. This can not be done under a system that enables the manufacturer to sell his finished product to foreign consumers cheaper than he does to the home market.

Strip this tariff question of all party bias, take away from it the party coloring which is given it by support of a great party that profits by catering to the tariff barons, and the system can not sustain itself with a third of the American people. Hear for a moment: Reapers, mowers, plows, cultivators, trace chains, steel rails, wagons, sewing machines, typewriters, coarse cutlery, picks, shovels, nails, axes, wire, cotton goods, woolens, shoes, and harness manufactured in this country are shipped out of the country and sold in foreign markets from 20 to 35 per cent cheaper than the same articles are sold to the American consumer.

The Republican reply to this showing of facts is that "the tariff law that permits the manufacturers to thus discriminate against the American consumer gives employment to multiplied thousands of laborers who buy their living of those who raise cotton, corn, wheat, cattle, and other products of the farm and garden, thus benefiting the farmer and stock raiser as well as the manufacturer." But the surplus products of the farm, pasture, and plantation have to be sold in foreign markets.

If the American producer were dependent on the American market alone for the sale of what he raises, the cotton, tobacco, wheat, corn, stock, and meat markets would be paralyzed. But the Republican answer to this is that "we have also the foreign market for our surplus products." There is a steadily growing class of public men in England, led by Chamberlain and backed up by manufacturers, who insist on putting on our cotton, tobacco, wheat, flour, beef, mutton, pork, etc., a retaliatory tariff. Two-thirds of our export farm sales go to England.

The tariff laws of most other countries discriminate against the United States. If Great Britain, goaded to desperation by our unwise tax laws that make us want to sell her everything and buy of her nothing, puts a tariff of 35 per cent on our surplus products we will face disaster. If I were more of a partisan than a patriot, I could rejoice in the success of Chamberlain's scheme of protection for his country. Then the farmer and cotton planter and stock raiser here would know where he was hurt. Then the partisan Republican producer of corn, wheat, beef, mutton, and pork in Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas would have his eyes opened to the "confidence game" that is being played on him.

But, sir, it would be a costly lesson to our people, and I hope it may be avoided by a return to right principles by the American Congress and a fair revision of the Dingley law. The threadbare Republican excuse for keeping up these exorbitant rates is that "we must keep our scale o wages above what is paid in Europe." We have the most intelligent and best skilled mechanics in the United States that can be found in the world; we have the most improved and up-to-date machinery on earth; we have a greater quantity and variety of raw material than any other government; we have greater inventive genius among our mechanics and other laborers than all the world combined.

The insistence of the Republicans that it is the protection of the wage-earners that they are looking after is false and fraudulent. Do you dare tell us that with a tariff reduced to a revenue basis the shoemakers of Brockton, Lynn, and Haverhill, Mass., of St. Louis and Cincinnati can not compete with foreigners and yet pay as good wages as now and make as good profits?

Do you think, my Republican friends, that you can forever fool the people of these United States into the belief that English manufacturers can come to this country, buy our cotton, transport it back to England, manufacture it into cloth in the mills of Manchester, reship the finished cotton product to this country, pay a revenue tariff of, say, 25 per cent ad valorem, and then undersell the American production? With all the skill and inventive genius of our people, with all the good sense of all our citizens, I don't believe you can keep up this deception forever.

Let our New England neighbors all do as many of them have done—move your machinery and spindles into the cotton fields where the power is free, the raw material on the ground, a mild climate for the operatives—and you can beat our English cousins without any tariff. But we do not propose to throw down all barriers and open our country to "free trade." We are asked, "What do you Democrats really want?" "What do you believe in, anyway?" "Do you want no tariff?" The intelligent Democrat who has any right to speak for his party will tell you that our party does not desire to destroy any legitimate and non-monopolistic American industry.

We know, sir, that under the several tariffs—act of 1883, the McKinley law, the Wilson law, and the so-called "Dingley Act"—large sums of capital have been invested in manufactures, and we know that when the tariff law is to be revised, no matter if the capitalist knew it was wrong, yet we, as legislators, must have regard for investments made in view of the protective rates. We do not desire to destroy American capital or American labor. We honestly and earnestly believe there should be a revision of the present tariff, but we believe we must have regard for all interests, manufacturing interests as well as the interests of the farmer, planter, and general consumer.

But, sir, I may be pardoned just here in calling attention to the wise words of an eminent American. Mr. Carlisle said in March, 1882, that—

> The unskilled and unpretending laborer who guides the plow and gathers the harvest is as much entitled to the protection of the law and to the encouragement of the Government as the scientific artisan who has mastered all the mysteries of his craft. Each one of the busy millions who helps to create and distribute the varied products of this wonderful land of ours has an undoubted right to demand an equal participation in all the advantages conferred by the laws of his country, and I repudiate every definition of American industry or American labor which excludes a single honest and useful occupation.

However much I may have disagreed with Mr. Carlisle in his position on other questions, I am willing to stand on his definition of American labor and its rights.

But, sir, we are confronted by the Republican figure maker and spellbinder with the statement that a panic was forced on us by the Wilson-Gorman tariff act of 1894; that values were destroyed, all products of the farm and field, mine and workshop went to pieces under that law. I deny it. I challenge the Republican tariff defenders to "make good" this declaration. I insist that the plain truth is that the American tariff does not control the price of the surplus products of our country.

I declare that the price of wheat, cotton, beef, pork, lard, hams, flour, zinc, and fruit is settled in the foreign markets of the world, where we must sell our surplus products.

The lowest price that zinc has brought in thirty years was the period between October, 1892, and July, 1894. In this time zinc fell to $13.62 per ton; wheat went down to 34 cents per bushel in the same time, and yet we had in every day of this period the much-vaunted "McKinley tariff."

The hard times set in during the fall of 1890 and grew worse from month to month, and finally culminated in the panic of 1893, and continued until wheat and beef began to rise and went up to a living price prior to the election of Mr. McKinley in 1896, and this was owing partially to exhaustion of the visible supply and still more to the famine in India and the cattle plague of South America.

The Republicans falsely charge that the financial woes of our country came about because of the Wilson-Gorman "free-trade law" of August, 1894. Free trade, indeed! This law was a high protective law, the highest we had then ever had except the McKinley law, which it repealed.

The Republican party leaders and managers demand recognition for every good thing and deny responsibility for every evil that comes to us as a people. This party takes credit for sunshine and rain, for early spring and late frosts; it insists on the prodigalities of nature being declared the result of its legislative enactments. This party has learned well at least one lesson taught by the "Plumed Knight," and that is to "claim everything." Sir, you can not legislate a people into prosperity and happiness. The law of supply and demand will inevitably control in what we sell as our surplus.

The so-called "Dingley law," which is the "top rail" of unjust tariff legislation, forces our miners, farmers, stock raisers, and cotton and tobacco planters to sell their surplus in the open (to them unprotected) markets of Europe; and the same iniquitous law compels them to buy the manufactured goods they need in the protected home market, where they are compelled to pay from 25 to 125 per cent more than they would have to pay in the markets where they sell their surplus.

Our forests of pine, oak, gum, and walnut are rapidly going, yet the farmers on the prairies of Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska are asked to "be good;" to stand still and be sheared of $2 per thousand for lumber that they must have, and told with great unction that this "graft" is offset with the protection they get of 25 cents per bushel for wheat and 15 cents per bushel for corn. We sell our surplus of wheat and corn in foreign lands, many millions of bushels of each, in open competition with all the world.

No country on the "footstool" has so much to sell. We sow a greater acreage and get a greater yield; must sell our surplus to Europe; yet we are brazenly told that the farmer is "protected." The wheat tariff affords him no protection, but if he wants a little foreign wheat to sow he pays the 25 cents tariff. These political partners of the ever-fattening lords of the tariff tell us that the farmer's wife must have a protective duty of 5 cents per dozen on eggs; our hens must be protected from the "pauper hens" of Canada; aye, even though "Old Speck" can lay more eggs with less exertion in one season than the "pauper hens" of Canada can in two.

But Republicans demand the retention of this high protective and, in some items, prohibitive tariff for the reason, as they say, we must have the revenue. To that I reply that a little economy practiced in the several Departments of the Government would relieve us fifteen or twenty millions of dollars without crippling the service. Cut down the Army to half its present size and save thirty-five millions more; stop the making of so many new army posts; force the manufacturers to sell us armor plate for our new war ships for less than two prices. All these things would cut down expenses.

Besides, a revision of the tariff to reasonable rates would yield us more revenue than we now get under the Dingley Act. But I am confronted with the statement that I am a bold legislator to demand a revision of the tariff, when I have protected wheat and corn, zinc and lead, flour and beef, hams and lard in the section of country I represent.

I make no mistake when I say the Missouri farmer is not thus caught with chaff. Whatever may be said of his neighbor east, north, and west of him, the Missouri farmer knows, as I know and as you intelligent Republicans know, that there is no foreign competition worth the name that can compete with him in this country in prices of meat, lard, wheat, flour, corn, and meal. The Missouri farmer and stockman knows that a tariff of 2 cents per pound on beef, mutton, pork, and lard, of 25 cents per bushel on wheat, and of 5 cents a pound on poultry—nor, for that matter, 100 per cent on each—is no help to him, because he knows that he is without competition in the American market. Our farmer reads and thinks.

Our miners of zinc also know that our large surplus of zinc ore finds its market in "free-trade" England. They know full well that 1¼ cents a pound on pig zinc affords them no protection when they sell their surplus in Swansea, Wales. They know that ours are the greatest zinc fields in the world, and they know that the European demand for zinc is what controls its price. Our Missouri miners know that 1¼ cents per pound does not keep the price of zinc ore at any level. As I have said, the lowest price reached in recent years was under the McKinley tariff.

I read a statement from Jesse A. Zook, one of the very best informed men in the zinc district, as follows:

Shipments of zinc and lead from the Joplin district in 1903.

	Tons.	Value.
Zinc	234,873	$7,920,525
Lead	28,656	1,550,870

Highest price for zinc since 1897 was $55 per ton in April, 1899. Lowest top price for zinc since 1897 was $23 per ton in January, 1898.

Here is a difference of $32 per ton in the sale price of zinc within a year, and both sales under the Dingley law. A high protective tariff on zinc is "a delusion and a snare."

I quote again from Mr. Zook:

> Highest top price for lead since 1897 was $60.50 per ton in January, 1904. Lowest top price for lead since 1897 was $44 per ton in March, 1898.

Here, sir, is a difference of $16.50 per ton in lead values, all under this Republican tariff of 1897. You may convince the miner that the tariff on lead prevents competition by Mexico, but our miner knows that he pays very dearly for that little protection. Our miner has felt the "lead trust" grind him down by taking advantage of this very tariff to force down the price of his raw ore and the price of labor as well.

The miner knows that as compensation to the protected industries he has to pay for the hammers and sledges, track tools, wedges and crowbars, bolts, picks, and shovels, which he must constantly use in mining, which are taxed at 1¼ cents per pound; the table salt he uses at 12 cents a hundred, and on table sugar over 2 cents per pound. If he is able to build himself an humble home he must "stand by" the tariff to the tune of $2 per thousand feet on lumber, and for nails a cent a pound. When the Missouri miner counts the added cost of living which the Dingley law puts on him; when he considers that the very tariff law that he is asked to worship enables the "lead trust" magnate to crowd down the price of lead ore, he stands by the old Democratic doctrine of a "revenue tariff."

Mr. Speaker, we do not battle for tariff revision because we in Missouri have no pork in the protection barrel, but because we want justice to all classes.

Our great city of St. Louis is the greatest tobacco manufacturing center in the country; very near, if not at the head, of malt-liquor manufacturing; it is rapidly becoming the great center of shoe manufactures. I present some interesting figures in this connection. Harry Wood, a director in the shoe company headed by that splendid Tennessee Democrat, J. C. Roberts, states as follows:

The last census report of 1900 gives the value of the Missouri product of shoes at $11,500,000. Of this amount St. Louis made $8,250,000. Four cities—viz, Brockton, Lynn, Haverhill, and Cincinnati—only led St. Louis. At the present time St. Louis is making $20,000,000 worth annually. There are thirty-eight manufactories of importance in the State. The shoe-manufacturing industry is rapidly shifting to the West. A census of the shoe-manufacturing business of this one city of the West for 1904 will bring before those interested the statement that St. Louis alone has actually made and distributed to the retail merchants more than $30,000,000 worth of shoes.

It is not that we in the great Democratic State of Missouri have no great manufacturing interests that causes us to stand for a revenue tariff, but it is a determination of our people to stand for, indorse, and uphold Thomas Jefferson's immortal words, "Equal and exact justice to all men."

A Republican friend said to me: "Are you fellows never going to be satisfied to let the tariff alone?" I say never, so long as the tariff schedules are made by or under direction of the manufacturers themselves.

"What is the Democratic idea of tariff?" asks the Republican politician. Briefly stated, it is that a "constitutional tariff" levies such a margin or duty on foreign-made goods as to raise sufficient taxes to carry on our Government prudently and economically, and that such a tariff will much more than compensate the American manufacturer for the greater price which should be paid the American over the foreign laborer.

Further, our notion of the tariff is that the lowest average rates should be levied upon those articles which are of absolute necessity and in general use among those who are least able to bear heavy taxes; that in general the article of greatest value, on which most labor has been expended and least in use among the poor people, should bear the highest rates. I, as one Democrat, plant myself on the doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States, as voiced by Justice Miller in 20 Wallace:

To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizen and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes is none the less robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called "taxation."

Justice Marshall said that "the power to tax is the power to destroy;" and we believe that this power should be used for the benefit of all the people and not for a favored few.

The well-informed Democrat believes and our party stands pledged to establish and keep up an equality in taxation. In view of the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has for the time put out of the question an equitable "income tax," we know that we must raise a large amount of the taxes for the use of the Government by means of import duties.

We believe these tax burdens should be lowest on articles of general use. We believe that the extra high protective duties imposed in the McKinley and Dingley tariff bills have given the trusts opportunity to organize against the home consumer, and we believe that part of the tariff prop should be taken from under the trusts.

Havemeyer, the sugar king, on oath stated that "the tariff is the mother of trusts." But Republican orators say that "Cleveland did not proceed against the trusts; Republicans will down the trusts."

Well, you took power more than seven years ago. You have had complete power—the Executive, both branches of Congress, and the court—to sustain you. Where are the broken fragments of the trusts? Where have you Republicans buried the iron, steel, sugar, copper, and leather trusts? Even when the Supreme Court recently upheld the power of Congress to curb trusts and protect the people, the Republican Attorney-General hastened to announce that "the Government is not going to run amuck."

This language from the law officer of the Administration was news to the trusts that they were safe in the hands of this "strenuous" Administration. When some of the protected trusts grumbled and intimated a disposition not to help carry the Republican party through, the "monarch of the steel trust" said: "All is well; I'll see that the campaign fund is kept up."

I am not in favor of enlarging the free list without a corresponding reduction in the tariff on the finished product, and I believe that is the sentiment of our party.

In other and plain, unmistakable words, our party stands for a fair revision of the tariff, such a revision as will not cripple the manufacturer or destroy labor. But we do think that after all these years of "stall feeding" the protected industries have long ago reached the period of which Mr. Clay spoke in the Fourteenth Congress, viz: "That the object of protecting manufacturers was that we might eventually get the articles of necessity made as cheap at home as they could be imported." We think sixty-eight years about long enough to wait.

We are for "fair trade;" and to that end we are for reciprocal trade with Canada and other countries. Periods of prosperity and adversity follow each other. We want to prepare for the adversity that is coming; we want the necessities of life put in reach of all the people against the time when the products of the farm and pasture bring lower prices.

We know that an American tariff does not control the price of wheat, zinc, beef, and cotton in foreign markets where we sell our surplus.

We want the trade of Canada; we want to sell her what we make that she needs and keep her trade on this side of the ocean; we want the benefit of many of her products without paying high tariff rates. We believe that reciprocity is an easy way to reach fairer trade than we now have. Mr. Speaker, the belief is almost universal that the existing tariff law is not fair and just. It is certain that it does not divide either its burdens or its benefits fairly among all the people.

It is true that even the labor employed in the manufacturing enterprises of the country does not get its fair share of the profits arising from the system and is destructive to other interests.

Let us set at rest the assertion of Republican leaders that Democrats are trying to steal up on the "system" with soft words about "revision." There is no doubt about the Democratic position. You passed a wicked high protective tariff law for the benefit of manufacturers and at the expense of two-thirds of the American people.

We know that a great deal of capital has been invested under that law, and we do not desire to destroy such investments; but, by reciprocity treaties and by an intelligent revision, we desire to relieve the consumers without lowering the tariff to the point where there will not be a reasonable return for invested capital after paying the best wages in the world to labor.

Ultimately we desire to see our tariff laws reduced to a revenue basis. Why this position? Because we believe that "the power of taxation can be legitimately employed only for public purposes" and that the "incidental protection" such as constitutional law would give will pay better wages to the American operative than the foreign laborer gets and still leave a handsome profit for the manufacturer; but not large enough to encourage the formation of trusts or extortion of prices to home consumers.

There is no doubt of our purpose, nor is there, in the minds of intelligent legislators, of the Republican purpose. There is a full, though silent, partnership between the protected manufacturers and the Republican party. The leaders of that party legislate for the special benefit of the iron, steel, wool, leather, sugar, and other trusts that are enabled to live by the prohibitive legislation of the party; and the trusts in turn open their coffers and give back to the Republican party a per cent of what they have wrongfully taken from the people by means of the tariff for "campaign purposes."

We are told by an eloquent declaimer at the other end of the Capitol that "if changes are required to bring the tariff law of 1897 into a more perfect relation to the industrial progress of the American people, we propose to make them ourselves whenever, in our judgment, the work can be undertaken without doing more harm than good." And I say that if the people of the United States wait until the greed of the highly protected industries is satisfied, if they wait the good pleasure of the Republican party, the partner of the tariff barons and trust magnates, they will pay these exorbitant rates till "the crack of doom." Artificial inflation of prices by means of tariff is at the expense of the consumer.

It may not be good news to the protectionist. It may be a disagreeable suggestion to the manufacturer who is now charging the American consumer two and three times a fair price for what he buys, but there will always be a "faithful few" to protest. There will always be some to lift a voice for the common people. The Democratic party does not believe in artificial inflation of prices at home at the expense of the consumer, but our great party thinks we should legislate for the whole people. Give every man a fair chance, and that will naturally develop every industry. On this solid ground we plant ourselves to win the battle of 1904.

Mr. LUCKING. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. LUCKING. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker, nominally we have under debate a bill to create a commission of Senators and Representatives to consider means for developing our merchant marine. In fact, however, it is the first step to commit the Republican party irrevocably to the doctrine of ship subsidy. For some reason, best known to the gentlemen in charge of the measure, there has not been the necessary courage to bring before the House and before the country on the eve of a Presidential election the frank declaration that the party is to be committed to the ship-subsidy idea.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Why do you say that this is the first step toward a ship subsidy?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Because the ship subsidy has been for some time a mooted question in the Republican councils, and we all know that nothing has prevented that party from finally taking a firm stand in favor of the ship subsidy except the fear of the people in a popular election. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is not a new or unknown subject. No question in this country has been more frequently gone over in recent years by commissions and by committees than this same subject of subsidizing American shipping interests by heavy annual payments of money from the National Treasury.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Bearing on the gentleman's suggestion as to the policy of the Republican party, is the gentleman aware of the fact that that party, in one of its national platforms, I think eight years ago, declared in favor of discriminating duties, exactly what you people suggest now in your minority views?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; your party declared for that in 1896, and your President, Mr. McKinley, in his letter of acceptance, made a declaration in favor of helping American ships, not by subsidies, but by discriminating duties. Your party, however, has forsaken that plan, and since then the great Republican leaders have been before this country and before Congress demanding a ship subsidy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Your policy has changed on that subject within a few years, just as your policy has changed on the subject of reciprocity, which President McKinley advocated and which present-day Republicans repudiate.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Has the party ever changed its declaration on discriminating duties to your knowledge?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It has not made a declaration since that. It was silent in the campaign of 1900.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I thought not.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER. Is it not also commonly believed and generally understood that subsequent to this declaration to which the gentleman from Maine refers the Republican party, being short of funds for the Congressional campaign of 1898, went to the ship-subsidy hunters, the ship-subsidy beggars, collected a corruption fund of four or five hundred thousand dollars, and that this bill is but a step toward their repayment? [Great laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, in further reply to the question of the gentleman from Maine, I desire to put to him a question. If the Republican party has not changed its policy since that utterance in favor of discriminating duties, why has the Republican majority of this committee in charge of this bill not joined with the Democratic minority of the committee in reporting that programme at this time? [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] In the platform of 1896 the Republican party declared in favor of reducing the tariff on goods brought to America in American ships, as follows:

> We favor restoring the early American policy of discriminating duties for the upbuilding of our merchant marine and the protection of our shipping in the foreign carrying trade, so that American ships may regain the carrying of our foreign commerce.

Mr. McKinley, in his letter of acceptance, said:

> The policy of discriminating duties which prevailed in the early days of our history should be again promptly adopted by Congress and vigorously supported until our prestige and supremacy on the seas are fully attained.

Why was that programme not carried out? Did the tariff-protected trusts object? Why was the declaration not at least repeated in the platform of 1900? Was it because the project of a ship subsidy was already being considered and urged by interested parties? They were already at work, and they made rapid headway.

The significant fact is that the late Senator Marcus A. Hanna, of Ohio the most representative Republican of the present generation, fathered the ship-subsidy project. He represented the dominant element of his party. He personified the faults as well as the virtues of his party. He stood for the liberal use of money in making politics and for the liberal use of politics in making money. This Republican leader, representing the very spirit of modern-day Republicanism, forced through the Senate of the United States in the last Congress as a Republican party measure a ship-subsidy bill. That fact certainly discloses what is the real purpose of the Republican leaders—the real policy of the Republican party. The present bill is simply a cloak to hide the ultimate plan—a makeshift to tide over the election. It is a device to satisfy the shipping interests that the subsidy is to be voted at the next session provided that they in this campaign help the Republican managers. It is a first step toward a subsidy so taken as not to alarm the people who are to be taxed to pay it. But, Mr. Speaker, we have further evidence that the ultimate purpose of the Republican leaders is to support a ship-subsidy policy after the campaign is over.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall have to refuse, as I have such limited time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska prefers not to yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker, if further proof were needed, we have corroborative evidence in the fact that the Republican party is a subsidy party. It provides subsidies of the people's money for many favored interests. It believes in curing all ills by taxation. Its panacea for every national complaint is a bonus, a subsidy, a tariff, or some other form of bounty from taxes on the people for the pockets of the favored class.

What is the present high protective tariff but an enormous subsidy for the protected trusts of the country? Does it not legislate money out of the pockets of the people and into the swollen treasuries of these favored concerns? In return for this vast subsidy these favored interests yield up to campaign managers of the Republican party the sinews of war and those managers loudly insist that the party shall "stand pat" for that subsidy.

The same party, Mr. Speaker, gives subsidies to railroads. It has also bestowed enormous subsidies on favored banks. For several years the Secretary of the Treasury has kept on deposit in a few hundred national banks about $160,000,000. These banks pay absolutely no interest for the use of this giant deposit. What is the free use of that money if it is not a subsidy to those banks? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Of that vast sum over $40,000,000 is kept in New York, and one favored bank has over twelve millions of it.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit one question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Who gave a subsidy to the southern railroads of this country?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was given by the Republican House of Representatives. The party in control is responsible for the grant. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. But the Democratic party joined them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have answered your question, sir. And, Mr. Speaker, who can defend the subsidy policy which leads this Administration to give to a few hundred national banks of this country the free use of $160,000,000? The use of that money is worth at least 3 per cent. It remains in those favored banks day after day and month after month, as we can see by the daily and monthly reports we get from the Treasury. It is loaned out by those banks, and represents in value a subsidy to them of not less than $5,000,000 a year. Is it any wonder that those banks believe in "standing pat?" Take, for instance, one of the great banks in New York City with a constant average deposit of over $12,000,000 of this money. Say it is worth to that bank only 3 per cent. That amounts to half a million dollars in a year. Such a great free gift or subsidy naturally leads the owners of that bank to hope that the policy of the Republican party in support of subsidies will continue. They believe in "standing pat." As that bank's subsidy amounts to over a thousand dollars a day, its owners must make generous campaign contributions, and they do.

Mr. Speaker, that there is a direct connection between these Government deposits and campaign contributions to the Republican party is notorious, but often not easily proven. The following letter, however, written by an officer of one of the largest New York banks to the Secretary of the Treasury in 1897, after the exciting campaign of 1896, reveals the system and proves the practice in one case at least:

THE NATIONAL CITY BANK OF NEW YORK,
New York, June 5, 1897.

MY DEAR MR. GAGE: The National City Bank of this city, of which I recently became vice-president through the consolidation of the Third National with it, is one of the banks designated as a United States depository, and I write to request that in any changes which may be made under the Administration we may not be disturbed in this respect.

We should like to remain a United States depository as at present. Of course the bank is very strong, and if you will take the pains to look at our list of directors you will see that we also have very great political claims in view of what was done during the canvass last year.

If not presuming too much, we would be greatly obliged for a suggestion from you as to the amount of bonds which it would be good judgment for us to acquire at the present time, this move on our part being quite as much in the public interest (in the prevention of any money stringency) as it is in our own interest as bankers.

It is apparent that the amount of money received from the Treasury from the sale of this property will considerably exceed the amount of currency 6's maturing on January 1 next, and it is in the hope that a considerable portion of these funds will be left with the banks for a sufficient length of time to afford a reasonable profit that we undertake the expense of procuring the necessary bonds to qualify us as a depository.

A. B. HEPBURN, Vice-President.

HON. LYMAN J. GAGE,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Speaker, there are other more recent events which prove that the Republican policy is one of subsidizing favored interests at the general expense of the people. At this present session the Republican majority of this House forced through a bill which provides that after a certain date American ships shall have the monopoly of business between the United States and the Philippine Islands. That means higher ocean freights. It is a tax on commerce for the benefit of those shipping interests to which the monopoly is given. It is a bounty or subsidy to them.

And again, later in the same session, a bill was forced through this House as a party measure granting a subsidy to such capitalists as construct railroads in the Philippine Islands. The subsidy is in the form of a guaranty of 5 per cent net yearly dividends for thirty years on an investment of $30,000,000. If the roads do not pay a dividend from their earnings, the people of the Philippine Islands must pay them by taxation. Their taxation is already higher than it was under Spanish rule, as I forced the chairman of the committee in charge of that bill to admit on the floor of the House when the bill was under discussion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this subsidy record of the Republican party makes the ship subsidy a natural and appropriate climax. The present bill, on its face, merely provides a commission to investigate and report. That is a mere cloak to hide the subsidy programme till the fall election is passed. If it were the honest purpose of the Republican leaders to establish commissions for the investigation of important subjects upon which valuable information ought to be had in the interests of the people, why is it that they do not appoint a commission, for instance, to investigate the great question of postal savings banks for the people? [Applause.]

Almost every civilized nation of the world except ours has a system of government savings banks. Everybody knows that the poor people of this land do not have the confidence in private savings banks which they should have. Our savings-bank system is a business peril in time of any distress, because the depositors of those banks are the first to rush for their money, and those banks when pressed are the first to embarrass the banking world. If these banks were postal savings banks, there would be no such don t. no such anxiety, no such alarm at such a time.

The poor man has little inducement to save money and little opportunity to invest it. If there were an absolutely safe opportunity, such as a postal savings bank would provide, there would be no money hidden away in stockings and old teapots in times of financial alarm. Just now is the very best time to investigate this subject by a Congressional commission if the party in power desires to serve the people. It would be particularly opportune to establish a system of postal savings banks now that the United States is called upon to use a vast sum of money in a great enterprise—the Panama Canal.

Why is not this the proper time to establish a system of postal savings banks, and use the deposits there made on interest for carrying on this gigantic enterprise, instead of selling bonds to the favored banks of the country that may hunger for them as a tempting investment?

Again, Mr. Speaker, we are widely divided in this country on the subject of the tariff; not simply the two parties, but in the Republican party itself there is a wide division of sentiment on the subject of revision of the tariff. Why not have a commission to investigate the tariff question if investigation of vital questions is really desired?

In the great agricultural West, one of whose representatives I have the honor to be, there is a strong and growing sentiment that we have been taxed too long and too heavily for the benefit of the favored manufacturing interests located hundreds of miles away. This feeling is not confined to Democrats. It is growing among western Republicans. Take, for instance, Nebraska and her neighbors, Kansas, Iowa, and Minnesota.

In area these four States equal in size the same number of European nations. They contain at present only a few millions of people, but are destined in the future to be peopled by tens of millions, and they are capable of supporting to the square mile as dense a population as any Eastern State. In this vast region agriculture has been and must long continue to be the chief source of wealth and development.

To the millions of people in this western empire composed of these four States the protective tariff brings no immediate benefit and never has. No manufacturing enterprises which they own fear foreign competition or require protection. Such industries as have grown up in those States are founded on natural rather than on man-made laws. What is true of western manufactures is true of western commerce and western agriculture. Both have grown without ever having had any support from the protective tariff.

Agriculture came first to develop the country. Commerce followed to establish the distributing centers, and in the shadow of commerce manufacturing enterprises are being built up. The 7,000,000 people who inhabit these four States have fought the battle of life without national aid. They have converted millions of acres of wild lands into fruitful farms. They have bridged rivers, drained swamps, and irrigated arid lands. They have dotted the country with schoolhouses and churches and converted a dreary wilderness into a smiling landscape. Vil ages have become towns, towns have grown into cities, and in a number of cases they have become great metropolitan centers. The vast development of this agricultural region has been of enormous benefit to this nation and to the world. It has helped to feed the world and added vastly to the permanent resources and wealth of the United States. It is a gain taken from nature in natural ways for the benefit of man. Since the high tariff of 1890 and the prohibitive tariff of 1897 this development has been greatly checked.

All of this great conquest, all of this spread of civilization has been accomplished without artificial means, without the benefit of protective tariffs, but in spite of them. No other part of the country has been taxed to help the West in her struggle. On the other hand, during most of the two generations which have elapsed since the subjugation of the wilderness began, the laws of the United States have borne heavily on the West. Agriculture has achieved a triumph, but it has been in the face of great odds. It has not only had to subdue the wilderness, but to do so while carrying a burden for the benefit of favored eastern manufacturers. It has, while winning its own success, been compelled by tariff laws to help the manufacturing interests win theirs. Yet western agriculture has submitted to this. It is hardly possible anywhere in the Union to find four States that have more uniformly voted election after election for the so-called "protective tariff" than have Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, and Minnesota.

It seems almost remarkable that States so purely agricultural as those I have indicated should have so long accepted a scheme of taxation which has so clearly imposed a burden on agriculture for the benefit of favored industrial enterprises located in remote States. Farmers, however, have consented in the past to pay more for plows, cultivators, harvesters, and all kinds of farm machinery in order that implement factories might prosper. They have consented to pay more for hundreds of articles made in America than they could be imported for. They have seen with acquiescence the cost of their houses and barns greatly increase in order that by tariff our lumber intesests might be made rich. They have been good-natured in paying extra prices for clothing, glass, nails, chemicals, and many other necessary articles. They have accepted all this in addition to other expenses of living arising from the tariff, because they have been deluded into a belief in three ancient doctrines of protection:

First, that the development of the various industries which manufactured these articles would build up a home market for farm products which would be preferable to a foreign market.

Second, that protection would only render it possible for manufacturers to compete with foreigners while paying American wages and earning a reasonable profit.

Third, that competition between American manufacturers would result in holding prices of their goods down to a reasonable basis, allowing necessary cost and a fair profit.

Thus, even though the protected interests and favored enterprises were in remote States, the western farmer, the western townsman, and the western politician have followed party leaders of the East and voted the Republican ticket. Such has been the past. For some time, however, a change has been pending. The western voter has seen a new light. His eyes have been gradually opening, and he now beholds not the theories of the Republican tariffs, but their effects.

He has seen a great enrichment of the protected manufacturing interests of the country, but the idea of a home market for products of American farmers is no nearer realization than before. We have taxed agriculture and increased the cost of living for all the people, and we have built up eastern factories; but our farmers are still compelled to find a market for their products abroad. Of our export trade, 63 per cent of it is composed of the products of the farm. These products are sold in competition with all the world. After helping the manufacturing interests to secure by a tariff the monopoly of the home market in America, free from competition, the farmer still finds that he must sell his products in the open markets of Europe in competition with the world. All that he has paid in increased cost of living has gone for naught. The home market has not materialized. He is compelled now, after many years of protection and taxation, to sell as large a portion of his products abroad as formerly.

The present Dingley Act was passed in 1897—seven years ago. In that year 27 per cent of American wheat and flour was exported. Still a larger per cent was exported last year. If we compare exports for seven years before the Dingley tariff with seven years under that tariff, we find that we are now sending abroad just about as large a per cent of our farm produce as before. The western farmer, therefore, has found that the high tariff has not enabled him to escape the necessity of sending his products abroad to market. This discovery ends the delusion about the home market for his products.

Another discovery made by the West is that the tariff schedules of the Dingley law have gone far beyond the point of putting American manufacturers in a position to compete with foreign factories. It had been urged that the schedules were framed with the idea of making up the difference between the natural cost of manufacture in Europe and America. It has now been discovered that the tariff is several times greater than the difference in cost of production. Competition, instead of having been equalized, has been abolished. Exclusion has been accomplished.

No sooner had this exclusion been well achieved by the passage of the Dingley law of 1897 than the tariff-protected interests proceeded boldly to stifle competition at home. Protected from foreign competition by the tariff, it was a natural proceeding to guard against competition at home. The device to achieve this purpose was the trust. The domination of the trust has blasted the hope that the tariff-protected manufacturers would so compete with each other as to hold prices down to a fair level. The effect of the trust control has been an enormous increase in the cost of living, cost of building, and cost of development in the West. It has produced a profound impression on the western mind. Thousands upon thousands of the most intelligent Republicans in the West have had their faith in party practices, if not in party doctrines, shattered. Party discipline, party pride, and party spirit may keep them in line for a time, but they can not be much longer persuaded to "stand pat." They see the falsity of the home-market idea for western products. They see that monopoly and not competition has been the outcome of the present policy. They see that the advent of the trust has made the present tariff simply an opportunity for spoliation.

These Western States were settled largely by Northerners. The aftermath of the war made them naturally Republican. They have remained so far beyond the natural period. But by the inevitable laws of self-interest they will either change or their influence will make itself felt in changing the "stand-pat" policy of the Republican party. Already the "Iowa idea" has found expression. A tariff which shelters trusts is obnoxious to Iowa Republicans. In Minnesota Canadian reciprocity is becoming a party issue. In Kansas and Nebraska the time is almost ripe for a newer generation of Republicans to repudiate the stand-patters and join the tariff reformers.

Why not select a commission to investigate and report on a revised tariff, I repeat? It must come some time. If the commission plan is what is desired, why not try it on the tariff?

Or, again, Mr. Speaker, why not have a commission to investigate the important question of a reduction of national taxation? Why not have a commission to investigate the frauds in the Post-Office Department? Those are matters that the people are deeply interested in.

If we are to investigate by commissions, if we are to bring together important data from all sources, why not take up something that the people are all interested in instead of merely investigating a policy that has been investigated until it is threadbare and is intended by taxing all to benefit only a single industry?

Again, while we are investigating by a commission, Mr. Speaker, why not investigate the great subject of levying an income tax? The United States is behind the leading nations of the world in the matter of an income tax. We are crude, unjust, and antiquated in national taxation. Our taxes by the National Government, vast though they be, are practically nothing but a per capita tax. Our national revenues come from a tax on consumption, and these vast millions that we get together and spend so recklessly each year are contributed not at all by a tax on the wealth of the country. They add to the expenses of every American family. They are little more than a tax on each person regardless of his ability to pay and regardless of the benefits he enjoys under the protection of our National Government.

The Democratic Congress of ten years ago passed an income-tax law which unhappily was declared by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional. If it be necessary to amend the Constitution, let us make a beginning. The brilliant gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, Democratic leader in this House, has introduced a proposed amendment to the Constitution empowering Congress to levy an income tax. Why not consider that? Why not a commission to investigate this great question in the interest of the people, in the interest of more just and fair national taxation. The idea of taxing the clothes that people wear, the manufactured articles they must buy, the medicines they require, and the food and drink they consume while exempting great incomes is barbarous, crude, and unjust.

Why not investigate ways and means for bringing about a reform so that part of the national taxes may be on the wealth of the land, and have an income tax such as Great Britain has? At all times it is useful and just, and it is particularly valuable in times of emergency. And again, while we are investigating and having commissions appointed, Mr. Speaker, if it is merely desired to investigate and get valuable knowledge, why not investigate the subject of public works, internal improvements?

We come back here every year in Congress and the subject comes up, and no one knows, no one is in a position to advise this House, just what public works, what internal improvements, what canals, what roads, what rivers shall be taken in charge by the National Government.

Mr. Speaker, if this is simply a bill for an inquiry as to what is desired for the public good, why not have a commission to investigate some of these subjects? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask the gentleman a question before he sits down?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Just one question. Does the gentleman support the proposition contained in the minority report of discriminating duties?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not here as a member of the committee in charge of the bill, and I pretend to no particular knowledge of the subject any more than any intelligent citizen. I am here representing the West as against a Republican plan of paying a subsidy of any sort. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then do I understand the gentleman supports the proposition, or is the question offensive to the gentleman?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I leave the discussion of discriminating duties to others who are more capable of answering, and I am quite sure the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LUCKING] in charge of this matter for this side of the House will give a sufficient answer to the question.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, the gentleman does not know then——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the gentleman from Maine will find out.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska, who has just taken his seat, has stated that it is one of the policies of the Republican party to subsidize the banks or the banking interests of this country by depositing the public moneys in them so as to control their influence for campaign purposes and in this way subsidize them.

Now, this statement is made without any definite or record information by the gentleman from Nebraska. I have found but one letter from a President of the United States who undertook to control the policy of his party upon questions of that kind, addressed to a Secretary of the Treasury upon this question. That letter bears date of July 12, 1803, written by Thomas Jefferson, the patron saint of the Democratic party. This was written to Mr. Gallatin, then Secretary of the Treasury. It reads as follows:

> I am decidedly in favor of making all banks Republican [Democratic] by sharing deposits among them in proportion to the disposition they show. If the law now forbid it I should not permit another session of Congress to pass without amending it. It is material to the safety of Republicanism [Democracy] to detach from the mercantile interests of the country its enemies and incorporate them in the body of its friends. A merchant is naturally a Republican [Democrat] and could be otherwise only by a vitiated state of things.

I have just read from Bell's Financial History of the United States, quoting a letter from Thomas Jefferson, on page 140, volume 1.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman permit me to incorporate a letter——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not in my time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Written by A. P. Hepburn, vice-president of the National City Bank of Newark, to Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasury, in which he asks for United States deposits on the ground that "we have very great political claims in view of what was done during the canvass last year (1896)?" [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; I decline to yield. That has no connection whatever with this matter. If the gentleman has a letter from a Republican President to a Republican Secretary of the Treasury directing that public moneys be deposited with banks for the purpose of controlling the banks in the interests of the Republican party, I shall yield for that purpose, but for no other.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will give the gentleman President Harrison's address to this Congress, 1889, in which he did that very thing, and denounced that system.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, let us have it, and not give us just the gentleman's word for it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The letter I have read speaks for itself.

No other President gave such direction for the use of our surplus. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

[Mr. PARKER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to record myself strongly in favor of and in sympathy with the passage of the present resolution to appoint a conference committee to carefully consider and report at our next session what means can likely best be adopted to lead to the restoration of the American flag commercially on the ocean.

It is the first dawn of hope, the first ray of light those who have interested themselves for so many years in the welfare and uplifting of the merchant marine have seen in the halls of Congress, and it is pleasing to think that this body is at last alive to the importance of the subject, and that the House now realizes that the voice of the people throughout the land is being raised, and that they are asking for and, in fact, demanding proper action shall be taken.

Our Republican national platforms in the past have inserted the strongest possible planks in favor of relief, and will probably again do so at Chicago in June, and it is time that the party awoke and carried out their promises. There is no doubt that this is one of the greatest national issues which we have to face at the beginning of the twentieth century, and it must be met and settled in the interest of the American people, as it undoubtedly affects seriously their national prosperity and the ultimate welfare of all classes—the farmer, the manufacturer, the producer of raw material, and the merchant. It is now receiving more attention from the press of the country generally and the people themselves than ever before, and all are evincing a keen and earnest interest that we should again take, at least in part, the proud position we once occupied as a freight-carrying nation on the high seas, and especially during that period when our wooden clipper ships built in our own shipyards sailed to all ports of the world, and not only carried our own but a good share of the merchandise of other lands.

For over twenty-five years this subject, as to whether Government aid should be extended to our shipping or foreign vessels should be admitted to American register if purchased abroad by United States citizens, has been talked about and discussed by the prominent men of the country and debated in our various legislative bodies. Different propositions to bring about what all desired were advanced from time to time and received enthusiastic support or aroused bitter enmity, according to the point of view which was taken. Even to-day we must recognize that there are powerful partisans on both sides of the question who are undoubtedly sincere and honest in their convictions, although of diametrically opposite opinions as to what is the best course to pursue.

With a commerce already in excess of fifteen hundred millions in exports, and a thousand millions in imports, practically all of which is carried by alien-vessels, it is well to call a halt and admit that we have now reached a point of national degradation which should go no further, or we will practically have no ships whatever engaged in the deep-sea water trade. We have to-day probably not more than one hundred and fifty to two hundred thousand gross tons so employed against the necessary tonnage of at least 10,000,000 gross tons to carry even 60 per cent of our vast and growing necessities. England alone possesses a merchant fleet of 12,000,000 gross tons.

So much has been written and spoken on the question that it would be fruitless, and is, in fact, almost useless at this late date to go into an elaborate argument as to the conditions which have led to the decline of our supremacy. It is, however, admitted by those who are not absolutely prejudiced that the chief causes of the decline have been the antiquated navigation laws which we have allowed to stand for so long a period on our statute books, and the precluding of American citizens from buying or building abroad and securing United States register.

A potent factor also was the civil war and the natural loss to shipping caused thereby, but probably above all reasons, and the most destructive to our glory on the sea, was the passing away of the wooden clipper and the building of iron and steel steamers and sailers. We are as yet in no position to compete in this industry on a parity with others, although I trust we shall be within a few years, and it is well known that the cost of sailing an American ship, by reason of the high wages that must be paid and better provisions for the crew called for rightly by our laws, also counts largely against us. Had it not been for our fortunate and wise provisions protecting the coastal trade, the condition of that branch of our carrying business and national prosperity, of which we are to-day so proud, would also be in as bad a shape as is our foreign trade.

It again is not desirable at present, in view of instructions given in this bill, to discuss at length measures of relief, whether subsidy proposals are the most desirable, or, as some advocate, tariff reductions when goods come to our shores in American vessels, or other methods which have been proposed. At the proper time, and if a bill is reported at our next session, which I hope will be done, it will then be proper to fully give one's opinion regarding the method which will commend itself most to our people and be the wisest to place on our statute books. The committee appointed will investigate all phases of this subject. They will stir up the people's interest, and a national agitation will follow. We commit ourselves to nothing in creating the commission, but its usefulness will be great, and I earnestly hope it will lead to practical results.

Personally I desire to state that I am committed to no special proposition and am agreeable to work and vote for any measure which can be brought forward, either by the Democratic or Republican side of the House, so long as it will commend itself to the majority as the long-sought-for solution of the question. There are some who persistently claim that we can build vessels as cheaply in this country as they can be built abroad; but those who have carefully looked into the subject will find that such is not the fact, except perhaps in special cases, and that we neither have the yards capable of turning out large quantities of steamers and sailers suitable for foreign trade nor can such yards build even the limited number of ships they are able to supply yearly within probably 30 per cent of the parity of cost with the English and German shipyards, and the evidence is exhaustive and the preponderance of testimony seems clear on this point.

Shipbuilding to-day has assumed the same position that all other industries have; and the larger the yard, the greater the capacity, and a special adaptability to one class of work, the cheaper can that work be done.

I regret to think that our shipbuilding industries have undoubtedly often looked upon the question in a selfish light, and we have had to encounter as well partisan jealousies and the hidden opposition of foreign steamship agencies or American firms who represent these interests, also the opposition of the railroads; but the absolute necessity for action will brush aside all such considerations in the near future.

The present output of all our American shipyards, so far as ocean-going vessels are in question, is extremely small, and it will thus be seen that, unless these yards largely increase their capacity, it would take a great number of years to build up sufficient tonnage to carry even a small portion of our exports, but I have every faith that if the merchant-marine service and the building of ships was thought more profitable, American capital would come to the rescue if stimulated by proper Congressional action, and that our yards will be built up quickly to meet the supply needed, and that a further national industry will be created, destined to become one of the largest in the land and supply work for many thousands of our laboring men.

At present our shipyards are fairly well supplied with work, taking into consideration the Government contracts, the coastwise requirement, and the great demand for all classes of vessels needed in various trades (including pleasure vessels), which must be built to meet the needs of 80,000,000 people. It must appeal to everyone who will look into the matter that those who seek to delay some action do so purposely and knowingly and as an argument in favor of allowing this question to lie dormant, being actuated by reasons that are unpatriotic and by the one desire to defeat all measures propcsed for our national benefit.

The Republican party is in power, and they should no longer compel the nation to further suffer in pocket and pride and lay ourselves open to the grave chances which would confront us in case of war between two of the great European nations. If we were called upon to face emergencies of this kind, while we might secure some shipping, there would not be sufficient tonnage available for our prompt needs and requirements, and in any case the greatly increased price that we would have to pay for the hire would be a heavy drawback on our export business, and we would probably lose as much if not more in six months or a year then we would have to expend on any judicious system of relief in twenty-five years.

It is absurd to deny or claim that all the great world nations of to-day are not safeguarding and protecting their shipping interests in every possible manner. It is stated by some that England does not protect her tramp steamers by subsidy, which is, in a measure, correct; but we must not forget that in many indirect ways she does help her merchant vessels. We should not shut our eyes to the fact that she is naturally a maritime nation, and her fleets secure the preference through community of interests in trading between her home ports and her extended possessions in various parts of the world, enabling them to obtain outward and home cargoes. She therefore has a decided advantage over others, and the German nation and the French nation are following in her footsteps.

Many claim that the French have not made a success of their protective policy in shipping: but this is hardly true, as they have succeeded in keeping on the ocean the French flag and to-day have a splendid deep-sea tonnage and many steamers specially built for the Government requirements in case of war that can be called upon at a moment's notice; and we must further recollect that the French nation is not in as advantageous a position as England or ourselves to accomplish results. While England, therefore, it is true, grants no direct measure of relief, she is most liberal in her payments to the permanently established lines under the plea of mail subsidy or payment for carrying the mails.

Her magnificent fleet of steamers thus paid, which is clearly nothing but a subsidy, run to all parts of the world, and the compensation is so liberal that it enables her merchants or corporations to also, as an adjunct to the fast greyhound, load regularly in the line the slower merchant vessel, thus building up her export trade. The fleet steamer carries the goods that are compact and run to large values, and the slower vessel takes out the cheap freight or bulk lines of cargo. It is well known that this is the intention, and, in fact, an understood arrangement, when the payment is fixed for the mail route. To expect our shipping to compete with such methods without proper Government aid is impossible, and we should no longer deceive ourselves or the people but admit the fact.

There can be no question but that we should establish similar lines ourselves at once to all markets where trade conditions and the volume of annual business done is such as will justly warrant, and I have introduced bills in both the Fifty-seventh and the present Congress to that end, and will again present for the House committee's consideration a measure when we meet for our third session in December.

We should start these mail and freight lines without further delay, and if we have not a sufficiency of available tonnage to meet our immediate requirements, we should not hesitate to allow the bidders for such mail and freight service to secure their vessels abroad at first by purchase to a reasonable extent, providing always said vessels should not be used when withdrawn from the service in the coastal trade, and it could then be arranged that each contracting line should build yearly a certain number of vessels in our own yards, so that within a few years all steamers purchased abroad should be replaced by American-built tonnage.

These vessels should be constructed under Government supervision and of a speed and strength and tonnage according to the requirements of the country they would run to, so that by contract the Secretary of the Navy would have the right in case of war or other contingency to call upon all classes and sizes of ships for Government service and have his pick of vessels of from 25 knots in speed downward which could be used as auxiliary cruisers, transports, colliers, and for such other service as might be wished. Some could be so built as to have sufficient strength to carry light armament as well. England to-day has several hundred steamers of this class and description which she can call upon at any moment, and France and Germany also a large number.

There is ample and sufficient proof that this is by far a better and cheaper way in which to provide for needed steamers for naval requirements than to buy in any and all directions when the stress comes, as we were obliged to do in the case of the Spanish war, and which led to so much scandal, as beyond doubt we paid in many cases two or three times what the ships were worth owing to our sheer necessities.

I would further point out that we did not hesitate at that time to buy foreign ships, although our merchants can not do this for peace requirements. What would have been our position if at that time we had been called upon to face a really first-class power? We should also make proper provision in the bill for training up a large extra number of seamen of American birth or acquired citizenship every line being called upon to have a certain number among the crew, who also could be used, if needed, for navy purposes, as it is admitted on all sides that we are sadly deficient today in efficient men to man our men-of-war.

It is often pointed out that Norway, although only a small nation and not a shipbuilding people, has greatly increased her tonnage and has become a factor in the carrying trade; but there is, after all, nothing singular in these conditions and her present prominent position. Her people are not only free to buy vessels where they please (and I might mention that they have purchased a large number of American vessels during the past ten to twenty years), but they are able to sail them as well far cheaper than we can under the American flag, as their laws are most favorable and the wages paid extremely low. They also insure under an established system of clubs, both against total and partial loss. They are shrewd and sharp in making their purchases and watch for their opportunities to secure bargains, and are often able to pay good dividends where an American owner would undoubtedly have to suffer a loss.

There appears to be a great prejudice among those who have not looked into it against Government compensation to shipping upon the theory advanced that it is class legislation, which, however, does not appear to be in reality correct. The actual facts show that a vessel leaving an American port loaded with a miscellaneous cargo really includes the products of our forests and farms, our manufacturing and canning industries, and benefits so large and varied a number of our interests as practically to take in all sections of our country. To show that this is absolutely correct and that the advantages are far-reaching and beneficial to most classes of our people, I will give a couple of illustrations, and print herewith the cargo carried by one steamer to Australia and two to South Africa.

I would call special attention to the Representatives on this floor of the farming districts that these steamers to South Africa had on board large quantities of flour, wheat, oats, peas, corn meal, and cereals (made from grain and wheat); also corned beef packed in the West and the cattle raised in the West; also large quantities of canned fruits and salmon packed in the far West. Other sections of the country were benefited by the shipments of oil from Pennsylvania and West Virginia; turpentine, carriage ware, etc., from the South. The Eastern States and Middle West also contributed all kinds of manufactured goods too numerous to mention. If, however, anyone interested will take the trouble and carefully scan the cargo of the steamer Albuera to Australia I am sure he will be amazed at the extent and variety of the products shown to have been shipped, and will be agreeable to frankly admit there is no class legislation in such a cargo, and that all parts of our land were greatly benefited. The cargo lists of vessels going to South America, the West Indies, China, Japan, etc., if examined will show the same results and prove the fallacy of this assertion by the misinformed.

These facts will clearly demonstrate the need for permanent and regular American lines to these and other countries, so that we may have ample shipping opportunities; and I desire particularly to bring out the above facts, as we are told that our farmers, especially in the North or Middle West, are not in favor of building up our shipping. I do not believe that this is correct, or the question has never been put before them properly. It will be seen that the manufacturing and other industries in over one-half of the States of the Union are benefited on these two ships alone; and it stands to reason that the grower of wheat in the West, shipped to South African ports, or in case of shortage in crops, to Australia, or made into flour and shipped to China and Japan, also the timber merchant who exports to China, Africa, and Australia, will benefit as much by a proper shipping measure as any manufacturing industry on our eastern and southern shores. I need hardly state the fact that both the vessels whose cargoes I have enumerated fly the flag of a foreign nation; and the profit on 14,000 to 16,000 tons of freight goes into the pockets of others, and not the American people.

We pass almost yearly river and harbor and other bills calling for an ultimate expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. Thus, if we can at such outlay dredge our rivers, improve our harbors and lakes, these feeders of the ocean, across which our goods must go to reach the world markets, why should we stop at the coast, instead of building up as well on the free seas a freight business for our additional benefit and profit? I contend that for every thousand dollars in value of goods sold abroad we do more good to our country's interest than double that amount in value sold to our own people. This is undoubtedly true, and it is becoming understood better day by day that our factories and other branches of industry have now outstripped the home demand, and we must look for an extension of their output to the new or older countries of the world if we wish to provide for the yearly increasing numbers of wage-earners from foreign lands who present themselves at our door to seek employment, or for the sons and daughters of our own population, and, further, if we desire to maintain our present high range of wages.

The tramp, or slow steamer, and their large fleet of sailers are to-day the backbone of the English merchant maritime power, and they should become the lifeblood of our hoped-for new supremacy on the ocean. This class of vessel commands no special attention. They come and go without ostentation, taking on their cargoes of every description of goods, and sail away to distant destinations. There is no blast of trumpet, but these vessels are filled to their hatches with cargoes sold at a profit by our people, and if they were also owned by us would bring a proportionate freight advantage, instead of our paying tribute to others as at present.

Steamers of 8 to 12 knots are the real factors in the carrying trade to-day and the beasts of burden on the ocean. We should not cater too much to the fast steamer and mail passenger boat, except for mail requirements and naval necessities in case of war. It may be an inspiring sight, and it is, as all who have witnessed will admit, to see a grand mail steamer leave her moorings with a crowd of tourists going abroad, the band playing and, if an American liner, our national emblem flying at the sternpost; but sentiment should not control in this question, and we must remember that these ten to twenty thousand ton vessels carry but four to five thousand tons of freight cargo at the most, that their cabins are filled with rich people who can afford to pay any price for transportation and who will likely spend thousands of dollars on foreign shores instead of buying their goods at home, and I can not advocate, therefore, paying the ocean greyhound enormous compensation for pride's sake only, while overlooking the modest freight steamer, perhaps loading only a few wharves away, but taking several times the amount of cargo for the benefit of our varied industries and the product of the brains and hands of our working men and women.

Fast steamers will always be in the European and other trades, and the traveling public should pay the necessary price for the splendid accommodations provided; but under any plan to build up our marine only sufficient of this class of vessels should be compensated to provide for such number as might be desired for Government demands as auxiliary cruisers when necessity arises. Our great shipping ports are to-day crowded with the vessels of other lands. The English, the Germans, French, Norwegians, etc., hold a firm grip on our carrying business.

The English and Germans especially, with their ripe wisdom and keen knowledge regarding shipping methods, have not been slow to observe the great growth of our country, and for the last fifteen to twenty years, with rare judgment, have been gradually but surely driving out every American line and the old-time merchant from the carrying trade, and also systematically establishing their own permanent freight lines from our ports to various foreign lands, and now practically control the business to Australasia, China, Japan, India, the Red Sea ports, the West Indies, South African ports, South American ports, etc.; and while they have met some vicissitudes of business, and at times encountered the opposition of other foreign lines looking also to the obtaining of a foothold on our shores, yet, on the whole, they have undoubtedly made large amounts of money, and, what is of far greater importance, succeeded in establishing connections and obtaining a position here which will require all our ingenuity to dislodge them from, and the task is probably practically impossible, unless through the encouragement and assistance of Government aid and protection to American vessels. Anyone who will look over the advertising columns of our papers, as, for instance, The Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, of New York, will clearly see that these statements regarding our freighting interests are correct.

One of the worst features in connection with these lines, and which is of such great importance that it must not be overlooked, and has not been brought out as yet in this discussion, but which must have a far-reaching effect on our commerce and presents one of the strongest arguments for action by our Congress, is the fact that American industries are or can be discriminated against at any time by reason of these foreign corporations being in control. In a number of instances they not only run the ships from this country, but the same corporations load regularly from English or German ports to the same markets as from our ports, thus having a practical monopoly; and they are the absolute arbitrators as to the rates of freight which are paid on American goods, while at the same time also fixing the rate on similar classes of products going from English and German ports to any special market where these conditions prevail.

This presents a most humiliating spectacle for our nation to face; and it is clearly within the province of those who have this power and whose interests are not identified with this country, except to make money out of our freights, to discriminate against our merchants and manufacturers; and there is no question whatever that at times this has been and is being done to our serious detriment. The European chambers of commerce and commercial bodies generally are more active by far than similar institutions on this side of the water in looking after their material advancement; and they are careful watchers that the steamship lines operating here to other countries do not discriminate against them, and freight rates have been changed at their dictation on American goods and raised to admit of a differential in favor of merchants from their home ports.

This presents to the House a strong indictment and a true one, and a position we should not complacently face nor be willing to tolerate for a moment longer than possible. To-day our merchants and manufacturers are compelled to ask for rates in most directions named of paid agents of these foreign companies, who are frequently not even in position to name the rate, so carefully does the foreign owner watch and control, but must cable abroad to England or Germany to secure it, which is certainly a most galling position to our people and an unhealthy trade condition.

It can be readily seen that these firms control the freights from both ends, and can easily influence large contracts to the home market. Let us presume that some foreign government or merchant desires to purchase, say, a large quantity of rails—and I mention that line especially, as it is often called for, and most colonial countries own their railroad systems. It now becomes very easy for the English or German freighting interests in combination to so adjust the rate of freight from New York or from Hamburg or an English port as may best serve their interests, and the United States manufacturer must take his chances, accept the rate given, and tender under such uncertain and unfair conditions. An extra charge of 50 cents to a dollar a ton is sufficient to lose the business to our manufacturers, and we should be willing to make almost any sacrifice in a moneyed way to have these conditions changed.

It has been said that the merchant or manufacturer may protect himself by making his own freight arrangement and assume the risk of securing his vessel or vessels to carry the cargo he may have to sell; but those who are in the business know that this is not so easily done, as contracts of this order usually cover certain periods of shipment, and the seller can not likely forward the entire parcel at one time. It is also well known that the manufacturer, not familiar with a business foreign to his own, naturally hesitates about taking risks of this kind and much prefers to have his freight rate fixed for him and is unwilling to chance the uncertainty of what he may have to pay for a vessel when needed, and there would be loading difficulties which he could also hardly overcome.

I have merely mentioned rails as an apt illustration, but other lines are subject to the same conditions and equal disadvantages.

There is another point I desire to bring forward in regard to the methods of these lines in establishing their hold on the business, and that is the question of rebates, a system adopted to tie the hands of the shipper and importer for loyalty, or to bind the shipper to send all goods by their lines. He is paid at certain specified periods a rebate or commission, and meanwhile the amount is held over his head as a penalty in case of infringement of contract, so that should he take advantage of any lower rate which may be offered by a competing line, he would forfeit the expected agreed-upon refund and suffer a heavy loss.

These contracts are often unknown to the agent or shipper at this end, the bargain being made with the importer of the goods in the foreign country, or special contracts are made with said importer covering a specified time, and advantage is given him in accordance with the amount of freight he controls. This is very easily done, as the merchants abroad are largely English and German firms. It is true that under our law the rebate system to the shipper has for the present been done away with after existing for a number of years, but it is equally true that other methods are being adopted by foreign freight lines to hold the business in their own hands and force their position as a permanency upon us. If we had our own American lines, these matters would be controlled by our laws and proper protection guaranteed to all exporters.

Some theorists do not hesitate to advance the argument that if foreign ships can and will carry our merchandise cheaper by their established lines or through our merchants hiring their tramp vessels than we can carry it ourselves, we are foolish to trouble ourselves about building up a merchant marine and that we had better employ the ships of other nations. This, however, is such an absurd proposition that it is hardly worth dwelling upon except to show to what length some will go in their desire to prevent action on this issue.

It is the far-away markets of the world we should devote our special attention to for the further upbuilding of our industries. These are the countries to which we must look for the special cultivation of our export trade. It means in the long run much for our good, and we should give special fostering care to its encouragement. The trade between here and Europe will never be lacking in ample freight facilities and even competition in rates, but the distant market is in a different position.

Those who have been in the foreign business for the past twenty years will undoubtedly, if necessary, come forward and testify, if called upon, to the fact that during this entire period there has been, with perhaps a few months exception only, an absolute scarcity of vessels for the requirements of their business, no matter in what direction they might operate. It did not matter whether rates were high or charter rates low; the same dearth of vessels prevailed; and similar conditions exist to-day.

This can readily be understood, as the freight rate had practically nothing to do with the matter. If the rates were high, so much the better, of course, for the foreign steamship or sailing vessel when the owner chartered his vessel to us; and if they were low, so much the worse, but we had to depend in either case on ships heading this way; and when rates were high (as this was not their home market), the vessels naturally went mostly in other directions, and we had to pay extreme rates if we desired to secure them and bring them to our ports—mostly in ballast—for our requirements. Again, if the rates were low, they were not inclined to come here—knowing it would mean a loss—and we then had to pay a bonus to get them to come. This is accounted for to some extent by the fact that our export trade is much greater than our import business, and the latter comes very largely from Europe, where the regular lines are established; and the long-voyage shippers are practically dependent upon the tramp steamer or sailor, and there are comparatively few cargoes offering from abroad to our home markets from distant foreign lands.

The rapidity with which business is done in these days is also often a great factor, and this country to-day is losing many millions of dollars' worth of trade yearly—lost to those who raise our grain, cut down our timber, and manufacture our goods—owing to the fact that we are frequently not in position to put our hands on a proper steamer or sailer to meet immediate necessities. To-day in New York City alone, to say nothing of our southern and western ports, there are probably a hundred business requirements where vessels are desired, and it is simply impossible to secure them except by charter sixty to one hundred and twenty days ahead, or by waiting until a vessel is bound in that direction; and often at even higher prices the foreign merchant secures his requirements elsewhere rather than wait for us to deliver under these unsatisfactory hampers to trade.

Steamers and sailers owned by any country always seek the home market when possible. A sailor likes to go home, and the owner will so authorize when repairs are necessary or trade conditions will warrant. Therefore in England, France, and Germany a merchant can obtain a steamer or sailer of any size for any trade at almost any moment. It is simply a question of price. But far different is it with the merchant at our own shipping ports.

The development of the world in the last half century has been so great that to-day 30,000,000 people consume as much as ten times that number one hundred years ago, owing to the fact that what are now actual necessities even to the poorer people were then considered luxuries by the well-to-do.

There is undoubtedly room for all nations to trade amicably. The markets of the vast Orient, with its teeming population, will soon be thrown open. Our own new possession in the Philippine Islands will be a valuable opening for our goods. The great South American continent, which is to-day the real dark continent, will afford a splendid field for our enterprise. It is one of the richest, most productive, and greatest undeveloped lands that the world possesses to-day, and it is therefore time that we should take our place with other nations, enter into the commercial freight-carrying field, and regain our lost glory on the ocean.

The Panama Canal is about to be built. I am in favor of pushing through that great waterway for the benefit of the world's industries and people; but while in any case we should build the canal, I do not believe that it is the wish of our people that when completed we desire it to be used only by the merchant vessels of other lands, and that our own flag will not fly on a sufficient number of vessels to at least maintain to a proper degree our own national dignity; but unless we take active and quick steps to rectify the present unfortunate conditions which exist we will find ourselves in the humiliating position of even by that time having practically no deep-sea water carrying business.

In these remarks I have endeavored to bring out facts not covered by others for the consideration of the commission, and I trust that those who may be named will succeed in giving us a report that will enable all to unite on recommendations that may be made. I have every faith that this stain on our national escutcheon, this menace to our commercial advancement and material prosperity, this danger to our nation's greatness and source of weakness in case of war, this cause of irritation and loss of pride to every man who loves his country individually and of the entire people collectively, this almost unexplained position by reason of our unparalleled successes in all other directions, will also be swept aside by the irresistible march of our national progress and the sheer force of the necessities which confront us; and if I have studied the position aright, I do not doubt that within another quarter of a century we shall again hold a commanding position in this so desired particular, and that again the Stars and Stripes will proudly fly on every ocean. Our ships shall visit every land and be seen in every port, and the rightful heritage of our merchants to control our export and import commerce will again return to them for their benefit and the protection of American industries. Until this comes about our people will not rest content; nor should they, if we still possess that national pride which is our boast. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, I introduced in the House of Representatives in February, 1903, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, a joint resolution providing for a joint commission to investigate the policy of international navigation. This resolution provided that the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives should be authorized and directed to appoint a joint commission of the two Houses of Congress, to consist of five Senators and nine Representatives, of whom at least two members of the Senate and four Members of the House of Representatives should belong to the minority party, to which was to be added the President pro tempore of the Senate, and said commission were to be authorized and directed before the meeting of the Fifty-eighth Congress to investigate our present policy of international navigation, to trace its effect upon our merchant marine, to consider how we might constitutionally encourage it in the foreign trade, thereby regaining our lost position on the sea and effect a renewed development of our shipping power. And said commission were authorized to make a full and complete report of such investigation and submit its conclusions thereon, together with a bill for its consideration, to the Fifty-eighth Congress, when it convened in regular session in December, 1903.

This joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and the same was ordered favorably reported to the House of Representatives on February 24, 1903, by the unanimous action of said committee.

The report which I prepared by direction of said committee accompanied the joint resolution, and the same was placed upon the Calendar, but failed to obtain consideration, owing to the fact that the Fifty-seventh Congress expired by limitation March 4, 1903.

I respectfully present the report submitted as a part of my remarks.

[House Report No. 3854, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session.]

Policy of internal navigation. February 24, 1903.—Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed. Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following report:

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 266) providing for a joint commission to investigate the policy of international navigation, having had the same under consideration, respectfully recommend the passage of said joint resolution with the following amendments:

Strike out the word "six," in the seventh line, page 1, and substitute the word "five."

Strike out the word "ten," in the eighth line, same page, and substitute the word "nine;" and add after the word "Congress," in the ninth line, same page, the words "of whom at least two of the members of the Senate and four of the Members of the House of Representatives shall belong to the minority party of the two Houses."

The history of sea power as it has concentrated at various times is largely of a military character, and is "aggressive, cruel, and bloody," but navigation policies, by putting it in the power of cunning and covetous nations to impose on the weak and liberal, have largely contributed to unbalance commerce and aid in its monopoly.

By such policies our marine has been sacrificed. The need of the world is equitable intercourse. This is not to be realized by permitting any nation to acquire the "command of the sea." Policies that work to this end are impolitic on the part of inferior nations. To them, at least, it should be self-evident that advancement requires between maritime states a commensurate growth and a fair balance of marine and naval power. A condition even approaching monopoly of shipbuilding and navigation, of commerce and sea carriage, with inordinate naval preparation, can not but threaten the general prosperity and even the peace of the world. These great objects would be best secured by the equitable principle of every maritime nation attaining and holding its rightful place upon the ocean, carrying its fair share of commerce, content to see its neighbors so carry theirs.

This condition does not now obtain, because the sea carrying trade of all nations is mostly open and free to vessels of any flag. Some nations, like ourselves, preserve their domestic carrying trade, but many nations, like our own, have no regulations to prevent the enterprising and the grasping from capturing their trade and transportation. Our domestic commerce—of coast, lake, and river—is the largest of its kind in the world. In fact, all the countries have not a larger home traffic. Our foreign carrying trade is open to the ships of the world, and under the methods which we have pursued more than 92 per cent of that trade is controlled and maintained by steamers built by other nations under privileges and subsidies granted for the purpose of depriving us of the advantages which would accrue to us in trade with the civilized world.

Not only do we suffer through actions by other nations jealous of our growth and ambitious to secure the advantages of our trade, but we also are injured by the action of the "Lloyds" and other combinations of foreign insurance capital, who have in many ways belittled, underrated, and overcharged our merchant marine, and these unfair, unjust, and almost criminal discriminations, together with the higher cost of construction and maintenance, of the American-built and American-manned ship, have nearly made our vessels unknown in the foreign trade. That there is abundant capital seeking investment in merchant marine is evidenced by the recent purchases of foreign steamship lines by American capitalists.

It is also an admitted fact that every additional stick of timber hewn in the forest, and every additional ton of ore taken from the mines and manipulated by the skill and enterprise of the shipbuilder and the skilled mechanic, means the greater employment of American labor, and the providing of a home market for the consumption of the products of the farm in a larger degree, and therefore the joint resolution herewith presented should command a generous support from all sections of the country. The need of a full and efficient inquiry into the present conditions of our foreign shipping trade is so plainly apparent that an attempt to provide a remedy which shall restore the United States to its former supremacy in the shipping trade of the world should certainly be undertaken.

Our policy for more than the past forty years has clearly been wrong. Without any investigation, that is altogether too apparent.

What ought to be investigated is the cause of the decline, with the purpose in view of providing a remedy, and submitting the conclusion in the form of a bill to be presented to the Fifty-eighth Congress for the purpose of rehabilitating our fast declining merchant marine in the foreign trade.

This is the intended purpose of the joint resolution recommended for adoption to the Congress of the United States, and it should commend itself to the careful consideration of every lover of his country, independent of party affiliation or partisan considerations.

The bill H. R. 7056 embodies the same features that were included in the joint resolution which I presented to the Fifty-seventh Congress. The necessity which existed then for the legislation has only become more pressing to-day, as by the lapse of time the continued decadence of our merchant marine, relatively, shows how as a nation we are not keeping pace with even the smaller and more inferior nations in the use of the great international highways of commerce.

During my membership in the House of Representatives I have been assigned a place upon the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Long and patient hearings have been held and arguments have been presented both for and against the policy of rehabilitation of our merchant marine by means of providing a subsidy, and it has not been possible to agree upon a bill which could by any possibility be enacted into law. But there has always seemed to prevail a sentiment that something ought to be done, or some agreement ought to be secured, whereby a measure could be submitted to Congress upon which both sides could agree and which they would recognize was in the interest of the whole people and not for the purpose of partisan advantage.

I frankly declare that was my intention in presenting the joint resolution, to which I have referred, in the Fifty-seventh Congress; and as there was not any opposition in the committee to that resolution, it seemed to me very peculiar that there should be a partisan division upon the vote ordering a favorable report upon the bill we are now considering, and also that there should have been majority and minority reports presented thereon to confuse the minds or arouse the passions of the Members of this honorable body.

I accord to my colleague [Mr. GARDNER] the same high purpose with which I was actuated in striving to arouse the Members of the House and the people of the nation to the importance of this great question, of inquiring into the causes of the decline of our foreign merchant marine, and endeavoring to seek a remedy from the existing state of facts such as the inquiry might reveal.

Besides, this bill provides that the minority party in both Houses shall have representation on the proposed commission; and as the commission is to ascertain information and report the results of the inquiry to the Congress at its next session, if it should appear that there can not be an agreement upon facts at that time, it would seem to me most appropriate that partisanship should be made manifest. I have carefully read the majority and minority reports accompanying this bill, and they are well worthy the attention of the Members of the House and would be useful in setting forth the necessities of the situation for the information of the citizens of the nation.

The views of the minority regarding this commission, it seems to me, are peculiar. The commission is composed of members of both Houses and of both parties. In this respect it is not in accord with the usual custom of having separate committees, but there is no outside interference nor any suggestion of such action, and an inquiry of the same nature by separate committees would only result in double expenditure; therefore the contention of the minority in this respect seems to me unsound and unwise. It is certainly to be regretted that we are halted in the consideration of this inquiry at the outset by the declaration of the minority that they see all sorts of ghosts and hobgoblins in this attempt to obtain information which shall guide the Congress in its attempts to solve one of the most perplexing problems that demand our consideration.

But accustomed as the Congress is, by long experience, to witness the attempts of the minority to neutralize all efforts to secure legislation by factious opposition, the majority will proceed to outline measures which they regard for the public good, and they will go forward with the confident belief that this bill, if it is adopted by the Congress and receives the approval of the President, will be the means of furnishing important information upon which to base legislation which will result in the rehabilitation of our merchant marine. This subject is one that should interest every citizen of the Republic.

We should be the greatest maritime nation. By wise legislation we have protected, maintained, and increased our coastwise and lake commerce until it is very much larger in volume than that of any other nation.

Bordering on the two great oceans, expending millions in widening the channels and deepening the harbors along the entire coast, we ought to take measures to construct the ships which shall enjoy the benefits and profits which should accrue from the export of our vast productions, and we also should reap the advantage which our great prosperity has made possible through the great increase of imports from other nations.

We hope to obtain in concise form the information as to the handicaps we suffer by reason of the bounties, subsidies, or other provisions made by other nations for the benefit of their shipowners. If through this commission reliable information is furnished, possibly we may then hope to obtain remedial legislation.

WE MUST START SOMEWHERE.

During the recent war with Spain we were compelled to buy or hire transports of other nations, for we were absolutely without the necessary tonnage to supply our Army and Navy with equipments, food, and the complement of men to preserve the national honor.

Through the efficiency, skill, and patriotism of our gallant boys in blue we were victorious on both land and sea and are regarded as invincible by the great nations of the world.

It is good economy to maintain a strong navy in time of peace as a preventive of war and the consequent loss of life and devastations, which great misfortunes can not be estimated in dollars and cents.

An adequate deep-sea merchant marine under American auspices and governed by laws which Congress in its wisdom has provided would develop seamen of the highest character, who would prove proficient auxiliaries in time of war and most exemplary and efficient citizens in time of peace.

Let us not forget the great shipbuilding interests. Along our coasts are well-equipped, modern shipyards. If the foreign merchant marine shall be strengthened so that the sound of the ax and hammer shall be heard in the shipyards and the mechanic and artisan shall find constant and remunerative employment, a demand will be created for labor in the forest, in the mine, at the furnace, and in the workshop, and the purchasing power of the wage-earner will be increased. He will consume a greater quantity of the products of the farm, the mill, and the workshop. A calm and careful consideration of the wide-reaching effects of the provisions of this bill, if it meets the expectations of its author, will convince the most obstinate and perverse opponent that it is the most beneficial legislation that has engaged the attention of Congress during recent years.

Since 1898 we have annexed the Sandwich Islands and acquired the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico, and have executed a treaty with Cuba. These acts are marked advances over our former policies of confining our energies to exploitation within the confines of the United States. Already we are reaching out in the Orient for our share in the trade of the great nations in the East. The great water highways are open to the nations which most deserve them, and this nation, with its vast resources, with its great abilities displayed in every line of domestic manufactures and domestic commerce, should enter the open field of competition for the foreign commerce which other nations have so long enjoyed, and by liberal provisions have made it possible for the foreign shipbuilder and shipowner to cause the American flag to almost disappear from the sea and from the ports of other nations.

The recent treaty negotiated with Panama and ratified by the Senate of the United States and the acquirement of the territory through which a canal is to be constructed connecting the two oceans is another marked advance beyond the lines maintained heretofore. The reasons which actuated and justified the expenditure of millions to accomplish this great result have been accepted by the citizens of the Republic as wise, patriotic, and public-spirited.

A portion of the minority in both Houses condemned this great act and the methods and wisdom of its accomplishment. They condemn this legislation with equal fervor and vindictiveness; but the sober, thinking, hard-headed citizens of this great nation will support and uphold the party which courageously and manfully takes up this important question affecting our international merchant marine and presses it to a successful conclusion.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH], providing for an inquiry as to what "change or changes, if any, should be made in the existing laws relating to the treatment, comfort, and safety of seamen, in order to make more efficient the seafaring calling in the American merchant marine," and adopted by the House, broadens the scope of the inquiry and touches upon a very important element in the consideration of this great question.

The decline of our American shipping has been appalling, and I firmly believe that a discussion of the present status of our international merchant marine can not fail to be of interest.

Mr. Chairman, not one American merchant ship from the United States entered the ports of Germany last year. Not one American flag floating above an American cargo was seen in the ports of Russia, of the Scandinavian peninsula, of the Netherlands, Italy, Austria-Hungary, or Greece. So far as the commerce of these maritime countries of Europe is concerned, the Stars and Stripes have been blotted from the ocean. Less than one-tenth of our own imports and exports in our traffic with all the countries of the world was conveyed last year in American vessels, built, officered, and manned by our own citizens.

More than nine-tenths of the over-sea commerce of the great American port of New York is conveyed in the ships of foreign nations. Foreign mercantile and shipping houses dominate the lower portion of Manhattan Island. They crowd the streets around the Battery. They give that whole region an atmosphere of Europe, thoroughly alien and frankly hostile to American ideas and the extension of American commerce.

In this lower part of New York City, No. 78 Broad street, stands the new building of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, the largest shipping association in America. Time was when the New York Maritime Exchange was the heart and soul of American maritime enterprise. Its floor was thronged with American merchants, with American shipowners, and American captains. Its atmosphere was of ardent patriotism. There were planned voyages that won wealth for the city and honor for the flag.

But little by little, step by step, through the years, with the disappearance of American ships, American shipowners and captains have been elbowed out of the exchange by aggressive foreigners, who know little and care less for the patriotic traditions of the institution. However, the management of the exchange has remained American because of its members; those best equipped to accept the responsibility were American citizens. In every effort to win back our vanished commerce the official voice and influence of the exchange have been heard and felt for the American ship.

When this very bill was being urged upon the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the officers of the New York Maritime Exchange approved it and sent on their official indorsement of this measure to bring about the restoration of the American merchant marine. This act was instantly and bitterly resented by the foreigners of the exchange, and a determined attack was made by them upon the American element. There were angry words and fierce denunciation from the agents and employees of the great British and German shipping houses of London and Liverpool, Bremen and Hamburg.

The American officers of the New York Maritime Exchange were informed by these foreigners that they had no right so much as to raise a finger in behalf of their own country's flag on the high seas. They were told that, inasmuch as 90 per cent of the ocean commerce of the port of New York was carried in foreign vessels, the owners and agents of this foreign shipping had a right to dictate what should be the policy of the largest maritime association in America.

This insolent and aggressive foreign movement against the cause of the American ship has now culminated in an effort to defeat for reelection Capt. C. B. Parsons, the president of the exchange, an American shipowner, and a stanch friend of the United States merchant marine.

Captain Parsons is a successful merchant, a cultivated gentleman, American to the backbone, a gallant officer of the civil war. He has conducted the affairs of the exchange with skill and fidelity. He has recently installed the exchange in a fine new building. He is known and honored throughout the business community.

Yet, because he dared to approve this bill, following out the recommendation of the President of the United States for an official inquiry into the decline of American shipping, he was marked for defeat by spiteful agents of foreign steamship companies, whose monopoly of American commerce would suffer if the number of American ships and American seamen were increased.

This same foreign attack which is aimed at President Parsons is also directed at Mr. Fields S. Pendleton, one of the board of directors of the exchange, who is a candidate for reelection. Like Captain Parsons, Mr. Pendleton is known as an ardent friend of American shipping. He himself owns a large amount of American sailing property. He has no interest whatever in any ship beneath a foreign flag. Mr. Pendleton is president of the Atlantic Carriers' Association. He joined his fellow-officers of the exchange in advocacy of this bill for a commission to devise the best way possible to upbuild the American merchant marine, and for this he, too, has been marked for defeat by the foreign steamship companies that control 90 per cent of the ocean carrying of the port of New York.

To make this attack upon American shipping interests the more mistakable and offensive, the foreigners of the New York Maritime Exchange have named as their candidate against Captain Parsons the New York agent of the British shipping house of Furness, Withey & Co. (Limited)—an Englishman who has lived in this country only a few years and has never become an American citizen.

This man, Woolley by name, states his position with astonishing frankness. He leaves no doubt whatever of the real animus of this foreign raid upon American shipping interests:

We are opposed to the present president being reelected—

Declares this English steamship agent in an interview—

because he favors the control by American tonnage of the transport trade. He favors measures in Congress, you know, arranging things so merchandise can be shipped to the Philippines only in American bottoms. Now, 90 per cent of the business is controlled by English tonnage and of course we don't want to have that changed.

The newspaper representative who procured this illuminating statement from him said, "It is almost unnecessary to ask if you are an Englishman?" "I am," replied Mr. Woolley.

Here is a raid upon American shipping and American commerce right in the heart of the city of New York, which recalls some of the crass British blundering and intolerance of the days of the Revolution. These Englishmen have no more knowledge now of the American temper than they had then. They have no more respect for American patriotism or American independence. This whole episode of a British conspiracy in New York City against American merchants who have dared to stand up on the floor of the New York Maritime Exchange in behalf of the American ship ought of itself to insure the support of every Congressman, Republican and Democrat, for this bill now pending. What does the Democracy intend to do about it? What is the attitude of the Democratic Members of this House? Here in our own seaports we have the agents of foreign shipping impudently declaring that we must not have American ships, that American citizens who favor legislation in behalf of the American merchant marine must be punished by defeat in American maritime associations.

What do the Democrats of this House propose to do in the face of such a situation? Are they with their country or against it? Do they uphold men like Captain Parsons and Mr. Pendleton, who are striving with all their might to build up the American merchant marine, or do they side with the foreigners, who are seeking to cripple and destroy it?

Here is a straight-out, clear-cut issue. Shall we have American ships to convey our commerce, or shall we surrender to foreigners the pitiable fragment of this commerce which we still retain? What say the Democratic Representatives? Are they with their country or against it? Are they with the men who are trying to build up American shipping, or are they with the foreigners who are trying to strike it down?

These foreigners resent the idea that the Congress of the United States should even authorize an inquiry into the condition of our merchant shipping and the best method to restore it. They regard the ocean trade of the United States as theirs by prescription. They deny us the right of carrying even so much as one-tenth of our own goods in our own ships beneath our country's colors. They oppose this inquiry because they are afraid of its consequences, because they feel that it will lead to a popular realization of our weakness and a demand for the upbuilding of our merchant fleet, like the demand for the upbuilding of the Navy; they are afraid of this bill.

Are the Democratic Representatives also afraid of it? Will they join with foreigners in striking at their own flag and destroying what little is left of the sea power of our country?

Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration aims at a purpose especially dear to the State I represent. The measure has aroused widespread interest in Massachusetts and has won the formal approval of many of the chief mercantile associations of the Commonwealth—the Boston Associated Board of Trade, the Boston Merchants' Association, the Home Market Club, which has its headquarters in Boston, the Gloucester Board of Trade, the Boston Real Estate Exchange, the Lawrence Board of Trade, and the Springfield Board of Trade.

These mercantile associations are made up of men of all parties. They urge the enactment of this bill not as partisans, but as patriotic American citizens honestly seeking the welfare and security of their own country and the extension of its commerce to foreign lands.

In the first half century of our national existence Massachusetts was the most active and enterprising maritime community of the United States In 1818 the port of Boston, according to Doctor Seybert's enumeration, led the whole list of American seaports, with 4.48 tons of shipping for every inhabitant. Next came Portsmouth, N. H., with 4.15 tons; Baltimore, with 2.90 tons; New York, with 2.78 tons; Philadelphia, with 2.23 tons; and Charleston, with 2.14 tons. Boston and Salem were our American pioneers in the trade beyond the Cape of Good Hope to the distant countries of the Orient. It was Massachusetts yards that built the earliest and most famous of our clippers, and when steam came in Massachusetts skill and enterprise instantly entered the field in a gallant, but, of course, impossible, rivalry with the heavily subsidized steamship lines of Europe.

Step by step Massachusetts has been driven from the ocean. Her first steam line succumbed to the State-aided competition of the British Cunard Line. Then British subsidized ships entered our oriental trade and drove our sail ships out of the ports of the East Indies. The cheap wages, aided sometimes by the subsidies, of Europe have driven our Massachusetts ships out even of the South American and West Indian trade, and little is now left to Massachusetts shipowners and seamen but the coastwise traffic, which, under the protection of wise and effective laws, has grown in these later years to great proportions.

But only a skeleton fleet of Massachusetts vessels now sails overseas. Out of the port of Boston, the second seaport of America, there goes not so much as one steamship in the great trade to Europe. Every one of the steam vessels regularly plying to and fro between Boston and the ports of Great Britain, northern Europe, and the Mediterranean is a foreign vessel, built abroad, owned abroad, manned abroad, and part of the naval reserve of European nations.

On the whole import and export trade of Boston, aggregating now a value of nearly $200,000,000 a year, our manufacturers, merchants and the farmers of the West pay a tribute to the foreign shipowners.

During the Boer war, when Great Britain required transports to convey her troops, with their ammunition and provisions, to South Africa, she took nearly all of the best British steamships out of our Boston service and so crippled our transportation facilities that in a few months the export trade of Boston, consisting chiefly of western grain, provisions, and cattle, was reduced by the amount of $10,000,000 or $12,000,000. There were no American ships to convey these goods, and the foreign owners of the few ships left, taking advantage of our necessities and our lack of American tonnage, deliberately advanced their freight rates 30 per cent.

This forced the American people, and especially the farmers of the West, to contribute to the cost of that long and desperate conflict in South Africa.

Not only is there no American steamship running out of the port of Boston to Europe, but there is no American steamship running out of Boston in the trade with South America, a trade in which Massachusetts vessels were once preeminent. For a long time there was not one American steamship regularly employed in the trade between Boston and the West Indies. But a few years ago, under the postal-subsidy act of March 3, 1891, the United Fruit Company, which has its headquarters in Massachusetts, built four American steamships of 15 knots speed and of 2,000 tons, qualified them under the severe terms of this postal act, and established a new American line, which has been running successfully ever since between Boston, Philadelphia, Jamaica, and occasionally ports of the farther Caribbean.

But this one line of the United Fruit Company, created and sustained by a small mail subvention, is the only American line of steamships now running out of Massachusetts in the foreign trade. This line receives in mail pay about $100,000 to $120,000 a year. It may be worth remarking that a British line running between England and Jamaica in the same fruit-carrying trade receives a subsidy of $200,000 annually. In other words, the rate of British as compared with the rate of American ship protection in this West Indian service is almost as two to one.

Massachusetts has good harbors, a long coast line, and a numerous maritime population inured to the sea and possessing a veritable genius for ocean adventure.

The old sea towns of Cape Ann, Cape Cod, Martha's Vineyard, and Nantucket and the old whaling city of New Bedford have for two hundred years bred the hardiest and most enterprising seamen in the world. Thousands of these men now find employment in the coasting trade, but they can not go over seas unless they sail on foreign ships, beneath foreign colors. The United States has done much, and justly, to encourage its iron and steel makers and its cotton spinners. The men who weave woolen cloth, who make machinery, tools, and all the articles that go to fill the other needs of modern life—these are protected, but this nation of ours has almost forgotten its seafaring citizens. It has almost ignored the earliest and once the greatest of our industries. But for the coastwise trade there would be few American seamen to-day; there would be no American shipbuilders.

We once built ships of wood in Massachusetts. We are building there now ships of steel. But they are all for the coastwise service or the Navy. On the shores of Boston Harbor there stands to-day the great plant of the Fore River Company, one of the greatest shipyards of America. This yard has constructed coasting vessels. It is just about to launch a battle ship. It is building steamers for the route between New York and Boston. But never yet has this yard, with its 3,000 workmen, its splendid machinery, its unsurpassed resources, built so much as one vessel for the general ocean trade. It is many, many years since a ship of any kind was built at any port of Massachusetts exclusively for foreign voyaging.

Massachusetts merchants have abundant capital. They have enterprise and ambition. They have more—a native instinct for the sea and splendid talent for world-wide commerce. They are awaiting only an opportunity. When a bill for the encouragement of American shipping was introduced in Congress a few years ago, the Fore River shipyard immediately received inquiries for bids for the construction of forty or fifty seagoing ships of the first class. When that bill failed every one of those inquiries was withdrawn and the ships which brought our Massachusetts commerce overseas continued to be built in foreign yards, to be owned by foreign merchants, and officered and manned by the subjects of foreign governments.

How long shall this humiliating condition last? Is not the need of an inquiry imperative? An inquiry is what this bill provides for—an inquiry, and nothing else. Nobody can tell what particular kind of legislation may be recommended. It may be subsidy—it may be something else. The plan of discriminating duties and tonnage duties—suggested by the minority of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries—deserves a fair hearing before this commission. If there is any merit in this plan, the country ought to know it. And if there is merit, a commission on which both parties are represented would establish it.

If some other way is the best way, let us have it. There is wisdom enough and patriotism enough in Congress, I am certain, to discover the best method, whatever that may be, to restore our almost lost ocean fleet and to set the Stars and Stripes afloat again on distant oceans.

An inquiry—a fair and square investigation of the causes that have reduced our merchant marine and the best method of increasing it—is what is asked by these business men of Massachusetts in common with the business men of other States. Can Congress afford to refuse even an inquiry? Will the minority Members of this House deny even this boon to American merchants, shipbuilders, and seamen? And if they do so—if, in spite of the appeals of the merchants of our cities and the sailors and mechanics of our coast towns, the minority party in this House votes to deny even this inquiry—how can it hope to justify itself in the approaching election to the merchants of the country and the people of the maritime States?

Remember this, that the present foreign monopoly of nine-tenths of our ocean commerce drains out of this country every year from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000, which goes to strengthen the commercial and naval power of the nations of Europe.

Is the Democratic party as represented by the minority in this House prepared to stand before the American people in this national election and declare that it will not consent that our Government should even inquire into the cause of this foreign monopoly, which is slowly strangling the maritime enterprise and destroying the sea power of the United States?

Mr. Chairman, this question of American shipping is a very simple one. Strangely enough, however, there is thrown over and around it a degree of mystery and misrepresentation that so confuses and complicates the question that many people give up its solution in despair. The shipping question is entirely a labor question, and I am quite within bounds in stating that the labor feature of the shipping question is but rarely and slightly considered. It may be well to inquire why this is so. The enemies of American shipping—and they are numerous, alert, resourceful, and aggressive—do not want the facts of the case known; they do not want the real issues defined; they do not want the American people to understand the question in its simplicity and nakedness; hence they very carefully keep away from the labor element in discussing it.

The American people want an American merchant marine for our foreign carrying, because they are ashamed to see their flag so little upon the seas. They feel humiliated to find foreign ships all but monopolizing our foreign carrying. They feel that the intelligence of the American people is in question so long as the great shipbuilding interest decays and is insignificant. They feel gratified to know that in exports we exceed all other nations, but they view with keen apprehension our almost utter dependence upon foreign shipping for its transportation. What they want to see is American shipyards busy building the ships needed for our ocean carrying. They know that we have an abundance of shipbuilding material equal to every possible need; that our soil is full of iron ore and coal—the two chief ingredients in modern shipbuilding. They know that our southern pine and western fir forests are almost boundless and all but inexhaustible, and they wonder that American labor is not employed in digging the iron ore and the coal from the earth and in felling the trees that supply the raw materials for shipbuilding.

They would like to see our great railroad and water transportation agencies and the American labor they employ engaged in carrying the raw materials required in shipbuilding to the mills and factories, and after they have been fashioned into the proper shapes at the mills and the factories by American labor they would like to see them again carried to our shipyards, there to engage American labor in assembling the different parts into the finished ships. The American people know that we are not lacking in skill for shipbuilding. They know that we have built the finest battle ships and the finest merchant ships, and the most modern, that ever sailed the seas. There is no question of our ability; there is no question of our resources with which to build ships. We possess each in the greatest abundance. Nor is the capital lacking; that, too, we have in the greatest abundance; and all that is necessary to cause the building of vast fleets of American merchantmen is the evidence that the investment is stable and profitable. Nor is the enterprise lacking.

So we have, first, the commerce to carry; second, the means with which to build the carriers; third, the materials for shipbuilding; fourth, the skill and the labor unequaled and in the greatest abundance ready for employment in shipbuilding. Why, then, do we not build the ships? Simply because investment in American-built ships under present conditions is unprofitable. So, capital being unwilling to invest in American-built ships, our materials are unused, our skill and labor are unemployed. The result is that foreign materials, foreign skill, and foreign labor supply us with the ships that are employed in doing our foreign carrying. The free trader says that this is a natural and proper condition; that if the foreigner will do our shipbuilding more cheaply than our own people will do it, that it is to our advantage to employ the foreigner and use our labor in employment that is profitable.

These same free traders, however, would have foreigners spin our cotton into cloth, because they are able to do it more cheaply than our own people are. Nevertheless we place a high duty on imported cotton manufactures, in order that our own people, even at higher prices, shall have employment in the manufacture of cotton. This country produces three-fourths of all of the cotton raised in the world; we ship three-fourths of our cotton abroad in a raw state; it is manufactured abroad, and even then, so keen is the foreign competition, so cheap is the foreign manufacture, that our imports of cotton manufactures approximate in value to our exports of cotton manufacture. Not only are our rivals able to pay the freightage on the raw cotton from the South to the mills in foreign countries, and to there manufacture it into cloths and then ship it back to the United States, and still pay high duty on it in order to get it into our markets in competition with our own cotton manufactures, but the people of the United States show a determination to continue that system indefinitely.

The suggestion, therefore, that it is to our advantage to have aliens build our ships, because they can build them more cheaply than we can, if a good one, should be equally good applied to cotton manufacturing. If foreigners can manufacture cotton cheaper than we can, why should they not? The answer is that the American people do not want American labor to work for the low wages that foreign labor is willing to work for in cotton manufacturing; they desire to maintain unimpaired the American standard of wages in cotton manufacturing, and if it is more costly the American people are quite willing to bear the higher cost, feeling and believing that the country is stronger, safer, and more contented with its labor earning good wages.

For the same reason the American people will be willing to have the ships required for our foreign carrying trade built in the United States. The people do not ask nor do they wish that the American labor employed in building ships shall work as cheaply as the foreign labor that is employed in building ships any more than they wish or desire that American labor employed in making cotton goods should work for the same wage that foreign cotton operatives receive. To be sure, we could get the ships we need by buying them abroad and putting them under the American flag and running them with foreign officers and foreign crews and feeding them the same cheap way that the officers and men employed on foreign ships are fed, but that is not what is back of the demand for an American merchant marine.

The militant, aggressive demand for American shipping emanates from those who want ships built by well-paid American labor, officered and manned by well-paid and well-fed American officers and seamen; and such a shipping, so built, so officered, and so manned is the only kind that will ever satisfy the American people. Until we have just such a shipping, prosperous and profitable, the agitation will be kept up, the demand will be just as insistent and persistent as it is now. After half a century of decline, after American shipping has all but been effaced from the high seas, the demand for an American mercantile marine is still aggressive, still militant, still unsatisfied with existing conditions, still clamoring at the doors of Congress for relief.

Our Democratic friends have a warm feeling for alien labor; they abhor and detest the protective system, so they tell us to buy our ships abroad, because they are built more cheaply abroad, and put them under the American flag. They say let us have "free ships," and "free ships" means nothing unless it means alien-built ships. And that is all that the Democrats seem to stand for—the employment of underpaid foreign labor instead of the employment of properly paid American labor. The only objection that our Democratic friends have to American-built ships is that they cost more to build than foreign ships cost. We hear little from our Democratic friends for ships of American construction; their cry is for cheap ships, for "free ships," for alien-built ships. How can American labor look on and hear these Democratic demands for foreign-built instead of American-built ships and not realize that the Democratic party is opposed to American labor? If foreigners build our ships, where is American labor benefited? If foreign materials are employed in the building of ships, how does that help the men employed in the mines, the forests, the mills, and the factories of the United States? If foreign workingmen build the ships our commerce employs, what benefit does that confer upon American labor? And yet that is what our Democratic friends are lined up for; that, as a part of their free-trade propaganda, is what they offer to American labor.

There are 6,000,000 tons of foreign ships now employed in carrying our imports and exports, the cost of which must have been very close to $500,000,000. American commerce has paid for those ships. The money has been taken from the American people, out of the channels of trade, and paid over to aliens, and American labor remains idle, while the alien finds employment in the building of the ships needed for the carrying of the foreign commerce of the United States. It is estimated that every year $200,000,000 is paid out by the American people to foreign shipowners for the transportation of American foreign commerce. Think of it; every five years a billion dollars! During the past forty years probably all of $5,000,000,000 has been paid to foreigners for carrying the imports and exports of the United States! During the next quarter of a century, if things remain as they are, the people of the United States will pay out to foreign shipowners in freight charges another $5,000,000,000. The United States will be just that much poorer in wealth, in resources. The United States, at this rate, would be able to pay off the national debts of every nation on earth, all put together, and still leave a handsome surplus in the national treasuries of other nations.

The American people little realize what a fearful drain upon their resources and their wealth is made every year for the employment of alien ships. No other nation on earth could stand such a strain as this nation does and yet prosper—and this condition will not exist forever. We shall eventually impoverish ourselves if we continue to employ only alien instead of American shipping in our foreign trade. And yet that is what the Democratic policy will commit us to if present conditions remain unchanged. At the present time we employ foreign ships to carry over 90 per cent of our exports and imports. The Democrats would have us buy our ships abroad, officer and man them with aliens, in order to solve the problem of an American (?) mercantile marine. The only difference would be that the net earnings of the ships, after all of their expenses had been paid—say 5 per cent—would come into the United States; foreigners would have the remaining 95 per cent of the gross earnings of the ships under the Democratic plan for the rehabilitation of the American mercantile marine. What real benefit, therefore, would it be to the American people, and to the United States as a nation, to have our ships built abroad, officered and manned by aliens? The capitalist only would be benefited by this Democratic free-ship policy; American labor would be benefited nothing whatsoever.

To-day nearly 2,000,000 tons of ships built in alien shipyards by alien labor, employing alien officers and alien crews, and fed according to alien methods are owned by American capital and employed in carrying American exports and imports. Fully one-third the foreign shipping now engaged in doing our foreign carrying is owned by American capital. Has that solved the shipping problem? Not at all. The demand for American shipping is just as insistent as ever. Do you think, sir, that if American capital owned every ton of foreign shipping employed in our foreign carrying trade, the ships all manned by aliens, that the American people would think that the shipping question had been solved? Indeed they would not. But our Democratic friends would seek to solve it by merely displacing the foreign bunting at the peak and replacing it with the American flag.

The free-ship policy of our Democratic friends contemplates nothing that is American for our shipping but the capitalist who owns it and the flag that identifies it. Such a shipping, so owned, so officered, and so manned, masquerading under the American flag, would be intolerable to the American people, and yet that is precisely the way our Democratic friends would solve the question. Not a dollar for American labor; even the bunting at the peak would, probably, under such circumstances, even if fashioned into the Stars and Stripes, be so fashioned by alien hands in alien countries. And yet that is the kind of an American merchant marine that the Democrats offer us. Free ships mean nothing else.

Our Democratic friends can not consistently say that while they would favor buying from aliens the ships we need, they would advocate the employment of Americans to run them. Why would a Democrat be willing to have a foreigner build our ships, but be unwilling to have a foreigner run them? Would the Democrat who is unwilling to protect American labor in the building of the ship be willing to protect American labor in the running of the ship? Is the American workingman in the shipyard unworthy the protection at the hands of the Democrats which they would be willing to extend to the American seaman? No, no! The man who favors free ships—alien-built ships—can not help favoring alien officers and seamen and an alien food scale. That is Democracy's position carried to its logical conclusion—an alien-built, an alien-officered, an alien-manned ship, the men fed according to the skimpy and unwholesome foreign food scale—but owned by American capital! How considerate the Democrats are of the American capitalists, but how inconsiderate they are of American labor, in the mines and in the forests, in the mills and in the factories, in the shipyards and on board the ships! Is that the kind of a solution of the American shipping problem that the American people want? No. Then they do not want Democratic ascendency, because that is the only kind of a solution of the shipping question that Democracy is willing to advocate or that it would agree upon.

And what do the Republicans propose? Their concern is not so great for the capitalist as it is for the workingman. First of all, they insist that when we build up American shipping upon the seas, it must be composed of vessels constructed by American labor, out of American materials. That is the first demand of the Republicans. They will have nothing but that. Then they will require that the ships be officered by American citizens, that the crews shall be composed of American citizens so far as possible, and that the food scale shall be ample and generous, as befits good American citizens. That provided for, then the extra expense of the construction and the operation during the time that our ships are securing the carrying trade will be met by some protective system, just the same as the extra cost of American labor in other fields of industry is now provided for by our protective system.

I am not here at this time, Mr. Chairman, while the bill now pending is up for consideration, to state precisely by what plan the Republican party would cover the seas with American shipping; the method, the plan, the policy by which it is to be accomplished will be left to the commission that the pending bill creates to devise—a plan, a method, or a policy that will be acceptable to the American people, that will be satisfactory to American labor, and yet that will attract American capital into the ships that are needed for our carrying trade.

In 1890 the United States was confronted with the necessity for establishing the tin-plate industry in the United States. At that time aliens supplied practically all of the tin plate that we consumed, and the reason why aliens supplied it was because alien labor produced tin plate more cheaply than American labor could or would produce it. That was a condition of affairs that was entirely satisfactory to our Democratic friends, and they did not wish it disturbed any more than they now wish to have the foreign monopoly of our ocean transportation disturbed. But the Republicans were dissatisfied, and so they determined to build up tin-plate manufacturing in the United States.

Our Democratic friends came along and told us that it would ruin the American consumers of tin plate if they were compelled to buy American-made tin plate, costing so much more than foreign tin plate cost, because the American labor employed in its manufacture would insist upon receiving the American wage standard, a standard far above that received by the foreign tin-plate wage-earner. Nevertheless, Congress went forward under the leadership of the lamented McKinley and placed a high protective duty on imported tin plate. There had been no duty on imported tin plate up to that time. From one end of the country to the other our Democratic friends, who are our free-trade friends as well, insisted that we could not manufacture tin plate. They also insisted that our people could not afford to consume American-made tin plate. The people were fooled into believing the Democrats for a short time—long enough to take William McKinley temporarily out of public life—but the tin-plate manufactories were established, American labor received the American standard of wages in the making of tin plate, the American consumption of tin plate increased.

Everything the Democrats said we could not do we did; everything they said the people would not do, the people did. We have the tin-plate industry now firmly established in this country. We manufacture practically all of the tin plate that we consume. Indeed, we export large quantities of American manufactured tin plate. And all of this has been accomplished because the Republicans gave protection to tin-plate manufacturing in the United States. American materials, American demand, American skill, and American labor have done all the rest. We make our own tin plate; we employ our own labor in making it. The millions we formerly sent to aliens in alien lands to pay them for making tin plate for us we now pay to our own countrymen in the United States; we have the tin plate and we have the money expended for tin plate besides. In the case of shipping it is different: we have the ships, but aliens built them, aliens run them, and aliens own the larger part of them.

What has been done for the tin-plate manufacturers in the United States can be done for American shipbuilders and American shipowners. A way will be found, and there will be neither degradation of American labor nor a reduction in the wages paid to those who produce the materials out of which the ships are built or of those who build the ships or of those who operate them when built.

It has been said that the protection of American shipping meant the enrichment of American millionaire shipbuilders. It has been said that the protection of American shipping also meant the enrichment of wealthy American shipowners; that it was a scheme to still further enrich some one already rich; that it meant the taking of the money out of the Treasury of the United States and the giving of it to "a favored interest" and to a "favored few;" that the people would be robbed for the benefit of the shipbuilders and the shipowners.

What a weak and untruthful statement! If American capital wants to invest in ships it may do so, and it does do so. To be sure, it does not invest in American-built ships. But it invests in foreign-built ships, officered and manned by foreigners, and these ships return a profit to their owners. To be sure, American labor is not benefited by such an investment of American capital, but American capital is benefited. It doesn't matter to the individual American capitalist whether he buys an American or a foreign ship, but it makes a lot of difference to American labor. To-day investment in American-built ships is unprofitable, so the investment is made in the foreign-built ships that are profitable. There is no loss of employment to American capital in such a case—the loss all falls upon American labor. The American capitalist will make no more money out of a protected American-built ship when Congress in its wisdom puts protection upon the American-built ship than he now makes out of his foreign-built ship, because the protection that Congress will give will no more than compensate the American capitalist for the difference to him in the cost of the American-built ship, run by American officers and seamen, as compared with the present cost of a foreign-built ship, officered and manned by aliens. The return to American capital will be just the same, but the return to American labor will be far different.

The denial of protection to American shipping upon the high seas is a continuance of protection for the alien shipbuilders and alien shipowners who now enjoy the larger part of our foreign carrying—all but a fraction of it. So long as the Democrats are able to prevent Republicans from protecting American ships in the foreign trade, so long the Democrats continue to protect foreign shipowners in our foreign trade.

When the American shipping question is solved, when it is settled right, the workingmen of the United States will be the beneficiaries, not the capitalists. American capital suffers no loss because Congress denies protection to American ships upon the ocean; but American labor suffers a great loss, and the United States suffers a great loss, every year in the hundreds of millions of dollars that it expends upon foreign ships, foreign officers, and seamen.

The denial of protection to American shipping merely serves to withhold investment from American shipping. Capital finds investment in protected and in profitable industries instead, and American labor suffers the loss of employment in shipbuilding and in the running of ships. It is a clear, a plain, and a simple proposition.

I might extend my remarks further, Mr. Speaker. I might point out the loss the United States as a nation suffers through the employment of alien ships and alien officers and seamen. It can not be gainsaid that merchant ships and seamen are a part of the auxiliary naval equipment; merchant ships and seamen are essential resources of the national defense. We are weak, lacking merchant ships and seamen—weak in a military as well as in a commercial and in a maritime sense. On the other hand, our neglect of our shipping strengthens and fortifies our rivals with auxiliaries for their national defense. We fortify them with merchant ships and seamen; we strengthen their naval equipment while we keep our own weak.

The money paid to foreign shipowners for doing our foreign carrying helps to build foreign ships and to make experienced seamen, and those ships and those seamen form a resource of naval auxiliary strength for our rivals. This the nation suffers because protection is denied to our ships upon the sea. We protect all of our great industries that are subject to foreign competition but our ships. All of our great industries that are protected prosper. Our shipping, that is unprotected, has steadily declined and is still declining.

Other nations not only have the benefit of more cheaply built ships and more poorly paid officers and seamen than we have, but their governments come to their aid through subsidies and bounties and in many different ways, the aggregate of the national aid to the merchant shipping of different countries amounting to close to $30,000,000 a year. If unprotected American ships can not successfully compete with more cheaply built and more cheaply officered and manned foreign ships, how much harder the competition becomes when these cheaply built and cheaply run foreign ships are fortified with vast sums from the national treasuries of the different countries that possess a mercantile marine of their own.

I repeat that the whole question of American shipping—the great unsolved American problem—is merely a question of American labor. If we protect our shipping, we give employment to American labor. If we deny protection to our shipping, we continue to employ, and thus protect, foreign shipping. We have our choice of refusing to protect our own ships and protecting foreign ships in our trade, or of protecting our ships and thus supplanting foreign ships in our trade. I submit, as a part of my remarks, a series of documents put forth by the officers of the American Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders, showing their interest in the building up of American shipping in the foreign trade.

KANSAS CITY, KANS., February 23, 1904.

Mr. ROBERT MCARTHUR,
Newport News, Va.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: Herewith please find a statement regarding three bills now pending in Congress, the passage of which would be of immediate and lasting help to boiler makers and iron-ship builders. Will you see that the statement is read at the next meeting of your lodge? As a precaution I am sending copies to other officers of your lodge, making the same request.

I also inclose form of resolution which I suggest that your lodge adopt, copies to be forwarded to the two Senators and the Member of the House of Representatives who represent your State and District in Congress, the copies so forwarded bearing the signature of your officers and the seal of your lodge.

I can not too strongly urge you to appoint committees to bring the resolutions to the attention of other lodges of other trades in your neighborhood, and that these other lodges be asked to adopt a similar resolution and forward copies to Washington to each Senator and the Representative of your district.

Please see that the newspapers in your locality are supplied with copies of the resolution you adopt for publication.

I shall greatly thank you to promptly advise me of the action taken by your lodge.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN MCNEIL,
Grand President, Organizer.

Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders of America. An address to officers and members regarding bills now before Congress that would give work to American boiler makers and iron-ship builders.

To the officers and members, greeting:

Boiler makers and iron-ship builders will all be interested in three great measures before Congress of great importance to them. These are: (1) Representative GARDNER'S bill, known as "House of Representatives bill No. 7050," introduced for the purpose of "creating a commission to consider and recommend legislation for the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes;" (2) Senator FRYE'S bill, known as "Senate bill No. 2259," the purpose of which is "to regulate shipping in trade between the ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes," and (3) Senator FRYE'S bill, known as "Senate bill No. 2263," the object of which is "to require the employment of vessels of the United States for public purposes"—that is to say, for the carriage of the war and naval stores of the United States.

Each of these bills, if enacted, will be of lasting benefit to every boiler maker and iron-ship builder in the United States. Their enactment will give increased employment to men of our craft, will help to increase their wages, and will help to secure a reduction in the hours of labor. For these reasons every lodge of the Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders of America should immediately petition its Senators and Representatives in Congress, by formal resolution, to vote for their passage. Resolutions are inclosed herewith, suitable for your use, which, after being adopted and filled in, should be at once mailed to each of your Senators and to your Representative in Congress.

There should be more than 500 of these resolutions in the hands of Senators and Representatives from our different lodges during the next month. These bills are not urged for the purpose of helping any political party, but for the purpose of giving our members more work.

The purposes of the bills referred to may be briefly stated as follows:

THE GARDNER SHIPPING-COMMISSION BILL.

The people of the United States all desire the upbuilding of American shipping; they only differ as to the plan or method by which to do it. Our foreign trade last year amounted to $2,500,000,000 in value, of which American vessels carried $200,000,000 and foreign vessels $2,300,000,000. Foreign vessels earned in freights fully $300,000,000. This money was drawn from the United States and was largely used in employing aliens in foreign shipyards to build the vessels for the foreign carrying trade of the United States that the members of our craft might far better have been employed in building. Representative GARDNER's bill provides for the appointment of a commission to consider this subject and recommend proper legislation for giving the building of the vessels our foreign trade employs into the hands of our own people. The commission is to report to Congress at the beginning of the next session, in December of this year. This bill is drawn directly in the interest of the members of our Brotherhood, and its enactment should be asked for by every lodge.

THE FRYE PHILIPPINES SHIPPING BILL.

From the foundation of the Government of the United States the carrying trade between the several States has been exclusively reserved for American vessels. As new territory has been acquired, the carrying trade between it and the rest of the United States has been reserved for American vessels. When Alaska, the Hawaiian Islands, and Porto Rico successively became possessions of the United States their trade with the rest of the United States was reserved for American vessels. This has given employment to American shipyards, which have been called upon to supply new ships, and that has given employment to our boiler makers and iron-ship builders. The Frye bill now proposes that the trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands shall be reserved for American vessels, and if this is done it will be sure to give additional employment to men of our craft in American shipyards. Each of our lodges should ask Congress to pass this bill.

THE FRYE GOVERNMENT-SUPPLY SHIPPING BILL.

Foreign vessels at present carry nearly all of the war and naval stores of the United States to distant parts of the world. No other great nation employs foreign vessels for this purpose. They all employ vessels of their own nationality. The Frye bill proposes that our Government war and naval stores shall be carried only in American vessels. Its passage will still further increase the employment for men of our craft in American shipyards, for which reason it should be urged for passage by every lodge in this brotherhood.

FOREIGN SHIPPING AGENTS ARE OPPOSING THESE BILLS.

The agents in the United States of foreign shipping are opposing the passage of these bills because, they claim, it will drive foreign vessels out of our trade and install American vessels in their places! Isn't that a good reason why members of our craft should support these bills? The agents of foreign shipping also claim that there are not enough American vessels to do the business that these bills would take away from foreign ships. But they do not claim that there are not enough American shipbuilders to build the ships that will be needed. The agents of foreign shipowners have pointed out the very best of reasons why members of this brotherhood should unite as one man in favor of the passage of these bills.

EMPLOYMENT BUT NOT POLITICS IN THESE BILLS.

These are not political bills; they are not partisan bills; they are bills that will give employment to American vessels, and the members of our craft will have the building of them. All we ask is that they should be speedily passed. We want work at our trade in the United States. These bills, if enacted, will give us more work. On this account every lodge should work for their prompt passage.

OTHER TRADES UNIONS SHOULD BE ASKED TO HELP.

If each lodge of our brotherhood would appoint committees of active members to visit other lodges of other trades, in their neighborhood, and point out to them that the passage of these three bills would give employment not alone to members of our craft, but to members of almost every other trade as well, they should be able to secure many additional resolutions, copies of which should be forwarded to Senators and Representatives in Congress. Remember that "in shipping all trades are united," wherefore all trades should unite to petition the Congress of the United States to pass all measures that will cause the building of our merchant ships in the United States.

LET LOCAL NEWSPAPERS PUBLISH YOUR RESOLUTIONS.

As soon as you have adopted resolutions as suggested, and have forwarded copies to your two Senators and your Representatives in Congress, send copies to the newspapers in your locality with the request that they be published. By this means other trades will be informed of your action, and indorsements of these bills may be made more general, and therefore Congressional action for their enactment hastened.

JOHN MCNEIL,
Grand President-Organizer of the Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders of America.

KANSAS CITY, KANS., February 20, 1904.

[Copy of letter sent to every Senator and Representative in Congress.]

DEAR SIR: In the name of 24,000 American workingmen, members of the Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders of America, with 500 lodges in as many different parts of the United States, I most respectfully ask you to support the following bills now pending in Congress, on the sole ground that their passage will mean more work for our members at their trade:

Senate bill 2259, to regulate shipping in the trade between the ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Islands, and House bill 12222, which is the same thing; Senate bill 2253, for the carriage of Government war and naval stores in American vessels, and House bill 16139, which is the same thing; and House bill 7056, creating a commission to consider and recommend legislation for the development of the American merchant marine.

We are not interested in trusts, combinations, or monopolies; we have neither political nor partisan interest in these bills; we want them passed because they mean work for us at our trade.

American shipbuilders can not build ships as cheaply in the United States as foreign ships are built, largely because the wages men of our craft receive are far higher than obtain in foreign shipyards and boiler shops. We stand for the American standard of wages and of living and are better citizens because we enjoy them. We want no diminution in our wages and no reduction in our style of living, but we want to stand, as do workingmen in other trades, on the American level. They are able to do so, largely because our Government protects them against the free competition of foreign products. Our ships in the deep-sea trade are unprotected, and so can not compete with foreign ships. Congress should remedy this condition, and this we ask. The bills above named will help. Wherefore we again appeal to you to work and vote for them in the interest of American workingmen.

Very respectfully, yours,

JOHN MCNEIL,
Grand President-Organizer
Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders of America.

The following document was printed some years ago as an editorial in the Knights of Labor Journal, published in Washington, D. C.:

LABOR'S INTEREST IN SHIPPING.

One of the most pressing needs of the hour is that of reviving our shipping in the foreign carrying trade. Of our foreign commerce, worth nearly $2,000,000,000 annually, less than 10 per cent is now carried in American vessels. This almost utter lack of seagoing shipping and seamen, accentuated as it was during our recent war with Spain, has commanded for this subject more widespread attention than has been accorded to any other of the great economic and industrial questions during recent years. At the last session of the Fifty-fifth Congress there was a bill introduced in each branch identical in form, and which was intended to encourage American citizens to invest in home-built ships for the carriage of our imports and exports, and the further object of which is to attract our young men back into the seafaring careers their fathers abandoned a generation ago.

That bill was favorably reported by each of the proper committees in each branch of Congress, in the Senate without any opposition whatever, and it is the general belief that it would have been passed without a doubt but for the lengthy consideration of the peace treaty. There is no measure that has been before Congress since the close of the civil war that is so full of promise to American labor in every branch than this same shipping bill.

We believe there is no point of view from which we can consider this subject that will be of deeper interest to our readers and to the American people generally than from the view point of American labor. What we shall say, therefore, will bear more particularly upon that part of the subject.

To those who have made even a superficial study of our maritime condition it must be quickly manifest that were it not for our domestic water-borne commerce, and the system under which it flourishes, it is probable that shipbuilding, as well as shipowning, would be extinct American industries.

It seems not to be generally known that the statistics of the last census show that in 1889 there were 32,059 vessels of all kinds, of a gross tonnage of 8,603,489 tons, and valued at $220,774,250, owned in the United States, yet that is the fact. Of this vast aggregation only 1,681 vessels of 1,021,595 tons, valued at $44,394,703, were engaged in our foreign trade. During the census year of 1889—just ten years ago—our American vessels in the foreign trade carried 14.3 per cent of the imports and exports of the United States, while during 1898 only 9.3 per cent of our foreign commerce was carried in American vessels—a falling off of 5 per cent in nine years. The number of American vessels thus employed in 1898 was 1,135, of 737,709 tons—a decline since 1889 of one-third in the number and in the tonnage of our vessels so employed.

This phenomenal falling off in American shipping engaged in the foreign carrying trade can not be accounted for by any decline in the volume or value of our exports and imports during the last nine years. On the contrary, our foreign commerce increased from $1,487,533,027 in 1889 to $1,847,355,109 in value in 1898—or more than 24 per cent.

During the same time vessel entries from foreign ports increased from 13,311,652 tons in 1889 to 20,002,639 tons in 1897—an increase of nearly 50 per cent in the tonnage employed in carrying our imports and exports—during which time the number and tonnage of vessels under the American flag in that carrying decreased one-third! These are hard official statistics, which tell our people truths of momentous import, and which they must heed lest our last remaining but rapidly vanishing remnant of shipping be swept from the high seas.

The Eleventh Census report shows that in 1889 there were 114,736 persons employed "making ordinary crews on all operating craft" in the United States, to whom were paid in wages $41,729,842—an average per employee of $364 during that year.

The total gross earnings of all vessels owned in the United States amounted, in 1889, to $166,838,776, with expenses amounting to $130,237,970, for wages, food, fuel, repairs, and all purposes, with net earnings of $36,580,806. This, of course, includes American vessels engaged in the foreign trade. We find a total of 7,040 sail and steam vessels of 2,072,270 tons, valued at $94,540,002, were employed in carrying passengers and freight upon the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts and waters tributary thereto, which vessels employed 58,180 men, to whom were paid $19,500,821, or an average of $335 per man, in 1889. This particular branch of shipping affords a basis for comparisons that will enable us to ascertain at least approximately what American labor loses through the employment of foreign-built ships and alien crews for the carriage of over 90 per cent of our foreign commerce.

We have now employed in our foreign trade 294,064 tons of steamers and 443,645 tons of sailing vessels of a value of $26,276,964 and $14,480,593, respectively, or a total of $40,757,557. In 1898 these were the vessels that carried 9.3 per cent of our imports and exports. In 1892 Capt. William W. Bates, who had shortly before retired from the office of United States Commissioner of Navigation, published an exhaustive work on "American Marine," which is devoted almost altogether to the rise and decline of our shipping in the foreign trade. He calculates the tonnage required for the carriage of our foreign commerce in 1891 and arrives at the following:

"An estimate of our shipping necessities for the present year may be fixed at 1,200,000 tons of sail and 3,000,000 of steam. To increase the shipping we now have in the foreign trade to this amount would require an outlay of $300,000,000. Under due protection, with this preparation made, we might command a business of $2,000,000,000, a vanishing fraction of which is now barely possible of attainment."

In that year 30 per cent of the entries at our ports were sail vessels, while to-day only 20 per cent is of sail.

Moreover, the tonnage our foreign commerce employs has increased by one-third since 1891. It is conceded that a steam vessel is able to carry in a year three times as much as a sail vessel of identical size. If, therefore, we add but 100,000 tons to the sail-vessel estimate to meet the increased need since Captain Bates wrote, we shall probably concede at least all of that type and more that is likely to be built, and if we reduce the remaining 300,000 tons of sail to make up the one-third of increase since 1891 to 100,000 tons of steam—the equivalent of 300,000 tons of sail—and add one-third to the steam tonnage estimated by Captain Bates, our shipping necessities to-day would be as follows:

	Tons.
Sail vessels	1,500,000
Steam vessels	4,100,000
Total	5,400,000

Deducting from the above the tonnage under our flag in the foreign trade, we would require the following additional tonnage if American ships wholly superseded all foreign ships in our foreign trade:

	Tons.
Sail vessels	856,355
Steam vessels	3,805,936
Total	4,662,291

As a matter of fact, existing American shipyards could not construct that tonnage much within twenty years, at which time our shipping necessities would probably have again doubled. But there is nothing except the demand for the ships to prevent enormous increases in our shipbuilding facilities.

The census report of the average value of the steam and sail vessels engaged in carrying passengers and freight, above referred to as the basis for our computations and comparisons, places the value of our steam vessels on the Atlantic and Gulf at a fraction less than $76 per ton, and sail vessels in that trade at a fraction under $31 a ton. The values on the Pacific coast are much higer, but these we exclude from our comparisons in order to be conservative.

We also have assumed for comparison purposes, and to be fair, that there has been a reduction of about 12 per cent in the cost of vessels, wherefore we place the probable cost of new steam tonnage at $67 and of sail at $27 per ton. To supply the additional tonnage that would be necessary to carry all of our foreign commerce under our own flag would involve the following expenditures in American shipyards:

856,355 tons of sail vessels, at $27 per ton	$22,121,585
3,805,936 tons of steam vessels, at $67 per ton	254,997,712
4,662,291 tons of sail and steam vessels	277,119,297

American labor would, from the mine and forest to the finished ship and through all the processes to which the raw material would be subjected, receive about 95 per cent of that vast sum if the ships our foreign commerce employs were built in the United States. But that sum we are now paying to foreign shipowners, who, in turn, expended it in the employment of aliens in foreign shipyards and on board foreign ships.

Assuming this tonnage to be in existence, under the American flag, let us see what that would mean in employment to Americans on board the ships: Basing our comparisons on the same vessels we have previously used, from the last census, we find that for each 26 tons of steam and for each 41 tons of sail vessels one man was employed, respectively. On steam, the average rate of wages, including all on board, was $443.70 per year; and on sail, the yearly compensation per man was $300, including all hands. On this basis our present 294,064 tons of steam vessels engaged in the foreign trade employ 11,310 men, who earn, in the aggregate, $5,018,247 a year; and on the 487,939 tons of sail vessels in our foreign trade, on the same basis of calculation, 11,901 men were employed and who received, in the aggregate, $3,570,300 in the year, an annual total in wages paid to the 23,211 men now employed, under the American flag, in the foreign trade, of $8,588,547.

If American ships did all our foreign carrying, and in the proportion of sail to steam we have estimated, the additional steam vessels would require 146,382 men, whose compensation would average annually $443.70, or a total of $64,949,693; and the sailing vessels would require 20,887 additional men, who would receive, at the annual rate of $300 per man, a total in a year of $6,226,100. Put in another way, the employment of foreign ships to carry American foreign commerce deprives 167,269 American officers, seamen, and firemen of employment that would net them annually an aggregate of $71,215,793. It must be borne in mind that men on shipboard are fed at owners' expense. Estimating that the average cost per man per diem for food would be 30 cents, the additional expense for food foots up to $18,405,955.50 per year, or a total for wages and food aggregating $89,621,748.50 a year, all of which is now received by foreigners and paid for by American producers and consumers, respectively, of our imports and exports.

Of course we have stated the extreme case. We have shown that if our foreign carrying were wholly in the hands of our own people, as is our domestic carrying, we would be one of the greatest, if not the greatest, maritime nations on earth. But in no event is it probable that American ships will secure the carrying of all of our imports and exports. But that we should carry more than 9.3 per cent all will concede. Whatever proportion of the shipbuilding, shipowning, and ship employment our own people should secure, our readers may figure out from the data we have furnished, to show them just what it would mean in money retained and employment given in the United States.

It will be seen from what we have shown that our domestic commerce is in a state of magnificent development and gratifying prosperity in every branch. The system under which this growth and prosperity have been possible is the system which absolutely excludes foreign ships from participation in our domestic trade. That trade is reserved exclusively for American-built and American-owned vessels.

In that department of our marine Americans are in absolute control. From the mine and forest to the shipyard and on board the finished ship American labor enjoys the employment. One hundred per cent of our domestic commerce is carried in American vessels, and it is carried cheaper than similar commerce is carried anywhere else in the world—the result of competition between our own people.

Contrast the splendid condition of our domestic commerce with that of our foreign commerce. Foreign ships are permitted under our laws to enjoy every privilege accorded to American vessels in our import and export carrying, except that of American registry. There is perfect free trade in the carriage of our foreign commerce, with the result that 9.3 per cent of that commerce is carried by American and all the rest by foreign ships. The fact that our laws deny our registry to foreign-built ships does not debar our citizens from owning foreign-built ships and running them in our foreign trade.

In fact it is admitted that between two and three hundred thousand tons of foreign-built ships are owned by American citizens to-day. Being built cheaper and run cheaper than our American ships are, what incentive is there for such American owners to place them under our flag, and thus increase the expense of running them? Who hears of the owners of these foreign-built ships asking Congress to admit them to our registry?

The mere "sentiment" of seeing the American flag flying over his foreign-built and foreign-manned ship will not persuade an American business man to seek an American register for her when the inevitable result will be largely increased expense of operation, and which in a short time would give his business to his foreign competitors under foreign flags. The American rate of wages and the American scale of food are not enjoyed on board any ships under foreign flags.

There are two ways of attempting to remedy the present condition of our marine in the foreign trade: (1) To grant American register to foreign-built ships and permit them to be officered and manned by foreigners, with a scale of food down to the level of foreign scales. We shall be interested to learn what there is in that proposition to secure the advocacy and support of American labor. American labor can only be interested in or favor ships built in home shipyards. Aliens seem to be fully able to take care of themselves. (2) The other way is to compensate American citizens for the extra expense involved in buying American-built ships and employing and feeding American seamen according to American standards of wages and food. To the extent that this is done effectively to that extent our own people will reach out and gather to themselves a larger share of our foreign carrying than we now enjoy. Whether we shall continue to pay foreign shipowners $200,000,000 for carrying our imports and exports or pay it to our own citizens will depend upon the extent to which the Government of the United States will make shipowning in the foreign trade sufficiently attractive to induce American capital to invest.

If this policy is pursued, then American mines and forests, American transportation agencies, American mills and factories, American merchants and farmers, American shipbuilders and American shipmasters, seamen, engineers, and firemen will secure employment where aliens are now employed at our expense.

The shipping bill before Congress states in its preamble that it is "to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary." The passage of that bill will restore a large share of our foreign carrying to our own citizens, who will have the ships built by American labor and then officered and manned by Americans, and to that extent keep the money at home now spent abroad. For the compensation to American shipowners that will be necessary under this bill—estimated by our Commissioner of Navigation to average from $5,000,000 to $6,000,000 a year for twelve or fifteen years—the United States Government will be building up auxiliary cruisers and training possible future seamen for the Navy in the always possible contingency of war.

And of what good, we may inquire, would foreign-built ships, manned by alien subjects, be to this country in such an emergency? Our readers must know that foreign governments, recognizing the national protection and military value of merchant ships and seamen, now pay them, in subsidies and bounties and in compensation to merchant seamen enrolled in their naval reserves, $26,000,000 annually. How will it be possible for unaided American ships, costing more to construct and operate, to compete with these subsidized and bountied ships and naval-reserve seamen, unless our Government also recognizes the military and naval value of merchant ships and seamen and, like other rival powers, pays for them as a resource for national defense?

It is the present condition of our shipping on the seas that keeps the United States so perilously exposed in that quarter; it is this condition which persuaded Spain that there was a chance for her to cope with the United States, and which, as a consequence, has cost this nation hundreds of millions of dollars; it is this condition that, if continued, will one day place this nation at the mercy of some great power; it is this condition which the above referred to shipping bill, if passed, will remedy, by providing for the national defense a bulwark and resource of strength where now only weakness exists, by using America's boundless resources and our skilled and intelligent workingmen to bring the iron and coal and timber from the mines and forests and fashion them into ships, which ships shall employ our own citizens and thus make of the United States as great a power upon the sea as it is upon the land. For every dollar the nation pays out for this purpose it secures immunity from foreign attack; for every dollar paid out by the Government American labor will receive ten in return. The increased ships will mean reduced freights, and the reduction is likely to be greater than the payment from the National Treasury; reduced freights mean greater opportunities to dispose of our exports at a profit, and this means additional employment in mine, forest, factory, and farm.

If it be said that the shipping bill lets in a large number of foreign-built ships to American registry, let the truth be known. It is considered desirable that such of our citizens as are experienced in owning and operating ships in the foreign trade should be persuaded to become the owners of American ships, built in our home shipyards and manned by our own citizens, so that we may the more rapidly acquire the strength upon the seas so essential to our national safety. Such owners of foreign ships, the total of which would not supply 5 per cent of the shipping our foreign commerce employs, are permitted to register their vessels under our flag, on condition that they contract to build tonnage in American shipyards equal to that so admitted.

There will be immediate employment for Americans on board these ships, and they will be the means of giving our shipyards a considerable amount of new constructions, the benefits of which largely accrue to American labor. The admission of foreign-built ships is only a temporary matter. The bill does not permit Americans to now go abroad and buy foreign ships and register them as American; it only admits such foreign-built ships as are owned, to the amount of 80 per cent, by Americans, and were so owned on December 1, 1898; and it also lets in such few ships as may now be under construction for Americans in foreign shipyards, only on condition, however, of 100 per cent as much new tonnage being contracted for in American shipyards as is so admitted.

We have a chance under this bill to place an American merchant marine in the foreign trade upon a basis of development and prosperity approximating to that of our domestic merchant marine, and unless we mistake our men every workingman in the United States will do all in his power to secure the passage of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I also desire to submit as part of my remarks articles in the Marine Review, Cleveland, Ohio, on "Our foreign merchant marine," by Harvey D. Goulder, of the Lake Carriers' Association, published April 21, 1904, and on "Labor's concern with shipping," by John McNeil, president of the Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders of America, published March 10, 1904.

OUR FOREIGN MERCHANT MARINE.

[By Harvey D. Goulder, of the Lake Carriers' Association.]

In February last the steamer Manchuria, for the Pacific over-sea trade, was launched in the Delaware River. She is the last steamer under construction in the United States for the foreign trade, and on high authority I can say that there is not a contract to-day for any ship designed for our foreign trade. Our consul at Bergen, the principal port of Norway, imposed fines which had several years before been repealed by Congress.

In extenuation he said: "The fact that I have been consul here for fifteen years and that this is the only American vessel that I have seen may be some excuse for my ignorance of the law." Last year in the trade between the United States and Europe not one American vessel entered or cleared for Germany, Russia, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, the Netherlands, Italy, Austria, Hungary, or Greece. The United States has a coast line approximating 10,000 miles. It is by nature the premier maritime country in the world. It should also be the principal shipbuilding and shipowning nation in the world. It is among the least of the nations in the foreign carrying trade. It is patent that this condition is not natural but abnormal, and must be the result of artificial influence. The maritime development of the United States should be loose-limbed, free-grown, and giant-like under normal conditions. In fact, it is a dwarf. A great national influence has been unwittingly exerted to restrain the development of American shipping. The Federal Government has conferred the benefits of protection upon every industry except our foreign shipping. To make one great exception to the list puts upon the industry so excepted a tremendous handicap, for it has to fight not alone the directly aided shipping of other nations, but the burden of added cost of construction and operation as an inevitable consequence of protection extended to other trades. American shipping is suffering because it has been discriminated against.

The exports from this country for the last year reported, ending June 30, 1903, were $1,420,141,679; the imports for that year were $1,025,719,237, a grand total of $2,445,860,916; the freights paid for transporting these goods were approximately $200,000,000. In American ships we carried a little less than 8 per cent of the exports and less than 6 per cent of the imports. Of the $200,000,000 of freight paid for the transaction of business with this country, American shipowners and the seamen employed on their ships received less than $16,000,000. Of the seamen employed even in this meager share of the business, 31 per cent were native-born Americans, 10 per cent were naturalized citizens, and the remainder were foreigners.

It was not always so. As far back as 1838 we built in this country 105 steamers of 24,000 tons, while Great Britain built 84 steamers of 9,500 tons. From that year, which perhaps distinctly marks the beginning of commercial steam navigation, until 1860, our total tonnage engaged in foreign trade increased over 3,250,000 tons against an increase in the United Kingdom of a little over 2,200,000 tons, and the totals were then for the United States, 5,353,868 tons against for the United Kingdom the total of 4,586,742 tons. In steam tonnage during that time we distinctly surpassed, and the figures came to be nearly double in our favor. Up to 1860 the United States made more rapid and extensive progress than Great Britain in the general application of steam to the purposes of navigation. Then Great Britain began to gain superiority by applying steam to the foreign trade, particularly regarding ocean mail service.

In one decade they paid $52,000,000 to steamship lines, an amount very much greater than the first cost of the steamships so aided. It is beyond dispute that a leading cause of British ascendancy as a commercial maritime power was due to the aid given to and the influence exercised by steamship lines extending her trade to all the ports of the world. Illustrative of this is the fact that Great Britain pays in postal subsidies and admiralty subventions more than $6,000,000 a year, while the United States last year paid a trifle less than $1,000,000 for carrying the mails.

I have tabulated by decades, from 1821 to 1901, the foreign carrying trade of the United States and the percentage carried in American vessels. The total in 1821 was a little over 27,500,000. In 1901 it reached a total of over 2,150,000,000. In 1821 we carried in American ships nearly 89 per cent of this, and in 1901 a trifle over 8 per cent. The progression is still downward, and in 1903 we carried a somewhat smaller percentage.

Taking other figures. In 1791 our vessels engaged in the foreign trade had considerably more than three times the tonnage of those of the coasting trade. In 1861 the figures were nearer even, being practically 2,500,000 in foreign and 2,700,000 in the coasting trade. In 1901 we had in foreign trade 879,000 tons against 4,500,000 in the coasting trade. I present these figures to show that not only has the percentage of traffic declined, but there has been an absolute decline in the number and in the ton capacity of ships engaged in our foreign trade. In 1901 we had only one-third the tonnage which we employed in foreign trade forty years before, while the value of the products taken to and from the United States in the same period increased nearly fourfold.

The approximate total amount paid for freightage on the goods taken from this country and brought here is $200,000,000, of which American ships received less than 8 per cent. Here is an industry inseparably connected with our country which, aside from any sentimental or broad international question, presents this fact: We are paying for the carriage of our goods $184,000,000 to foreigners and the paltry sum of $16,000,000 to our own people. But the condition is more far-reaching. The ships which carry the products and manufactures of our country and our imports are built abroad. Shipyards in other countries are teeming with industry. There does not exist in the United States to-day even a contract for construction of a ship for this service.

Put in another way, we are building up an efficient navy. Our people seem disposed to go almost any length in furnishing money for a magnificent navy which shall be a pride and source of strength and glory to the United States, but as matter of fact the Government on its men-of-war and other vessels to-day actually employs more men than are engaged in the entire foreign marine service whose protection is the first office and justification of a navy in any maritime country. Primarily because a nation is maritime, because it has a commerce to protect as well as foster, it has a navy. You do not hear of the navy of a nonmaritime nation. In assisting and maintaining the peace of the world your daily reading of the newspapers will teach that we contribute more than we receive; that we do not receive our proportion of definite and actual aid because we have not the merchant marine and merchant establishments in proportion with other nations.

It is remarkable that this question should be so bandied about as it has been with such failure of result. While it has been under discussion in political platforms and has been urged upon the attention of Congress persistently in Presidential messages and the humiliating condition pressed upon the attention of the lawmakers and of the people, the condition has been growing worse for fifty years, and never was worse than at this moment. All this time the conditions which are conducive to the building up of our foreign merchant marine have been rapidly growing and increasing until the desirability—I would rather say the necessity—was never so great or the time so opportune as at this moment.

To my mind the important thing to-day is to bring the people of the United States to realize that great and magnificent as are the advantages of the building of ships in the United States, and the payment of freights to American owners and to American seamen, this almost may be said to be insignificant compared with the national advantages judged upon the broader monetary standpoint and on lines of national safety.

Does it not mean something that the manufacturer of harvesting machinery in Ohio to attain the best delivery in South America must and does ship his goods first to Liverpool? Is it not significant that a President of the United States in a message to Congress should state that delegates from South American countries coming to the United States for purposes of conference to extend and enlarge trade relations with South America should be obliged to come from South America to New York by way of Europe? Yet this is the case.

Great Britain and Germany and France have established lines of regular communication very much over the world. Their merchants and their customers in foreign places may rely upon regularity not only of mail service but in the delivery of goods. Our merchants can not do this. We have fostered the manufacturing and agricultural industries of this country wisely, as shown in magnificent results. That we have burst the bonds of home market and home consumption; that we are coming to, if we have not reached, the position of the world's manufactory, results from our abundant natural resources and the energy and progressiveness of our people, and, as abundantly shown in consular reports, we have simply pushed our foreign trade against every commercial drawback in its carrying. A general war in Europe would paralyze our industries, because, while we might have everything to supply an increased demand, about 93 per cent of what we had to sell must be carried in ships of one or the other warring nation.

It is a matter at once for pride and humiliation that we find in the last report of the Commissioner of Navigation that in the last ten years the tonnage engaged in the domestic commerce of the United States has increased more than 1,250,000 tons, with an actual decrease in foreign tonnage of some 4,000 tons.

It is a source of pride to us locally that practically one-half of the increase has been upon the Great Lakes. It is time for the people of the entire country to realize that this matter of foreign merchant marine is not a mere question of the profit of a shipbuilder or a shipowner; that it is not local to any seaport, but concerns the nation.

The question will be asked, "Why, if there is so much business, are not the ships built and employed?" Three reasons are advanced: First, it is claimed, and more or less spiritedly disputed, that the initial cost of building a ship is greater in the United States than in some foreign countries. Second, it is indisputable that by reason of higher wages, better food, and other conditions the cost of operating a ship under the American flag is higher than in English ships, and the operating expense of Norwegian and Italian ships is still less. Third, subsidies and subventions obtain in other countries, one of the last being the arrangement between the English Government and the Cunard Steamship Line by which, in addition to an annual subsidy, brought up to $1,101,000, there is advanced to that company $13,000,000 at 2½ per cent interest for the construction of two ships larger and better than anything afloat, with an arrangement that they shall be so constructed as to be convertible into cruisers and at command for naval purposes whenever demanded.

Taking up these three reasons for a bare moment's consideration: What is often erroneously referred to as raw materials in shipbuilding are angle irons and shapes ready for the construction, but into which, as a matter of fact, more than 90 per cent of the cost up to the shipyard is for labor. Iron ore in the ground is raw material. The shapes and beams and plates are 90 per cent the product of labor. It is conceded that we can furnish these as cheaply as any country in the world, notwithstanding the higher wages paid in this country. It is claimed that by reason of the higher wages of shipwrights in this country the price of building is approximately 20 per cent higher than in foreign countries. This is denied, and I once heard Mr. Cramp say that he could compete in the world's markets in the building of ships.

In respect to higher wages and better conditions on American ships, this, to my mind, is a serious obstacle to unaided private enterprise building up our merchant marine. On the Great Lakes we have what we proudly regard as the first business fleet in the world. We pay the highest wages, and men are better housed, better fed, find all their conditions better than in any other merchant marine. This trade has been built up under the laws which gave to American citizens the exclusive privilege of trading between American ports. If in the beginning, or years ago, this trade had been opened to foreign competition, we would have had the cheaply built and cheaply operated foreign vessels. We would never have had the fleet we have, nor the service we have, nor anything like so low a rate of freight which here on the Lakes is claimed to be the lowest in the world, despite our fine ships, high wages, and good conditions of the men. The same thing is largely true in the coasting trade.

Joining the possibly cheaper construction, the certain cheaper operation, with the subsidies, subventions, and other awards granted by foreign governments to their merchant marine, the cold logic of facts and results shows that American capital will not go into ships to inaugurate what at the beginning must be an unequal contest. Every citizen in this country is interested vitally in having a foreign merchant marine which shall measurably give us in peace or in war control of our shipments and imports, which shall give us established routes and definite communication with foreign ports, of which those of South America and the Far East are coming to be of vast importance. This American movement would be successful if it could be put on its feet. I do not care, except as a matter of success, whether it be by any of the means which have been suggested so long as something effective is done. I would not advocate the doing of anything in that direction if I believed that it had to be indefinitely continued.

I have such confidence in American genius and enterprise as to believe that if we could, pursuing the same or better policies than those which other nations have found successful, get our merchant marine on its feet and started, that the same results would be achieved in the foreign trade as have been in our domestic trade. When we were on even terms, America was the mistress of the seas. In this country we are furnishing a domestic transportation by water and by land lower, you will find, than anywhere else in the world. Recently I heard James J. Hill, in an address before a committee of Congress, give a comparative statement of the cost of moving a ton of freight 100 miles. He gave the statistics of various European countries and showed for this country less than one-half of the lowest price in any European country. So that whether we take it by land or by water, notwithstanding our larger wages, our larger apparent cost of operation, we have succeeded in producing the lowest price for transportation in the world. I know of no reason why, if our foreign merchant marine were rehabilitated under the great American doctrine of protection, or if in any manner given a chance to get upon its feet, we would not in due and reasonable course reach the period where it would be self-sustaining.

LABOR'S CONCERN WITH SHIPPING—A PLEA FOR PROTECTION FOR AMERICAN DEEP-SEA SHIPPING IN ORDER THAT 30,000 WORKINGMEN MAY BE GIVEN EMPLOYMENT IN AMERICAN SHIPYARDS.

[By John McNeil, president of the Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders of America.]

I am the president of an organization of American workingmen all of whom are dependent upon shipbuilding for their livelihood. We have a membership of 30,000, scattered over the country among 500 different lodges. We are mostly concerned in securing work at our trade. There were never so many of our members seeking employment at their trade as there are to-day. Fully 20,000, or two-thirds, of our members are looking for work at their trade. If the United States built all of the ships that are employed in the deep-sea trade of the United States, there would be 100,000 of our craftsmen steadily employed where to-day not to exceed 10,000 men are so employed. Between fifty and one hundred millions of dollars now annually spent in foreign shipyards, employing foreign shipbuilders in the building of ships to keep up the tonnage required for the carrying of the foreign commerce of the United States, would be spent in the United States and paid out to men of our craft if we built the ships we need ourselves.

No one can say, therefore, that the shipping question is not an acute one with the Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders; no one can say that I, as president of this organization, am invading the field of politics or discussing a partisan question from a political point of view when I add my voice to an appeal to Congress for legislation that shall give employment to the idle men of our craft—that shall give work and wages to 20,000 idle boiler makers and shipbuilders in the United States and food and comfort to their families. I make this preliminary explanation to avoid being charged with being in any way mixed up in politics or partisanship, and I ask all those who discuss what I say to be fair enough to consider this denial.

We find ourselves in a country where the wages are far higher than they are in any other country. We do not desire any reduction in the average rates of American wages. Rather than suffer a reduction our men will refuse work at their trade; they will accept the lower rates of wages that are paid in other trades, perhaps, or they will decline employment at wages below the average American rate. Economists may say this is foolish and unwise. Whatever it is let it be known that American boiler makers and iron-ship builders demand and insist upon receiving the average rates of wages paid to men in their trades in the United States.

If there is a change wrought in the economic policy of the United States—which we shall resist if attempted—that means a lower wage rate, we shall then conform to the American standard, as we do now. Considering the wages paid to our men in the shipyards, the prices of materials, and other expenses connected with shipbuilding, it is impossible to produce a ship in this country as cheaply as it can be produced in other countries. If we were steadily employed, like locomotive and bridge builders, year in and year out, through a great widespread demand for our product, we should then, no doubt, be able to build ships as cheaply, if not more cheaply, than foreigners do, just as our locomotives and bridges are constructed as cheaply or more cheaply than foreign locomotives and bridges are constructed.

An American with capital which he is willing to invest in ships for our deep-sea carrying is confronted at the threshold, therefore, with the fact that an American-built ship costs more than a foreign-built ship. The longer he studies the question the more clearly he will realize that this condition will continue until a great and permanent demand is created for American-built ships, or until the nation changes to a free-trade condition. I regard the latter as too far in the future for consideration in connection with this problem. The great and permanent demand for ships for the deep-sea trade is what is wanted. The problem is how to get it. Just such a situation existed in this country fourteen years ago with respect to the tin-plate industry. We knew how to make tin plate, we had all the facilities with which to make it, the skill, the materials, and the demand for tin plate. The price was the obstacle. Americans could not make it as cheaply as foreigners could. So Congress laid a high duty on imported tin plate, and we all know that in the fourteen years that have passed since that duty was laid we not only make all of the tin plate we need for ourselves, but we also export large quantities.

If the high protective duty were withdrawn doubtless we should soon lose the manufacture of tin plate. It was through the action of Congress made worth the while of American capital to invest in tin-plate making in this country. The wages of men employed at tin-plate manufacture were not reduced to the foreign level, but the cost of the foreign product was so increased as to enable Americans to make it and still pay the going rates of wages in the United States to the workingmen employed in tin-plate manufacturing.

We ask Congress to do for the shipbuilding industry precisely what it did for the tin-plate industry. First, to realize that ships will not be built here for the foreign price, and, secondly, to make it profitable for American capital to invest in American-built ships. And we ask Congress to do this for our ships employed in the deep-sea trade just as it has done it for the tin-plate industry—through protection. We have tried free trade in ocean transportation so long that the results of the trial are manifest to everybody. We have now 800,000 tons of ocean shipping where a generation and more ago we had 2,500,000 tons.

But Congress is told that if protection is accorded to shipping for our ocean trade American millionaires will be still further enriched. So Congress hesitates to act. What results? Congress's inaction is protection for the foreign shipbuilder and the foreign shipowner. They prosper while we fail. Americans have invested nearly $200,000,000 in ships built in foreign countries, officered and manned by foreign subjects, sailing under foreign flags, and carrying perhaps one-third of the total foreign commerce of the United States. It is commonly and frequently said that our laws do not permit Americans to buy foreign ships, the answer to which is that American citizens now own between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000 tons of foreign shipping. They have invested in foreign shipping because it is more cheaply built and more cheaply operated than American shipping is. It is only possible for Americans to successfully compete with foreign ships in our ocean trade by themselves owning foreign ships, and they do so.

The 30,000 American boiler makers and iron-ship builders that I represent understand this, and we realize, as perhaps Congress does not, and as we are sure the people do not, that the denial of protection to American ships in the deep-sea trade amounts to a denial of employment for men of our craft at our trade in the United States; that the injury falls upon American labor, and not upon American capital. It is idle to tell us that we can prosper by accepting the foreign rates of wages; we could not if we would, and we would not if we could. We want to be as good as other American workingmen in every respect; we want to earn as good wages, to enjoy as many of the necessaries, the comforts, and the luxuries of life as the rest of our fellow-workingmen do, and since acts of Congress have created and long maintained a high standard of wages for American workingmen in all other trades than ours, we still cling to the hope—long deferred, to be sure—that Congress will yet see, and then rectify, the injustice it does to American workingmen employed in building ships through its persistent refusal to protect American ships that compete with foreign ships in our over-sea trade.

Refusal to protect American ships in our deep-sea trade, I repeat, is in effect absolute protection for foreign shipbuilders and foreign shipowners. They and their friends and business connections in the United States and the free-trade advocates constitute every element of opposition to protection for American shipping.

Not only American workingmen are injured by Congress's refusal to protect American ships in the deep-sea trade—the nation as a whole is injured, vitally injured. Merchant ships and citizen seamen are an indispensable resource of national defense. They constitute an auxiliary to our Navy. They are the sources upon which the Navy alone can draw for reenforcement. Lacking merchant ships and citizen seamen, the Navy is in grave peril. It is weak where it should be strong.

More than that, our rivals are strong through our inaction; they are strong where we are weak: our commerce gives them employment, gives them experience, gives them skill. In a moment this advantage may be utilized by our foreign rivals, who may become our enemies, to attempt our destruction or our subjection. Again, lacking ships and seamen of our own, and being dependent wholly upon foreign shipping as we are, we are at all times exposed to the possible and wholesale withdrawal of foreign shipping through the necessities of foreign countries should they become embroiled in war. Then we should be without the means to send our surplus products abroad; production would be curtailed in the United States; employment would be cut down; consumption would diminish; and industrial paralysis would herald widespread misery. We need the means for building our own merchant ships, kept in a constant state of efficiency and prosperity, just as much as we need the means for building our war ships. We need a great navy to protect our commerce, our interests, our seacoast, and for the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine. But our Navy is, and will constantly remain, perilously weak and unsupported so long as we lack a great, efficient, prosperous, and adequate merchant shipping of our own.

Mr. LUCKING. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH].

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Speaker, it is with very great reluctance that I find myself to-day occupying a position seemingly out of line with many of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber; for I entertain so fine a respect for my associates on the Democratic side of the House that it gives me pain to have even the appearance of parting company with them on any matter of importance. I feel it, sir, to be a matter of high duty that I make clear the reasons actuating me in the course on which I have entered, that persons unfriendly to the party in which I believe may not distort my motives.

When I came into this body, one of my principal ambitions was to contribute something toward upbuilding the American over-sea merchant marine. My studies and observations had convinced me that so far as I could I ought to count for improvement of the situation of seamen, for making sea life less and less unattractive to American boys and men, for arresting the drift from the sea and arousing a maritime spirit among Americans.

I believed, Mr. Speaker, and I continue to believe, that the condition precedent to restoration of our merchant marine and establishment of an effective naval reserve is the making of sea life a life consistent with healthy Americanism—consistent with self-respect, consistent with progressive manliness.

My reasons in this regard I have expressed at length in a speech delivered in this House some weeks ago. I shall refrain from repetition. But, sir, it seems proper to say that with my convictions of duty to the seamen, and through them to the country, I can not but hail with satisfaction any means, however inadequate, tending in the direction of my hopes.

I am sorry to have to feel that the pending bill does not come to us from a circle animated by unselfish devotion to the common welfare. I do not mean to impugn the patriotism of many on the other side of the Chamber, but I feel obliged to sympathize with those Democrats who suspect that the policy makers of the dominant party are not animated by the soundest motives in bringing in this bill. I would be glad to believe that the measure had sprung from a simple purpose to inquire in good faith with a view to just legislation, but I can not.

Nevertheless, sir, I do not favor a policy of opposition when opposition can reach no conclusion of real value. I am for taking the weapon it is planned shall make for mere delay and using it against those who have drawn it. I am for utilizing the time between the long session and the short session of the Fifty-eighth Congress in such aggressive inquiry as shall inform the nation on many questions as to which Americans in general are in the dark.

Especially, Mr. Speaker, do I hail this as an excellent opportunity for turning a searchlight on our neglected seamen and the wretched conditions under which they toil—conditions which, if widely understood, would not be tolerated.

I have already introduced in this House a bill designed to change existing laws affecting seamen, my purpose being to make sea life worth pursuing, and thus to make the upbuilding of an American merchant marine in the over-sea trade and the establishing of an adequate naval reserve a possibility.

But, sir, I have encountered misinformation and absence of information, astonishing to contemplate. The measure of ignorance of sea life and maritime law among Members of this Congress is amazing and almost hopeless. I can understand our neglect of the seamen somewhat more readily since I have studied the remarkable want of knowledge obtaining among those charged with the making of our laws cancerning the sea and the men who follow it.

I am not dissuaded from my inclinations, therefore, by the claim of my Democratic brethren that the country has had a surplusage of inquiries into the merchant marine. I say nothing about subsidies to-day, but I am certain that there never has been since the civil war anything like a thorough official inquiry into the everyday life of seamen; into the facts driving Americans from seamanship; into the experiences killing the maritime spirit among our people.

A searching inquiry, I feel sure, would convince well-meaning men of the value and need of the legislation I have proposed here on behalf of the seamen, and I think the interim between the long session of this Congress and the short session might very profitably be employed in making such an inquiry.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to the pending bill, an amendment obliging the commission called for by the measure to investigate the life of the seamen, so that light may be thrown on the defects of present laws relating to sea life.

I do not think that a sufficient inquiry can be made by standing committees of Congress under their ordinary rules. The inquiry demanded by the situation confronting us must be prosecuted, I feel, not here in Washington, but in the various seaports, where poor, dependent men of the sea may be sought and heard as they can not be sought and heard in the capital.

If the amendment thus referred to shall be adopted, I shall feel it to be my duty to vote for the bill as amended. If the amendment be not adopted, of course I shall not give my support to the measure.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I embrace this opportunity of directing the attention of my friends in the House to the bill I have introduced for the seamen. I am glad of a chance to explain some of its features.

First, sir, let me quote its title and opening section:

A bill to amend the laws relating to American seamen, to prevent undermanning and unskilled manning of American vessels, and to encourage the training of boys in the merchant marine.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4516 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4516. In case of desertion or casualty, resulting in the loss of one or more seamen, the master must ship, if obtainable, a number equal to the number of those whose services he has been deprived of by desertion or casualty, who must be of the same grade or rating and equally expert with those whose place or position they refill.

"And in all merchant vessels of the United States the sailors shall, while at sea, be divided into two watches, which shall be kept on deck alternately for the performance of ordinary work incident to the sailing and management of the vessel: but this provision shall not limit either the authority of the master or other officer or the obedience of the sailors when, in the judgment of the master or other officer, the whole crew is needed for the maneuvering of the vessel or the performance of the work necessary for the safety of the vessel or her cargo.

"While the vessel is in a safe harbor no seaman shall be required to do any unnecessary work on Sundays or legal holidays; and at all other times while the vessel is in a safe harbor nine hours, inclusive of anchor watch, shall constitute a day's work. Whenever the master of any vessel shall fail to comply with this section, the seamen shall be entitled to discharge from such vessel, and shall, upon demand, receive wages then earned. But this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels or to yachts."

All of this section is new excepting the first sentence.

The new matter has two principal purposes: To give greater security to life and property at sea, and to prevent needless exhaustion of seamen at sea and in port.

The second section of the bill is as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 4529 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4529. The master or owner of any vessel making coasting voyages shall pay to every seaman his wages within two days after the termination of the agreement under which he shipped, or at the time such seaman is discharged, whichever first happens; and in the case of vessels making foreign voyages, or from a port on the Atlantic to a port on the Pacific, or vice versa, within twenty-four hours after the cargo has been discharged, or within four days after the seaman has been discharged, whichever first happens; and in all cases the seaman shall be entitled to be paid, at the time of his discharge, on account of wages, a sum equal to one-third part of the balance due him. Every master or owner who refuses or neglects to make payment in manner hereinbefore mentioned without sufficient excuse shall pay to the seaman a sum equal to two days' pay for each and every day during which payment is delayed beyond the respective periods, which sum shall be recoverable as wages in any claim made before the court; but this section shall not apply to the masters or owners of any vessel the seamen of which are entitled to share in the profits of the cruise or voyage."

The change in existing law, proposed by this second section, consists in increasing the costliness to a vessel of inexcusable neglect in paying wages due seamen whose engagement with her has ceased.

The third section runs thus:

SEC. 3. That section 4530 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4530. Every seaman on a vessel of the United States shall be entitled to receive (within forty-eight hours after demand therefor) from the master of the vessel to which he belongs one-half part of the wages which shall be due him, at every port where such vessel, after the voyage has commenced, shall load or deliver cargo before the voyage is ended; and all stipulations to the contrary shall be held as void. And when the voyage is ended every such seaman shall be entitled to the remainder of the wages which shall then be due him, as provided in section 4529 of the Revised Statutes."

This section changes existing law by making it impossible for the necessities of seamen to be traded on to their disadvantage—and therefore to the disadvantage of our merchant marine—in the matter of wages, which, as a matter of personal independence, should be kept available for ports of call.

The next section of the bill follows:

SEC. 4. That section 4559 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4559. Upon a complaint in writing, signed by the first and second officers, or a majority of the crew of any vessel, while in a foreign port, that such vessel is in an unsuitable condition to go to sea because she is leaky or insufficiently supplied with sails, rigging, anchors, or any other equipment, or that the crew is insufficient to man her, or that her provisions, stores, and supplies are not, or have not been during the voyage, sufficient and wholesome, thereupon, in any of these or like cases, the consul, or a commercial agent who may discharge any of the duties of a consul, shall cause to be appointed three persons of like qualifications with those described in section 4557, who shall proceed to examine into the causes of complaint and who shall proceed and be governed in all their proceedings as provided by said section."

This section changes existing law by giving to seamen the same rights and powers in foreign ports they now have in domestic ports in the matter of protection against unseaworthiness of vessels and unfitness or insufficiency of provisions.

The fifth section I quote now:

SEC. 5. That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to navigation," approved March 3, 1897, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That on and after June 30, 1905, every place appropriated to the crew of any merchant vessel of the United States, except a yacht, a pilot boat, or any vessel of less than 100 tons register, shall have a crew space of not less than 100 cubic feet, and not less than 16 square feet, measured on the deck or floor of that place, for each seaman or apprentice lodged therein. Such place of lodging shall be securely constructed, properly lighted, heated, and ventilated, properly protected from weather and sea, and, as far as practicable, properly shut off and protected from the effluvium of cargo or bilge water. And every such crew space shall be kept free from goods or stores not being the personal property of the crew occupying said place in use during the voyage.

"Every steamboat of the United States plying upon the Mississippi River or its tributaries shall furnish an appropriate place for the crew, which shall conform to the requirements of this section, so far as they shall be applicable thereto, by providing sleeping room in the engine room of such steamboat, properly protected from the cold, winds, and rain by means of suitable awnings or screens on either side of the guards or sides and forward, reaching from the boiler deck to the lower or main deck, under the direction and approval of the Supervising Inspector-General of Steam Vessels, and shall be properly heated.

"Any failure to comply with this section shall subject the owner or owners to a penalty of $500."

Section 5 changes existing law by increasing as to old sailing vessels and all steam vessels the space allotment per man in forecastles, bringing all vessels up to the present requirement for sailing vessels built or rebuilt since 1898.

Section 6 is as follows:

SEC. 6. That section 4596 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4596. Whenever any seaman who has been lawfully engaged, or any apprentice to the sea service, commits any of the following offenses, he shall be punishable as follows:

"First. For desertion, by forfeiture of all or any part of the clothes or effects he leaves on board and of all or any part of the wages or emoluments which he has then earned.

"Second. For neglecting or refusing, without reasonable cause, to join his vessel or to proceed to sea in his vessel, or for absence without leave at any time within twenty-four hours of the vessel's sailing from any port, either at the commencement or during the progress of any voyage, or for absence at any time without leave and without sufficient reason from his vessel or from his duty, not amounting to desertion or not treated as such by the master, by a forfeiture from his wages of not more than two days' pay, or sufficient to defray any expenses which have been properly incurred in hiring a substitute.

"Third. For quitting the vessel, in whatever trade engaged, without leave, after her arrival at her port of delivery and before she is placed in security, by forfeiture from his wages of not more than one month's pay.

"Fourth. For willful disobedience to any lawful command at sea by being, at the option of the master, placed in irons until such disobedience shall cease, and upon arrival in port by forfeiture from his wages of not more than four days' pay, or, at the discretion of the court, by imprisonment for not more than one month.

"Fifth. For continued willful disobedience to lawful commands or continued willful neglect of duty at sea, by being, at the option of the master, placed in irons, on bread and water, with full rations every fifth day, until such disobedience shall cease, and r pon arrival in port by forfeiture, for every twenty-four hours' continuance of such disobedience or neglect, of a sum not more than twelve days' pay or by imprisonment for not more than three months, at the discretion of the court.

"Sixth. For assaulting any master or mate, in whatever trade engaged, by imprisonment for not more than two years.

"Seventh. For willfully damaging the vessel, or embezzling or willfully damaging any of the stores or cargo, in whatever trade engaged, by forfeiture out of his wages of a sum equal in amount to the loss thereby sustained, and also, at the discretion of the court, by imprisonment for not more than twelve months.

"Eighth. For any act of smuggling for which he is convicted, and whereby loss or damage is occasioned to the master or owner, he shall be liable to pay such master or owner such a sum as is sufficient to reimburse the master or owner for such loss or damage, and the whole or any part of his wages may be retained in satisfaction or on account of such liability, and he shall be liable to imprisonment for a period of not more than twelve months."

This section changes existing law by giving to seamen while in foreign ports the liberty of quitting their employment, which they enjoy while in domestic ports, destroying the last vestiges of imprisonment for violation of civil contract to labor.

Then follows section 7, thus:

SEC. 7. That section 4600 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended as follows:

"SEC. 4600. It shall be the duty of all consular officers to discountenance insubordination by every means in their power, and where the local authorities can be usefully employed for that purpose, to lend their aid and use their exertions to that end in the most effectual manner. In all cases where seamen or officers are accused the consular officer shall inquire into the facts and proceed as provided in section 4583 of the Revised Statutes; and the officer discharging such seamen shall enter upon the crew list and shipping articles and official log the cause of discharge and the particulars in which the cruel or unusual treatment consisted, and subscribe his name thereto officially. He shall read the entry made in the official log to the master, and his reply thereto, if any, shall likewise be entered and subscribed in the same manner."

This section changes existing law as to consular authority in such manner as to make procedure consistent with the change made by the preceding section.

The next section is worded as follows:

SEC. 8. That section 4611 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4611. Flogging and all other forms of corporal punishment are hereby prohibited on board any vessel, and no form of corporal punishment on board any vessel shall be deemed justifiable, and any master or other officer thereof who shall violate the aforesaid provisions of this section, or either thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment not less than three months nor more than two years. Whenever any officer other than the master of such vessel shall violate any provision of this section it shall be the duty of such master to surrender such officer to the proper authorities as soon as practicable. Any failure on the part of such master to comply herewith, which failure shall result in the escape of such officer, shall render the master or vessel liable in damages for such punishment to the person illegally punished by such officer."

This section changes existing law by making the vessel and master liable in damages where the master fails to do his duty in surrendering an officer offending the statutes against corporal punishment of seamen. At present only the master is so liable.

The ninth section runs in this way:

SEC. 9. That section 23 of the act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce," approved December 21, 1898, be, and is hereby, amended as respects the items water and butter, so that in lieu of a daily requirement of 4 quarts of water there shall be a requirement of 5 quarts of water every day, and that in lieu of a daily requirement of 1 ounce of butter there shall be a requirement of 2 ounces of butter every day.

This section changes existing law by increasing the daily allotment of water and butter for seamen.

The ensuing section I now quote:

SEC. 10. That section 24 of the act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce," approved December 21, 1898, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 24. That section 10 of chapter 121 of the laws of 1884, as amended by section 3 of chapter 421 of the laws of 1886, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 10. (a) That it shall be, and is hereby, made unlawful in any case to pay any seaman wages in advance of the time when he has actually earned the same, or to pay such advance wages, or to issue any note for the payment of the same, to any other person, or to pay any person other than an officer authorized by an act of Congress to collect fees for such service, any remuneration for the shipment of seamen. Any person paying such advance wages or such remuneration, or issuing any note for the payment of same, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than four times the amount of wages so advanced, or remuneration so paid, or of the note so issued, and may also be imprisoned for a period not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court. The payment of such advance wages shall in no case, excepting as herein provided, absolve the vessel, or the master or owner thereof, from full payment of wages after the same shall have been actually earned, and shall be no defense to a libel, suit, or action for the recovery of such wages. If any person shall demand or receive, either directly or indirectly, from any seaman or other person seeking employment as a seaman, or from any person on his behalf, any remuneration whatever for providing him with employment, he shall for every such offense be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100.

"'(b) That it shall be lawful for any seaman to stipulate in his shipping agreement for an allotment of any portion of the wages he may earn to his grandparents, parents, wife, sister, or children. But no allotment whatever shall be allowed in the trade between the mainland ports of the United States, or in the trade between the insular ports of the United States, or in the trade between the mainland and the insular ports of the United States, or in the trade between ports of the United States and the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the West Indies, and Mexico.

"'(c) That no allotment note shall be valid unless signed by and approved by the shipping commissioner. It shall be the duty of said commissioner to examine such allotments and the parties to them and enforce compliance with the law. All stipulations for the allotment of any part of the wages of a seaman during his absence which are made at the commencement of the voyage shall be inserted in the agreement, and shall state the amounts and times of the payments to be made and the persons to whom the payments are to be made.

"'(d) That no allotment except as provided for in this section shall be lawful. Any person who shall falsely claim to be such relation as above described of a seaman under this section shall for every such offense be punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court.

"'(e) That this section shall apply as well to foreign vessels as to vessels of the United States; and any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated its provisions shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for a similar violation: Provided, That treaties in force between the United States and foreign nations do not conflict herewith.

"'(f) That for the purposes of subsection (e) of this section the master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel seeking clearance from a port of the United States shall present his shipping articles at the office of clearance, and no clearance shall be granted any such vessel unless the provisions of this section have been complied with.

"'(g) That under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the Commissioner of Navigation shall make regulations to carry out this section.'"

This section changes existing law by adding a new guard against such advances and allotments of seamen's wages as are now forbidden in the coastwise trade and extends all the guards to the foreign trade.

Then comes this section:

SEC. 11. That section 26 of an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce," approved December 21, 1898, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 26. That this act shall take effect sixty days after its approval and shall apply to all vessels not herein specifically exempted; but sections 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 23, and 24 shall not apply to yachts."

This section changes existing law by extending to fishing and whaling vessels certain provisions now applicable only to other classes of vessels. The provisions referred to are designed to make the life of a seaman secure and healthful and to protect him in his wages, and the same reasons making them valuable in the case of vessels in general are of force in the case of fishing and whaling craft.

After this comes the twelfth section, as follows:

SEC. 12. That section 4536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4536. No wages due or accruing to any seaman or apprentice shall be subject to attachment or arrestment from any court; and every payment of wages to a seaman or apprentice shall be valid in law, notwithstanding any previous sale or assignment of wages, or of any attachment, incumbrance, or arrestment thereon; and no assignment or sale of wages, or of salvage, made prior to the accruing thereof, shall bind the party making the same, except such advance securities as are authorized by this title. This section shall apply to fishermen employed on fishing vessels, as well as to other seamen."

This section changes existing law by giving to fishermen that exemption from attachment of wages which is now enjoyed by seamen in general.

The thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth sections run thus:

SEC. 13. That before proceeding to sea, the master of every sailing vessel of the United States shall engage a sufficient number of seamen, as provided by the following minimum schedule: Vessels of 200 tons under deck, 5½ effective hands; vessels of 250 tons under deck, 6½ effective hands; vessels of 300 tons under deck, 7½ effective hands; vessels of 350 tons under deck, 8½ effective hands; vessels of 400 tons under deck, 9 effective hands; vessels of 450 tons under deck, 9½ effective hands; vessels of 500 tons under deck, 10½ effective hands; vessels of 550 tons under deck, 11½ effective hands; vessels of 600 tons under deck, 12 effective hands; vessels of 650 tons under deck, 13 effective hands; vessels of 700 tons under deck, 13½ effective hands; vessels of 750 tons under deck, 14½ effective hands; vessels of 800 tons under deck, 15 effective hands; vessels of 850 tons under deck, 15½ effective hands; vessels of 900 tons under deck, 16½ effective hands; vessels of 950 tons under deck, 17 effective hands; vessels of 1,000 tons under deck, 17½ effective hands; vessels of 1,100 tons under deck, 18½ effective hands; vessels of 1,200 tons under deck, 19 effective hands; vessels of 1,300 tons under deck, 20 effective hands; vessels of 1,400 tons under deck, 21 effective hands; vessels of 1,500 tons under deck, 22 effective hands; vessels of 1,600 tons under deck, 22½ effective hands; vessels of 1,700 tons under deck, 23½ effective hands; vessels of 1,800 tons under deck, 24 effective hands; vessels of 1,900 tons under deck, 25 effective hands; vessels of 2,000 tons under deck, 25½ effective hands; vessels of 2,100 tons under deck, 26 effective hands; vessels of 2,200 tons under deck, 26½ effective hands; vessels of 2,300 tons under deck, 27 effective hands; vessels of 2,400 tons under deck, 27½ effective hands; vessels of 2,500 tons under deck, 28 effective hands; vessels of 2,600 tons under deck, 28½ effective hands; vessels of 2,700 tons under deck, 29 effective hands; vessels of 2,800 tons under deck, 29½ effective hands; vessels of 2,900 tons under deck, 30 effective hands; vessels of 3,000 tons under deck, 30½ effective hands.

In sailing vessels above 3,000 tons under deck, additional seamen shall be engaged at the rate of one-third effective hand for every 100 tons, or one effective hand for every 300 tons: Provided, That on vessels of schooner rig using steam for the handling of sails at sea, the number of effective hands required by the foregoing schedule may be reduced as follows: By one, in the case of a vessel of 450 to 500 tons; by two, in the case of a vessel of 500 to 700 tons; by three, in the case of a vessel of 700 to 900 tons; by four, in the case of a vessel of 900 to 1,200 tons; by five, in the case of a vessel of 1,200 to 1,400 tons; by six, in the case of a vessel of 1,400 to 1,800 tons; by seven, in the case of a vessel of 1,800 to 2,300 tons; by eight, in the case of a vessel of 2,300 to 3,000 tons; by one for every 1,000 tons, in the case of a vessel exceeding 3,000 tons: And provided further, That every vessel of less than 1,500 tons using steam for the handling of sails at sea shall carry one man capable of operating a donkey engine; and every vessel of 1,500 tons or more using steam for the handling of sails at sea shall carry two such men. Each donkey man shall be either a carpenter or capable of doing duty of an able seaman, and shall be counted as one effective hand.

SEC. 14. That not less than three-fourths of each complement called for by the minimum schedule of either the preceding or the succeeding section shall be individually effective hands—that is, of ratings not lower than A. B.

SEC. 15. That before proceeding to sea the master of every steam vessel of the United States shall engage a sufficient number of seamen, as provided by the following minimum schedule:

Tons (gross).	Master.	Mates.	Carpenter or A. B.	Boatswain or A. B.	Able seamen.	Ordinary seamen.

SEC. 16. That any sailing or steam vessel proceeding to sea without the full complement of seamen provided for by the minimum schedules of this act shall forfeit to the United States for each effective hand or equivalent a sum double the wages saved by reason of such shortage: Provided, That this penalty shall not apply to any vessel unable, after reasonable diligence, to obtain her full complement: And provided further, That in every such case the wages saved during the continuance of undermanning shall be distributed, pro rata to monthly wages, among the seamen employed during such continuance.

That an able seaman within the meaning of this act must be 19 or more years of age, and must have had at least three years of experience at sea, on deck, of which at least one year shall have been spent aboard a sailing vessel; and an ordinary seaman within the meaning of this act must be 18 or more years of age and must have had at least one year of experience at sea, on deck.

SEC. 19. That no person shall be engaged as an able seaman or an ordinary seaman except upon proof that he is such within the meaning of this act. It is hereby made the duty of every board of local inspectors to examine applicants claiming to be able seamen or ordinary seamen, and to issue to each such applicant, after examination, provided he shall have shown the requisite fitness, a certificate as an able seaman or an ordinary seaman, as the case may be, which certificate shall be at all times retained by the person to whom it is issued. And any able seaman or ordinary seaman may prove his rating within the meaning of this act by producing the certificate issued to him by any board of local inspectors in pursuance of this section.

All of these sections are new. They apply to American vessels the manning schedules recommended by the British board of trade committee appointed to inquire into the manning of British merchant ships (June, 1896), except that a proviso is added making due deductions because of the difference of rig which enables numerous American vessels, especially in our coastwise trade, to run with fewer seamen than commonly required by British bottoms.

The law as it stands in terms requires that American vessels shall be "properly" manned, but the requirement is meaningless in the absence of definition of skill and fixing of manning minimums. The change proposed is thus only in effectuation of existing law.

SEC. 20. That every sailing or steam vessel voyaging between mainland ports of the United States, or between mainland and insular ports of the United States, or between insular ports of the United States, shall carry in her crew a boy or boys as follows: If she be of 800 tons or more, but under 1,500 tons (under deck), at least one boy; if she be of 1,500 tons or more (under deck), at least two boys. Any vessel leaving any port of the United States without the boy or boys required by this section shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense: Provided, That this penalty shall not apply if, after reasonable diligence, the boy or boys required by this section could not be obtained.

This section is entirely new. It is designed to encourage the training of boys in our merchant marine, and, taking notice of the immunity from competition with other nations characterizing vessels engaged in our coastwise trade, requires those vessels to carry a small proportion of boys in crews when boys may be obtained.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I shall no further tax the indulgence of the House. I hope, however, that the vote on my amendment will show an earnest friendliness for the men who go down to the sea in ships. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the proposition to create a Congressional commission, composed of Senators and Members of the House, to gather facts and mold policies for our guidance and, incidentally, spend $20,000 is a transparent Republican makeshift, designed to relieve a divided Republican party from present responsibility; designed to tide over the election, to ease up ante-election promises to the ship-subsidy interests and post-election performance; designed to solace the supercritical official conscience before reelection and to pass the bill when that official conscience is dulled by individual election—in short, to tide over that which political cowardice prevents from being presented now.

This is a miserable makeshift of political expediency. This matter has been before the country and the world for thirty years. We have had it in every form; we have looked at it from every point of view. History and statistics teem with its figures and tables, its operation, its rise and fall. The facts have been gathered, the arguments garnered. Did the Senate act without information when it passed a ship-subsidy bill in the last Congress? Did the House committee act without light when the Democrats on that committee, aided by a few Republican Members who responded to the call of their constituents, defeated that bill in committee of the House? No one in that Congress claimed that the flood of information was not full and enlightening. They did not have and did not need the aid of a mock Congressional commission, either to unite the two branches of Congress, which should act independently, or to aid them in a bipartisan inquiry.

If the Republican party wants to pass a ship-subsidy bill, let them introduce their bill and pass it; it has the machinery of the House and the Rules Committee. Let them ram it through, but let it run the gantlet of consideration. Let us have a roll call and let us see what Republican Members will stand for ship subsidy.

Give us your substantive proposition and see whether the States of Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, Michigan, and Wisconsin and the other States will stand for it, and let those who vote for it take and bear the responsibility.

For my part I will not permit the Republican party unchallenged to shift the responsibility by this transparent subterfuge, or put off the evil day by resorting to this deception on the shipping interests, this duplicity on the voters.

Let the Republican party come out in the open and face the shipping interests on the one hand and the voters on the other. Let the Members here fish or cut bait in regular order. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCKING. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the Members of the House on both sides were somewhat astonished a short while ago when my friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] read and construed the letter written by Thomas Jefferson to Mr. Gallatin, then Secretary of the Treasury, to mean that he (Mr. Jefferson) was in favor of subsidies. Mr. Speaker, if anyone will take the time to investigate the matter then under consideration and the circumstances, it will be easily seen that the letter was not intended to lay down any such principle as the gentleman from Kansas would have the members of this committee believe.

The two great political parties in the country at that period were the Federalists and the Antifederalists, the latter of which began about that time to be designated by the name "Republican." There was then in operation an institution known as the "United States Bank," which had been chartered through the influences of Alexander Hamilton in 1791. Jefferson and his followers had opposed the establishment of this institution most vigorously, because they believed it inimical to the best interest of the people and fraught with danger to the Government itself. When this letter was written a large part of the stock in the bank was owned by foreigners, and it was contended that it had, as its subsequent history proved, become a powerful and corrupt political machine, and that Hamilton was friendly to it to the exclusion of the State banks. Upon that subject, without further comment, I desire to read in part what this historian has said, and then to couple with that the language of Mr. Jefferson, that the Members may fully understand what was meant by Mr. Jefferson's letter. The historian says:

Doubtless many of the criticisms against Hamilton's administration of the finances of the Government sprang from ignorance, though not all of them. So long as he remained at his post his enemies never wearied in assailing him for his dealings with the bank. They were more merciful toward his successor, but even Wolcott was not left wholly to himself. When their party came into power their jealousy of the institution broke forth. In the autumn of 1802 Jefferson wrote to Gallatin that he should make a judicious distribution of his favors among all the banks, since the stock of the United States Bank was held largely by foreigners, and were the Bank of the United States to swallow up the others and monopolize the whole banking business of the United States, which the demands we furnish them with tend shortly to favor, we might, on a misunderstanding with a foreign power, be immensely embarrassed by any disaffection in that bank.

Mr. Jefferson, as you will observe, was speaking in favor of patronizing banks whose stocks were owned by American citizens. He was speaking in favor of homes as against foreign institutions. He was advocating the use of friendly and trustworthy agencies as against doubtful ones. He was unwilling to have the Government participate in the creation of a banking monopoly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. As I understand it, he was supporting home industries as against foreign industry?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That was very proper, and that is our scheme.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. He was speaking in favor of republican institutions as against monarchical institutions.

I am decidedly in favor——

Mr. CAMPBELL. This last letter is a year subsequent to the one from which the deductions of the author are taken that the gentleman has just read.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I understand perfectly.

I am decidedly in favor of making all the banks republican—

That is, believers in and supporters of the theory of a government by the people—by sharing the deposits among them in proportion to the dispositions they show.

That is to say, it was his purpose to at least deal fairly with banks that favored popular government rather than patronize exclusively one subject to, if not controlled by, influences that sympathized with and tended to monarchy.

It is but one of many instances showing the vigilance with which he guarded the welfare of the Republic, and not the shameless prostitution of the public service to promote a party organization, as the gentleman from Kansas would have us believe.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman tell us what he meant by "republican banks?"

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. He meant, evidently, a bank that was owned and manned by people who believed in popular as against monarchical government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Why, if the gentleman will read the context he will see how ridiculous his statement is.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LUCKING. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky (reading):

If the law now forbid it, we should not permit another session of Congress to pass without amending it. It is material to the safety of republicanism—

That is, free public institutions—to detach the mercantile interests from its enemies and incorporate them into the body of its friends. A merchant is naturally a republican, and could not be otherwise only from a vitiated state of things.

Mr. Speaker, it was the evident purpose of the gentleman from Kansas to have the House believe that where this letter used the word "republican" it had reference to mere party affiliation and not to the fundamental principles of free popular government.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And if the gentleman will read the subsequent twenty pages of that book he will reach another conclusion himself. Jefferson was talking for a party he was then organizing. There is no question about that.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. No; Mr. Jefferson opposed the United States Bank on principle. He distrusted it because its stock was owned in part by foreigners, and he also saw the danger of monopoly in it unless there should be a distribution of Government deposits among other banks. These, and not the wish to subsidize other institutions, were the reasons that prompted him to make the suggestions to Mr. Gallatin.

No man had lived who was more firmly attached to the doctrine and its observance of justice and equality to all men and exclusive privileges to none in the operation of government. All his official acts and public utterances were squared by this matchless standard. No cause ever had an abler or more fearless advocate than he, but his great labors and talents served but little purpose if what he did and said can now be distorted into a precedent or authority to justify, excuse, or persuade those of the present generation into supporting measures that are intended to enrich those engaged in one kind of business by either injuring or impoverishing all others.

Jefferson was talking then as he always talked, for free popular government—a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, Mr. Speaker, since this subject has been brought forth, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas and Members of the House generally to the utterances of a President of the United States in recent years condemning the practice of keeping money in the banks of the country without interest, and I read:

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is it a fact that Jefferson recommended for some purpose—no matter what—a subsidy, in effect, of banks? Is that true or not?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is not true, in my opinion.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Was the intent to confer any popular favor or give any aid, or was the intent anything of that kind? How do you understand that?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I do not understand that to be his purpose at all.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then there was apparently no purpose and it was simply perfunctory?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in the short time I have allotted to me I have not time to answer the gentleman's questions in detail, but I should be pleased to do so if I had the time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think that is quite obvious.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Now, I am going to read you from the first annual message of President Harrison, in which he condemns the practice that had been in force in this country for several years and yet prevails. He says:

The loaning of public funds to the banks without interest upon the security of Government bonds I regard as an unauthorized and dangerous expedient. It results in a temporary and unnatural increase of bank capital of favored localities and compels a cautious and gradual recall of deposits to avoid injury to the commercial interests. It is not to be expected that the banks having these deposits will sell their bonds to the Treasury so long as the present highly beneficial arrangement is continued. They now practically get interest both upon the bonds and their proceeds. No further use should be made of this method of getting the surplus into circulation, and the deposits now outstanding should be gradually withdrawn and applied to the purchase of bonds.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

It has been almost fifteen years since President Harrison submitted this recommendation to Congress, and in the meantime many millions of dollars collected by the Government from the people have been kept without interest on deposit with certain national banks of the country that have loaned it back to the people, whose money in part it was, at profitable and sometimes exorbitant rates of interest. It is not strange that these organizations should oppose any change in the revenue laws that will reduce the surplus in the Treasury and thus deprive them of one source of great profit. President Harrison was right in condemning this practice that has been tolerated too long. The evil of it is not alone of a financial character, but political collusion and corruption are among its inevitable results. Who does not remember the letter written in June, 1897, by Mr. A. B. Hepburn, of the National City Bank, of New York, in which he appealed to the Secretary of the Treasury for a continuation of favors upon the ground that the directors of that institution had contributed to the Republican campaign fund in 1896. The letter reads as follows:

NATIONAL CITY BANK OF NEW YORK,
New York, June 5, 1897.

MY DEAR MR. GAGE: The National City Bank, of this city, of which I recently became president through the consolidation of the business of the Third National with it, is one of the banks designated as a United States depository; and I write to request that in any changes that may be made under the Administration we may not be disturbed in this respect. We should like to remain United States depository, as at present.

Of course the bank is very strong, and if you will take the pains to look at our list of directors you will see that we also have very great political claims in view of what was done during the canvass last year.

Yours, very truly, A. B. HEPBURN.

And the records will show that the Government deposits in this institution were largely increased within a few months from that date. I denounce the system under which such conditions can exist and flourish as intolerable, and declare that no higher duty rests upon the party charged with the administration of the Government than to abolish it as speedily as possible. It has been nearly seven years since the foregoing instance occurred, during all which time the Republican party has controlled the executive and both branches of the legislative department, and yet not a step has that party taken toward correcting this iniquitous system, and in view of what Mr. Hepburn assured Mr. Gage was done in 1896 by the directors of his bank, I am quite sure that party will give to the country no relief against this pernicious practice as long as these institutions find it profitable to make contributions to the Republican campaign fund in exchange for Government deposits. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the bill from further consideration at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that privilege under the order.

CIRCULATION OF READING MATTER AMONG THE BLIND.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 3129.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a Senate bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3129) to promote the circulation of reading matter among the blind

Be it enacted, etc., That books, pamphlets, and other reading matter in raised characters for the use of the blind, whether prepared by hand or printed, in single volumes or in packages, and containing no advertising or other matter whatever, unsealed, and not exceeding 4 pounds in weight, when sent by public institutions for the blind, or by any public libraries, as a loan to blind readers, or when returned by the latter to such institutions or public libraries, shall be transmitted in the United States mails free of postage.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts repugnant to this act are hereby repealed, and the Postmaster-General shall prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary to carry this act into effect.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Line 5, after the word "volumes," add "not exceeding 10 pounds in weight;" and same line, after the word "packages," add "not exceeding 4 pounds in weight."

Lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "not exceeding 4 pounds in weight."

Line 11, after the word "postage," strike out the period and insert in lieu a comma, and add after the comma the following: "and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe."

Strike out all of section 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RUCKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CARE AND CUSTODY OF THE INSANE IN ALASKA.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3035) supplemental to and amendatory of an act entitled "An act making further provisions for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1900, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior shall, in the month of November, 1904, and from time to time thereafter, as in his judgment may be deemed advisable, advertise for and receive bids for the care and custody of persons legally adjudged insane in the district of Alaska, and thereafter, in behalf of the United States, shall contract, for one or more years, as he may deem best, with a responsible asylum or sanitarium west of the main range of the Rocky Mountains submitting the lowest and best responsible bid for the care and custody of persons legally adjudged insane in said district of Alaska, the cost of advertising for bids, executing the contract, and caring for the insane to be paid, until otherwise provided by law, by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on accounts and vouchers duly approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and all acts and parts of acts in conflict with these provisions are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two. I will ask if this is a unanimous report from his committee?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. It is. I will say that I was asked to call up the Senate bill and asked unanimously to do so. If the gentleman desires an explanation of the changes this bill makes in existing law, I shall give it. They are very slight.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object until we hear the explanation.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Mr. Speaker, there are a large number of insane persons in Alaska. Under present conditions they are cared for by the governor advertising each year and sending them, I think, down to Washington. It is proposed to change the law somewhat, and this change has the indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior. I shall read from his letter how much the present bill changes the law and why he thinks it is better. He writes as follows:

There are but three changes from the existing law proposed by the above amendment, and they are as follows:

(1) The power to advertise and contract for the care of said insane is vested directly in the Secretary of the Interior, instead of in the governor subject to the approval of the Secretary, as in the existing law.

(2) Contracts therefor may be made either for one year or for a longer period, whereas the existing law requires that contracts be made "from year to year."

(3) Contracts may be awarded to the "lowest and best responsible bidder" instead of merely to the lowest, as the law now requires.

Those are the changes that the present bill makes in the present law, and I think they are in the interest of the insane.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. POWERS of Maine, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG SIGNAL AT DIAMOND SHOALS, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I rise on a privileged matter, to call up the bill (H. R. 7264) to provide for the construction of a light-house and fog signal at Diamond Shoals, on the coast of North Carolina, at Cape Hatteras, made so on February 15, 1904, by a vote of the House, and I ask unanimous consent that this bill be taken up and considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. I think it will be approved of in a very few minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] present?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I have talked with him this afternoon, since the Speaker advised me that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] would oppose the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is he willing that unanimous consent should be given?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. He did not say that. I saw him this afternoon, and the matter of unanimous consent was not mentioned between us. I did not tell him how I would call the bill up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has every desire to submit for unanimous consent all matters that should be submitted——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] does not necessarily have to be here when we take up these matters. He said he did not know whether he would make any remarks on the bill or not, but rather indicated that he would leave the matter to the distinguished gentlemen who had signed the minority report.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but after what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has stated to the Chair, the Chair does not think he should submit that request at this time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. There are gentlemen here who have made a minority report and they do not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not, in justice to himself, submit the request for unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. It is on the Union Calendar, is it not?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Of course the gentleman can make the motion under the rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I know that, but I thought this would be the more expeditious way of disposing of it.

The SPEAKER. After having been notified by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], as the Chair has been, the Chair does not feel that he should in fairness put the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I thought we might get along better with our public business, if this were done.

The SPEAKER. Well, if no one else objected at this time, and if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] were here, the Chair would put the request.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I see the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has just entered the Chamber.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to consider the present order which is called up and is privileged by unanimous consent, viz, the Diamond Shoals light-house bill, in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] will recall the fact that I mentioned this matter to him this afternoon.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I would state that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] filed a minority report on this bill, and he is not at present in the House. I think he should be here when the bill comes up and that it should be carefully discussed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The gentleman, as I understand, does not make any objection to this being considered.

Mr. BURTON. I am not willing that it should be considered in the absence of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Very well; I have no wish to take any advantage of the gentleman from Minnesota who filed the minority report. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the matter be passed over until to-morrow.

RESTORATION OF CERTAIN MIDSHIPMEN.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 12273, with certain amendments reported by the committee and also an amendment interlined in the bill.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill granting authority to the President in his discretion to restore certain midshipmen to the naval service.

Mr. HAY. I object.

INDIANS OF CROW RESERVATION.

Mr. CURTIS submitted for printing in the RECORD the conference report and statement of House conferees upon the bill (H. R. 11676) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of Crow Reservation in Montana, and making an appropriation to carry the same into effect.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11676) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation in Montana, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: ", the same to be reimbursed out of the first moneys to be received from the sale of said lands;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 19 of said amendment, after the word "practicable," strike out the word "the" and insert the following: "Provided, however, That if the lands withdrawn under the reclamation act are not disposed of within five years after the passage of this act, then all of said lands so withdrawn shall be disposed of as other lands provided for in this act. That the;" and the Senate agree to the same.

CHARLES CURTIS,
JOHN F. LACEY,
JNO. H. STEPHENS,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS R. BARD,
WM. M. STEWART,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the managers on the part of the House is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11676) entitled "An act to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation, in Montana, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect," make the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report on the amendments:

The House receded from its disagreement to amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21. All these amendments are of such a minor character that your managers do not deem it necessary to refer to them specifically by number, except the following:

Amendments numbered 2 and 10 increase the price for which the land is to be sold from $3 to $4 per acre.

Amendment numbered 4: The House receded with an amendment requiring the money appropriated for a survey of the reservation to be reimbursed out of the first money derived from the sale of the land. The Senate amendment authorized the payment of expenses of the survey, and made no provision for reimbursement. On account of the large number of acres in the reservation, and the likelihood of the land being readily disposed of, your managers thought it best to provide that the cost of survey should be reimbursed to the United States.

Amendment numbered 7: The House receded from this amendment with an amendment providing that if the land shall not be disposed of under the reclamation act within five years then it shall be disposed of as other lands are disposed of under the terms of this act, and this amendment your committee believes to be for the best interests of all concerned and will insure the sale of lands within a reasonable time.

CHAS. CURTIS.
JOHN F. LACEY.
JNO. H. STEPHENS.

TRAILWAY IN COCONINO COUNTY, ARIZ.

Mr. WILSON of Arizona. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10411) granting right of way for trailway to W. W. Bass, of Coconino County, Ariz., for travel across the Grand Canyon of Arizona, and ferry privileges, etc., across the Colorado River therein.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill; but before the reading was concluded,

Mr. MONDELL objected.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it is now 5 o'clock; and I demand the regular order.

DIRECTORS OF COLUMBIA HOSPITAL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. HUNTER and Mr. LIVINGSTON as directors, upon the part of the House, of the Columbia Hospital.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 803. An act for the relief of John Stewart;

S. 5557. An act to authorize the board of county commissioners of the county of Hampden, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River between Chicopee and West Springfield, in said county and Commonwealth; and

S. 4651. An act for the relief of James T. Barry and Richard Cushion, executors of the last will and testament of Martin Dowling, deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11676) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation in Montana, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Henry C. Jordan, Fifty-eighth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill No. 13356, the Alaska delegate bill.

Mr. LACEY. I move to amend that motion by inserting in lieu of the Alaska bill House bill 12273.

Mr. PAYNE. I make a point of order upon this amendment. I understand that the bill of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is not privileged.

The SPEAKER. Is the bill privileged?

Mr. LACEY. It is not.

The SPEAKER. Then the point of order is sustained.

The question being taken upon the motion of Mr. CUSHMAN, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole (Mr. PERKINS in the chair) and resumed the consideration of House bill 13356, the Alaska Delegate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] is recognized.

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the Government is constructing a slip canal at Seattle, connecting Puget Sound with Lake Union and Lake Washington. When this canal is completed it will give Seattle a harbor unmatched in all the world.

THE LAKE WASHINGTON CANAL—HISTORY.

This canal should be completed by the Government with all convenient speed for two reasons: First, because of the benefit it would be to commerce; second, because of the benefit it would be to the vessels of the Government. There would be a third incidental benefit to the surrounding country by the redemption of some 50,000 acres of as fine agricultural land as there is in America and the prevention of frequent floods that destroy millions of dollars' worth of property.

On the great Pacific coast line of this country there are really only two great ports—San Francisco Bay and Puget Sound. Said one of the first explorers, Charles Wilkes, of that marvelous body of water known as "Puget Sound:"

> Nothing can surpass the beauty of these waters and their safety. I venture nothing in saying that there is no country in the world that possesses waters equal to these. They cover an area of about 2,000 square miles. The shores of all its inlets and bays are remarkably bold, so much so that a ship's side would strike the shore before her keel would touch the ground. The country by which these waters are surrounded is remarkably salubrious, and affords every advantage for the accommodation of a vast commercial and military marine, with convenience for docks and a great many sites for towns and cities.

No one who is acquainted with this wonderful Puget Sound country will contend that this description is overdrawn. Seattle is situated on the eastern shore of Elliott Bay on a series of ridges and hills running back to the east about 2½ miles to the western shore of Lake Washington, and northeast of the water front of Seattle about a mile and one-third is Lake Union, and about a mile and a half beyond Lake Union is situated Green Lake. The city of Seattle largely surrounds Lake Union and Green Lake and extends several miles along Lake Washington. The city set upon these hills, around these lakes, facing Puget Sound, almost entirely encircled by eternal snow-capped mountains, has a beauty of location that is not surpassed, if equaled, by any other city in the world.

The proposed canal connects Puget Sound, starting at Salmon Bay, on which is situated the prosperous city of Ballard, now having about 10,000 population, with Lake Union and Lake Washington. The advantage of this canal has attracted the attention of every officer of the Army and Navy who has ever visited this region. Commencing with the report of Gen. George B. McClellan in 1860, this canal has been examined and indorsed and recommended to the Government by General McClellan, General Cullom, Captain Powell, Captain Taylor, Major Elliott, General Alexander, Colonel Mendell, Major Handbury, Major Symons, Gen. J. M. Wilson, of the Engineer Corps of the Army; Captain Mahan, Captain Stockton, Captain Chester, Admiral Selfridge, Captain Barker, Captain Clark, Commander Drake, Captain Burwell, Naval Constructor Hibbs, of the Army and Navy. The army board of 1891, appointed for the purpose of investigating this proposition, says of Lake Union:

Lake Union, which is the nearest to the heart of Seattle and to the sound, is the smallest of these lakes. It has an area of 905 acres, of which 499 acres cover a depth of 25 feet, and with a maximum observed depth of 60 feet. The area of the drainage basin of this lake is 6 square miles.

Lake Washington, the largest of the three lakes, lies directly east of Lake Union and of Seattle. It is 19 miles long, averages about 2 miles in width, and has an area of 38.9 square miles, or 24,896 acres, of which probably 22,000 acres cover a depth of 25 feet or more.

The Chamber of Commerce of Seattle gives the following description of the topography of the proposed canal:

The project for the construction of a waterway connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lakes Union and Washington is based on natural topographic conditions without a parallel in the world. Lying along the eastern shore of the city of Seattle is Lake Washington, a body of fresh water nearly 20 miles in length, 2 or 3 miles in width, and several hundred feet in depth, separated from the tidal waters of the sound by a strip of land, at some points less than 2 miles wide, on which is situated the city of Seattle.

At the north of the city the shore of the sound is indented by the salt-water inlet of Salmon Bay, whose gently sloping shores furnish an admirable town site, on which is situated the thriving town of Ballard. This town is the site of a great lumber and shingle industry and has a population of more than 6,000 people. Between Lake Washington and this inlet, and entirely within the limits of the city of Seattle, lies Lake Union, a fresh-water lake with an area of about 900 acres and from 35 to 60 feet in depth. The entire bottom of the lake constitutes excellent holding ground.

The shores of the lake are well adapted for the construction of wharves and warehouses and are reached by an easy grade from the present business center of the city. An arm of this lake stretches eastward toward Union Bay, an arm of Lake Washington. Between Lake Washington and Salmon Bay, along this route, lies a natural valley, through which a ship canal could be built at the minimum of expense. Lake Union and Salmon Bay are connected by a natural waterway, now enlarged by the General Government into an artificial canal as a part of the preliminary work on the projected ship canal. Lakes Washington and Union are separated by a strip of land only half a mile in width whose greatest elevation above Lake Washington is only about 30 feet.

Nowhere in the world does such an opportunity exist for the construction of a magnificent landlocked fresh-water harbor directly accessible from the sea. The situation is absolutely unique, and consequently none of the general rules laid down by Congress governing river and harbor improvements can apply to it. It stands in a class by itself and must be governed by rules that apply to it alone.

Nature has so plainly pointed out the place and the advantage of this canal that none who have studied the situation can fail to understand why the officers of the Government have been struck by its feasibility and recommended its construction, or why the legislature of Washington has passed laws to aid its construction, and why it is the hope and the dream of every patriotic and progressive citizen of Seattle.

The proposition of constructing this canal is so well known that after this brief review I desire to devote my time to answering the three only possible objections that can be urged against its construction.

These objections are, first, objections urged against its use as a navy basin; second, the claim of the Seattle and Lake Washington Waterway Company that they intend to construct or can construct a similar canal; third, the contention that the construction of this canal is not advisable at the present time.

A board was appointed in 1902 by the Secretary of War, in accordance with an act of Congress, to investigate and report upon continuing the construction of this proposed canal. This board was composed of Col. William H. Heuer, Capt. W. C. Langfitt, and Lieutenant Johnston. Their report was made June 6, 1903, and is embodied in Senate Report 127, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session. This report refers to each of the objections which I wish to discuss.

FEASIBILITY

Inasmuch as the last board of engineers appointed to investigate this work said in their report—

Having decided upon the Shilshole Bay route as being the most advantageous of the routes via Lake Union, and having gone over this route and examined the maps thereof and the character of the material to be excavated, as revealed by the work already done and by the borings made, the board decided that there is no doubt of the entire feasibility of constructing on this route a canal of the required dimensions—

And in view of the further fact that the Government has already appropriated the sum of over $350,000 toward its construction—and not only this, but in order to make a portion of this appropriation available the Government exacted as a condition precedent that King County should procure a right of way, now worth a million dollars, and give the same to the Government, and the same was by the Government accepted—I think it entirely useless to present argument as to the feasibility of this great undertaking.

ADVANTAGES TO THE NAVY.

Every officer of the Navy who has ever seen Lake Washington enthusiastically indorses it as an ideal naval basin. Lieut. J. J. Drake, then executive officer of the U. S. battle ship Oregon, in his letter to the Hon. W. D. Wood, among other things, said:

The most important question which is absorbing the attention of the Navy Department is the following: What is the most economical method by which our steel vessels can be preserved in readiness for an emergency call? The answer to this question involves the following conditions:

A. A clear fresh-water basin of uniform depth, not exposed to freshets, strong currents, or heavy winds.

B. This basin to be accessible at all times and any stage of tides, conditions of weather, and season.

C. To be located near a navy-yard which is capable of docking and taking care of our largest battle ships.

D. To be within the limits of a large manufacturing center, in order that material, skilled labor, and mechanics may be had at any and all times.

Having merely outlined the obstacles which stand in the way of conditions set forth in paragraphs A, B, C, and D for fresh-water basin on the proposed sites on the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards south of Puget Sound, let us examine this locality in which is located the only dry dock capable of docking first-class battle ships and cruisers. Reference is had, of course, to the Puget Sound Naval Station, at Port Orchard, where this dock is located. Condition A calls for a clear fresh-water basin of uniform depth, not exposed to freshets, strong currents, or heavy winds.

In Lake Union all of the above requirements are found. Purely a fresh-water basin, surrounded by high hills covered with verdure the year around, having a clear soil, and hence no deposits of scourings of watersheds are carried into this lake from adjacent slopes. The high hills surrounding it cut off any heavy winds which could possibly sweep over this portion of the sound, as numerous trees, both old and young, bear evidence by their perpendicular trunks on hilltops and slopes around the lake. The locality is free from any nuisances which usually surround the suburbs of cities.

Here battle ships and vessels of all types could lie quietly at their moorings in depths suitable to the draft of the vessel and fear not the elements and ravages of time. Hundreds of ships could be safely housed here, within the finest ideal spot upon this globe, the like of which does not exist to-day in any climate.

Condition B calls for a basin accessible at all times.

As the approach to Lake Union would naturally be made by canal cut through from Duwamish Bay (Seattle Harbor) entrance on the north side, and of less than a mile in length, and as all approaches are clear of outlying dangers, we have at once an ideal harbor entrance.

The conditions of tides or weather will not affect the approach to this basin by the canal.

Condition C. To be located near a navy-yard which is capable of docking our largest vessels.

Lake Union is only 14 miles from Port Orchard dock. A vessel can be docked and put in perfect order for commission, then steam to the entrance of Lake Union, and in a few hours be safely moored in a fresh-water basin.

Condition D. To be within the limits of a large manufacturing center, where skilled labor can be had at all times.

This condition is fulfilled in every respect. The natural surroundings of Lake Union offer all the necessary features of a repair station of the first order.

No man, before nor since that letter was written, has ever disputed a single statement made in the part quoted except as to accessibility. All the statements made by Lieutenant Drake regarding Lake Union apply equally to Lake Washington. Lake Washington has far greater advantages, so far as sites and locations for yards, docks, barracks, etc., are concerned, and in Lake Washington there is not only room enough that the navies of all the nations of earth might lay up their fighting ships, but large enough to permit the maneuvering of the same and to furnish room for all training necessary for the schooling of sailors.

The last board appointed to investigate and report with reference to locating a fresh-water naval basin on the Pacific coast, after unanimously reaching the conclusion that such a basin could not possibly be located anywhere on the Pacific coast than on Puget Sound, made the following majority report:

Lake Washington, considered within itself, offers a fresh-water basin where the fleets of the world might lie in reserve. On its shores a number of sites might be selected, all of which would be excellent for the purpose of erecting repair shops, storehouses, and other buildings which might spring up in connection with a fresh-water basin for vessels of the Navy, when laid up in ordinary away from a navy-yard. It offers suitable depth of water, free from currents, and safe from danger of storm.

In the opinion of the majority of the board, in considering it as a naval basin, Lake Washington lacks accessibility, because a vessel must be passed through a canal about 6 miles in length, and naval vessels, whose scope of action is upon the seas, would be dependent upon this artificial waterway for access to their scenes of action. Accident to the lock, its destruction by the act of an enemy or dissatisfied person, or grounding of vessels in exit might lock within the waters of Lake Washington for an indefinite length of time vessels needed for the defense of the country. It has a local security from water attack due to position and natural surroundings. Access by an enemy's ships would be impossible, but in the face of an enemy it would be no slight matter to get out through this narrow pass.

It lacks favorable position with respect to the line of communication with the present source of repair and supply at the Puget Sound naval station. The sudden dash of an enemy through the defenses at the entrance of Puget Sound would cut off such vessels as might be in the lake. In view of the above objection, bearing in mind these future possibilities, the majority of the board decide that, in its opinion, Lake Washington and, therefore, Lake Union are declared most unsuitable sites for fresh-water basins for the use of the Navy, with regrets that such a magnificent body of fresh water, with the grand and daring scheme for converting it into a fresh-water basin for naval use, can not meet with its approval.

This board was appointed April 5, 1901, by order of the Navy Department, and was composed of Capt. Thomas Perry, Lieut. Commander George W. Peters, Lieut. A. B. Willets, Ensign H. N.

Jenson, of the U. S. S. Iowa, and Capt. W. T. Burwell, commandant, and Naval Constructor F. W. Hibbs, of the Puget Sound Navy-Yard. The majority report was signed only by Captain Perry and his three subordinates.

The minority report contained the following language:

The lakes are the most advantageous of all Pacific coast sites and in themselves are admirably suited for the purpose of a naval basin. The minority considers that the construction of a commercial canal is not to be questioned, but only whether in its construction provision for a naval basin would be advisable, and it believes there should be no hesitation in advising it.

The Navy Department in 1894 received from a board to whom the question was submitted a report, in which the following language was used:

The cost of this work appears to be small in comparison with the very great advantages to the Navy and commerce which its construction would secure.

The existence of this fine sheltered and tideless fresh-water harbor on the coast, situated as it is in such a mild climate in the midst of great natural resources, already skirted by railways and reached direct by three transcontinental lines, and its proximity to our naval station requiring such an adjunct would seem to raise this question of its availability by this proposed improvement of the waterway to one of national importance.

Against the statement of the captain of the Iowa and his three subordinate officers we have the statement of the minority and the statement of the board of 1894. We also have against them the splendid brain of Captain Monahan and of the heroic Captain Clark, the brilliant commander of the Oregon duri g our war with Spain. Captain Clark in his report says:

It will be seen that Lake Union is all that could be desired as a fresh-water basin, and that secure anchorage exists in Lake Washington, especially at the northern end and to the eastward of Mercer Island. From the appearance of the surrounding hills and from the reports that violent rain storms are almost unknown in this region, it is evident that little in the way of surface scourings, which would lessen the depth is carried into these lakes. People who have lived on their shores for many years assert that they are never frozen over and that only a thin film of ice forms occasionally near the banks.

So far as the Navy is concerned, the canal would be advantageous only in times of peace. All the vessels laid up would be hurried out clear of the locks at the first sign of rupture with a strong naval power, and should our fleet in the sound be defeated by an enemy that had run the batteries at the entrance—the channel is nearly 3 miles wide, and the smoke of forest fires, as well as the fog, is often dense—a retreat would be made, not to a canal with a lock in it, but through the narrow and easily defended approaches to Port Orchard.

His statement in the last paragraph that it would be used as a naval basin only in time of peace is the keynote to the situation. It shows his common sense rather than his technical training. It appeals at once to the experience and knowledge of mankind and makes utterly ridiculous the report of the majority of the last naval board.

In times of peace, which we hope will be all the time, which we know will be almost all the time, is when we want a naval basin of fresh water to preserve our Navy. It is in time of peace when our Navy rusts and decays in salt water at a cost of millions of dollars annually. If fresh water would add a reasonable per cent to the life of these great fighting machines, this one item alone would many times more than pay for the cost of the construction of this canal, for it is estimated that the average life of a battle ship is only twelve years, and one of these modern first-class ships costs twice as much as it would to construct this canal.

What a picture must have been mirrored in the brain of the majority of that board when they rejected this proposition, because "in the face of an enemy it would be no slight matter to get out through this narrow pass." They saw this enemy, all unknown to the people of Seattle and in spite of the system of wire and wireless telegraphy already in operation on Puget Sound, pass our fortifications at the entrance of the strait, pass the fortifications lining the sound for 100 miles, and under the great guns on the surrounding bluffs proceed to bombard the entrance to this canal, regardless of the chances they would have to run to pass out again in front of this line of cannon. Not only does this wonderful enemy do all this, but it is done not only so soon after there is a declaration of war, but so quickly after this nation is aware even of the prospect of war that we would not have time to move a battle ship 6 miles.

With the majority of this board, with this enemy, as with God, all things are possible. Such objections are but the shadowy dreams of an overtechnical imagination. I am glad to know, for the sake of this great work, that of all the eminent engineers and officials of the Navy that have examined this great proposition that such objection has only been subscribed to by the then captain of the Iowa and his three subordinates. Just a little of the saving common sense shown by Captain Clark when he said that this basin would be for use in time of peace and that at the first sign of rupture the vessels would be hurried out would have saved the majority of this board from a position so utterly absurd as to excite the ridicule of everyone except those who signed the report.

As a fresh-water basin, Lake Union and Lake Washington are the only spots available to this great nation; that they will be used finally for this purpose is as certain as that we shall continue to have a navy built of iron and steel.

THE "SOUTH" CANAL SCHEME.

I now wish to call your attention to the claims of the Seattle and Lake Washington Waterway Company. In view of the fact that the board of engineers sent to examine this scheme reported it as practically unworthy of consideration, it seems that there is no necessity of considering this proposition; but as they are still here, still insisting, and still trying to defeat the appropriation for the Government canal on the grounds that they are going to construct a similar canal, connecting Puget Sound with Lake Washington, I desire to take up and discuss their scheme.

My further apology for giving time to this project is that it is the only enemy that this proposition has ever had; because it works and will work directly and indirectly in every way possible to influence this committee; because it constantly misrepresents the people of the city of Seattle and of the State of Washington, and places many of our leading men in a false light; because it is now reiterating and asking an opportunity to repeat these statements; because its pretensions are false, and its motive is to mislead and to conceal the truth.

This company is filling the tide flats south of the city of Seattle, and so far as they are engaged in this work it is legitimate, of benefit to the public, and a financial success. Their claim that they are constructing a canal or ever intend to construct a canal has no foundation in fact whatever. This company states to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that it proposes to construct a canal sufficient for the use of the largest ships afloat, something over 2 miles in length, with a mean average cut of 183 feet and a maximum cut of 340 feet, necessitating at the top, in places, a cut not less than 1,000 feet, and this great canal is to run through the city of Seattle, cutting streets, destroying and damaging property. The president of this company in his communications to this committee says that they have contracted with the State to construct this canal, and that they are prosecuting this work in good faith.

The first statement is untrue, and the second ridiculous. He says that they have already expended $1,300,000. At the present rate of progress, at the present rate of good faith, at the present rate of expenditure, it would take 500 years to complete this canal and cost a billion dollars. This canal, if it could be constructed, if the company was really in good faith trying to construct it, would cost not less than $25,000,000 if they constructed it through the property of others and paid nothing for the land taken or the damage done. The cost of the right of way alone for this canal, if it were possible to obtain it, would cost more than the entire construction of the Government, or "North," canal.

This "South" canal scheme, if possible, would be one of the greatest and one of the costliest ever undertaken. And upon what does this company base its ability to accomplish this stupendous task? Upon assertion alone, the audacity of which is only equaled by its lack of foundation. This company proposes to accomplish one of the most gigantic engineering feats in the history of the world, and yet has neither credit nor money nor good reputation. Its only assets, so far as known, is what it receives for filling the tide lands. Its stock has no market value, and its bonds, so far as the public knows, have never been sold. You will search in vain its voluminous literature for a list of its stockholders. For some reason they have deemed it wise to keep this usual information from the public.

Outside of being prohibited by the cost, I believe that the construction of the so-called "South" canal is practically a physical impossibility. Along the shore of Puget Sound and along the shores of Lake Washington we have what is known as "slides." Owing to the presence of blue clay, great masses of soil slip and move, and when this slide once starts it continues, on even a very moderate slope. These slides are to be found in the immediate vicinity and on each side of the line of the proposed "South" canal. The probability of striking a slide in the construction of this canal would be very great; so great as to amount almost to a certainty.

A slide of this kind once started has so far baffled the skill of engineers to control. These "slides" are one of the worst obstacles known to railroad building, and when one is encounte ed of any size, according to a great German engineer, the only remedy is to move the road. Considering the depth of the cut, I believe that this one fact alone, independent of all others, would prevent the Government or anyone else from attempting to construct the "South" Canal.

MOTIVE OF THE COMPANY.

This company claims to have an exclusive contract with the State to fill the tide lands, some 2,000 acres in entent, lying immediately south of the city of Seattle, and to make the cost of such filling, at a stipulated price, a first lien upon the land filled. In order to get this contract in the first place, it was necessary to show that sufficient material could be procured to fill the entire area to a height of 2 feet above high tide. The dredging of the proposed waterways mentioned in their literature would furnish but a small part of the amount necessary, and out of the necessity for additional material to fill the tide flats was born the canal scheme connected with the proposition. This was the only legitimate purpose the canal was ever intended to serve, the only one it ever has served, and the only one it ever will serve.

There is not now, and never has been, any guaranty or even legal obligation on behalf of this company to construct any canal. From this proposed canal and the waterways is the only place where the company can legally get material for their fill and enforce payment for their work from the tide-land owner. The canal scheme was further used to induce capital to assist the project. The president of the company says:

> It was the main idea upon which the project was financed, and it was made an indispensable requisite by the Mississippi Valley Trust Company, that first undertook the sale of the company's bonds, and also by Morris & Whitehead, bankers, who now handle these bonds.

The whole "South" Canal scheme is told in a sentence: Theh must have capital and material to fill the tide flats. The canal scheme secured both. It is still being used for the same purpose.

The question naturally suggests itself to one not familiar with the situation, Why have the people of Seattle been so liberal in their treatment of this company if it is an enemy to the Government canal? Why was the subsidy which they mention given? Why was their contract with the State renewed?

They came with this scheme to the people of Seattle when we were suffering all the horrors of the worst panic that this nation has ever experienced, when our city was driven to the very verge of despair, when starving men filled our streets, and when universal bankruptcy seemed inevitable, and represented that seven millions of eastern capital could be had to invest in the scheme if the people would but subscribe a subsidy payable upon the completion of the canal. The people knew that the filling of the tide flats would be a public benefit and that to give work to the idle, hungry workingmen looking for an opportunity to work for their bread would be a public blessing.

Under such conditions it was not hard to secure a note when the maker knew that the day of payment would never come. Under such circumstances the subscribers of these notes looked to the legitimate part of the scheme and left the impossible and the visionary to the consciences of the promoters. Until after the giving of the notes this company always denied any interference with or any antagonism to the Government canal.

Their contract has been renewed because the filling of the tide flats is of immense public utility, and if not done under their present contract, as the law now stands, it is doubtful if there could be a plan formulated whereby this great work could be done. Certain it is that every assistance, every favor that the people have shown this company, has been used by it to injure those who gave it help.

NO RIGHT OF WAY.

This company has not even taken the first requisite for the construction of a canal, notwithstanding their pretentions and assertions continued for the last nine years. They have no right of way; they have not attempted to get a right of way; they will not attempt to get a right of way; they can not get a right of way. This fact alone forever condemns this company, convicts it of bad faith, and demonstrates that its statements are unworthy of belief or consideration. For nine years they have protested that they were engaged in building a canal, but during that time they have failed and neglected to even commence condemnation proceedings, as by law required; they have failed to even obtain a place for its construction.

They dare not commence action for this purpose; for, outside of the fact that this company could no more pay the cost of such right of way than they could pay the cost of the construction of the Panama Canal, the first thing that it would have to obtain in condemnation proceedings would be a decree of the court declaring that the undertaking was one of public necessity and of public benefit. Such a decree they know full well can never be obtained. They dare not go into court, and none realize this better than this company. They will not and dare not attempt to procure this right of way.

A PUBLIC ENEMY.

This company has been the persistent and tireless enemy of the Govenment canal in every way that resource and ingenuity could devise except by open and honorable opposition. It has been the traitor at home; it has stabbed in the back; it has not struck aimlessly, but has usually struck in the dark; it is here to-day, repeating its false pretenses, its assertions, its promises, its deceits, its frauds, and its misrepresentations, trying to destroy the dearest hopes of those by whose favor it has waxed fat and by whose patience it is permitted to live. Never was there a more vicious example of the venomous serpent striking its deadly fangs into the bosom that warmed it into life. As a canal scheme it was conceived in fraud, born of false pretenses, and sustained by misrepresentation.

As a canal scheme it is condemned and damned by every sane and disinterested man in the State of Washington. As a canal scheme it is utterly unworthy of the slightest consideration by the Rivers and Harbors Committee or by this House. As a canal scheme it has been and is now a public enemy. If I mistake not the temper of the people of the city of Seattle and the State of Washington, its opposition to the Government canal will cease or it will be strangled to death at the end of its present contract with the State, which expires, I believe, within a year.

BUSSELL'S CLAIM.

One C. B. Bussell has filed a brief with the Rivers and Harbors Committee asking that certain alleged damages be paid to him for certain alleged interest which he claims to own in certain tide lands. He asked that any further appropriations for continuing the work be withheld until his alleged claim is paid. Although he files a brief of more than thirty pages with this committee, all the material information contained therein could have been given in three sentences. The evident purpose of the brief is to conceal and not to inform.

It certainly can not be charged to stupidity instead of design that in all those pages no statement is made of the amount of damages claimed, the amount of land taken, or the interest of the claimant in such lands. The only light we get from this brief is that the supreme court of the State has decided that it was the duty of the state land commissioner to accept from said Russell, under the terms of a certain lease, rents for certain tide lands, upon a paper case made out by Russell.

What is the extent or value of these lands? Thirty pages of brief fail to state. In the thirty pages of brief the claimant omits to state how much land the proposed canal will take from him. In thirty pages of brief this oppressed and outraged citizen makes only this wonderfully lucid and explicit statement as to the outrage that is about to be perpetrated upon him:

> On the 19th day of August, 1899, the said county of King, in which county said city of Seattle is located, claiming title under said proceedings for appropriation of land, executed to the United States a deed purporting to convey to the United States in fee a tract of land embracing a part of the land covered by the said lease held by the undersigned and embraced within the line of survey for said canal.

So the outrage consists of taking an unknown part of an unknown quantity of land upon which the claimant has a shadowy claim of some character, vaguely described "as a thirty years lease."

So far as the brief informs, the part taken might be 1 square foot or 100,000 square acres. All that we know is that the opinion of the Supreme Court shows that the whole of this land rents for $113 per year. What part of this valuable leasehold is taken? What effect upon the balance will the construction of this canal have? We are not told.

On page 5 of said brief it shows that this claimant did not acquire his rights to such lands until December 13, 1900, more than a year after the county had executed this deed to the United States for the canal right of way, as shown in said brief on page 8. The claimant was not an innocent purchaser. He bought with his eyes open. It is to be presumed that he paid only a nominal sum or the purchase price would have been given. He bought it only for speculative purposes.

In other words, he bought this interest in this land for the very purpose for which it is now being used—that is, to compel somebody to pay him something for nothing by obstructing a great public work. Why should this man receive different treatment from that accorded all other property owners? If he has any rights, the courts are open to him. A man who dare not state what he paid for his interest, what his interest is, what part of his interest is taken, what is the value of his interest taken, by his silence alone convicts himself of fraud. He does not come with clean hands. He proves himself unworthy of consideration. This claimant should certainly first establish his right to damages before securing attention.

THE OBLIGATIONS OF THE GOVERNMENT TO CONTINUE THIS WORK.

The Government placed upon the people of King County as a condition precedent to the use of the last appropriation that they should secure free of cost to the Government the right of way. This was done and the money appropriated was used. This action on the part of King County and of the Government contains every element of a contract. While specific performance might not be legally enforcible, every element of equity, every element of good faith, and every moral obligation that would be necessary to obtain such decree is present.

King County has performed her part of the obligation. She has furnished the right of way; the United States has paid the money and accepted it. The United States must either now complete the contract or violate her obligations and the rules of equity and good conscience. No other city of the earth, in proportion to its ability, has ever given so much financial aid toward the construction of a government public work. The right of way given to the Government and accepted by it is worth to-day $1,000,000.

And, again, I protest against the opinion of three untrained, unknown men, of ordinary intelligence, without opportunity to know, and who made no effort to create such opportunity, being considered of any value against obligations of such great weight, on behalf of the Government, and against interest so vast as is involved in this proposition.

I reiterate that to take the opinion of these three men—not experts, not men in any way especially qualified, not men of unusual ability, with only limited opportunities to know—and let this opinion weigh against many eminent men whose judgment has been given to the contrary, against the action of the Government heretofore taken, against the vital commercial interest of a city of 150,000 people, against the marvelous growth of our commerce since their report was made, would not only be ridiculous, but unfair and unjust; it would be perpetrating an outrage upon the great Puget Sound country.

THE WORK WILL BE PERMANENT.

One thing I wish to impress, and that is that when this great canal is once completed it is always completed. There will be no sediment, no silt, no deposits to obstruct or fill it. It is not like the dredging done in many places where you constantly combat the forces of nature, where the dredging must continue as long and as surely as the rivers run to the sea.

If you will give us an appropriation equal to that given to many temporary projects of this character, we will soon have this great permanent work completed.

THE BOARD OF 1902.

The board of 1902, appointed to investigate and report on this proposition, may have been fair, but their appointment, to say the least, was unfortunate. It may not be just, but our people feel that they were not fairly treated by this board. There was one incident, among others, that caused much comment as to the members of this board. On page 3 of their report, Senate Document No. 127, they say:

> The board reassembled in Seattle on the morning of November 17, 1902, and remained in session three days. After due notice, published in the local papers, another public meeting was held in the rooms of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce on the afternoon of November 19, 1902. Persons wishing to state their views in regard to the proposed canal were invited to do so at this meeting, but no one responded to this invitation, and the meeting was therefore adjourned.

At the second meeting mentioned this board did not remain in session five minutes when the chairman, in a manner, to say the least, not exactly after the manner of Lord Chesterfield, abruptly adjourned the board. There were those present who desired to be heard. There was neither justification nor excuse for this action of the board. They doubtless would have received much information at that meeting relative to the necessity for immediate construction of the canal, a proposition against which they afterwards reported. I am sorry to say that nothing in the conduct of this board while at Seattle either won or merited the confidence of the people.

I contend that it was neither competent nor proper for this board of engineers to pass upon the question of the expediency of the construction of this canal. The members thereof have neither training nor experience that fits them to pass upon this question. When this board passed from the engineering to the commercial side of this question, their opinion is not entitled to any more weight than that of any other ordinary citizens that would sojourn a few days in Seattle. Simply because a trained engineer can tell as to the feasibility of the construction of a canal raises no presumption that he is competent to pass upon the advisability of its construction from a commercial standpoint.

I think, if anything, the presumption would be to the contrary. Suppose they did understand the present commercial condition surrounding Seattle, a proposition which I most emphatically deny, are we going to look only to the present? Are we to learn nothing from the past or build nothing for the future? According to this report you should not prepare the swaddling clothes until after the baby is born; we should not begin the building of the battle ship until the enemy has declared war; we should do nothing for the future until the present becomes intolerable. There is a present necessity for the construction of this canal. New mills, new factories, new shops, and new industries of all kinds need it. The people of Seattle, the greatest city of Washington and of the far Northwest, are asking for nothing else, her interests demand it, we are entitled to it, and we expect to have it.

ADVANTAGES.

The commercial advantages of this canal, as set forth by the report of the said board of 1902, are as follows:

> The proposed canal, by affording entrance to Lakes Union and Washington, would add many miles to the present water front of the city of Seattle, and thus afford unlimited wharfage room, as well as unlimited anchorage in fresh water, perfectly protected from storms; the construction and maintenance of wharves would be much less expensive than on the present water front, where the depth of water is very great and where the teredo is especially destructive; vessels lying at wharves would be free from tidal oscillations, and hence the cost of taking on or discharging cargo would be less than in the sound, where the mean tidal oscillation is about 12 feet, and vessels, whether lying at wharf or at anchor, would have the advantage of being in fresh water.

This board then discusses each of these advantages, as follows:

Increased wharfage room.—The commerce of Seattle is already large, and is increasing very rapidly. The present water front of the city is limited in extent, being cut off by the tide flats on the south and by bluffs or hills on the north. If the commerce of the port continues to grow as rapidly as it has in the last few years, the wharfage room may become overtaxed; but it can scarcely be claimed that this is the case at present. It seldom, if ever, happens that all or even a majority of the present wharves are occupied at the same time, and but few vessels are required to lie at anchor for any great length of time while awaiting a berth.

Since the time of the report, August, 1902, Seattle has added to her population 25,000 people, and her business has increased 25 per cent, and the increased demand for wharfage has increased even more; so that since that time the city has not only grown as rapidly as it had in the few years prior, but it has grown more rapidly than ever before.

Increased and safer anchorage room.—The water in Elliott Bay is so very deep that it is not safe for a vessel to anchor, and therefore mooring buoys have to be provided. This, of course, restricts the anchorage room to such points as may be provided with these buoys, and on account of occasional severe storms vessels thus moored are not always safe. But, as stated above, so few vessels are forced to lie at anchor that the providing of additional anchorage room is not yet a necessity, and if it were it could be done far less expensively than by constructing a canal into Lakes Union and Washington.

This last observation, while true, is not pertinent, as increased anchorage is only one of the benefits, and no one would advocate the construction of the canal for this purpose alone.

Decreased cost of constructing and maintaining wharves.—It is not to be denied that on account of the very rapid deepening of the water in Elliott Bay the construction of wharves is unusually expensive, and that on account of the great activity of marine insects in these waters the piles, unless treated, last but a comparatively short time. This disadvantage, however, is largely offset by the abundance and cheapness of lumber in that region. Furthermore, it is questionable whether the general public would receive enough benefit from the decreased cost of wharves to justify the Government in expending money with that object in view.

The cost of timber, as mentioned in this paragraph, cuts but little figure in the cost of wharves. It is the labor of getting the piles to the wharves and the cost of treating them and driving them. Without this treatment they would only last from twelve to eighteen months. These facts, together with the depth of the water and the rapid sloping of the shores, is what makes the wharves so expensive to build and so expensive to maintain. The statement of the board that this advantage is largely offset by the cheapness of lumber in this region is obviously ridiculous.

Absence of tidal oscillations and consequent decrease in the cost of loading and unloading vessels.—The great range of tide level in the sound may, and doubtless does, increase in some measure the cost of handling cargoes; but this increase is not thought to be very material. In fact, the stevedore rates are not now perceptibly higher in Seattle than in San Francisco, where the mean range of tides is only about 4½ feet.

There is an extreme change of 18 feet in the tide in Seattle Harbor. No man that ever saw a boat load or unload that does not know that such change is a material disadvantage not only in the loading and unloading of vessels, but in the construction and maintenance of wharves. The board concludes upon this question of the advisability of the construction of the canal as follows:

> The board considers, therefore, that the demands of commerce are not at all adequate at the present time to warrant the construction of the proposed canal; and as the Navy Department holds that there is no necessity for the canal from a naval standpoint, the board is of the opinion that the construction of the proposed canal at the present time is not advisable.

The conclusion of this board is that so far as the benefit to the already established and existing industries is concerned it would not be advisable at present to construct the canal. If there was no future, if we were forever hereafter to stand in our present position, then this statement of the board might have some weight—just the weight, however, that should be given to the opinion of three ordinary men; no more. They say that the present industries do not demand it, but what of the new industries that must be constructed on the water front?

Consider what an advantage it would have been to the Moran Shipbuilding Company, now constructing one of the great battle ships of the Navy, to have had that great plant on Lake Washington, in fresh water, free from the perpetual rise and fall of the tide and free from the destroying insects that infest the Sound. Think of the advantage it would be to the lumber and shingle mills constantly being erected to be on this great lake, not counting the first cost of a location, for there is on Lake Washington more than 75 miles of shore line, affording splendid locations for mills and shops and factories. Fresh water, freedom from tides and storms, unequaled climate—scarcely a day in a year unfit for outdoor work—great coal fields along its shores, water power sufficient to turn the machinery of the world in close proximity, reached by all railroads.

In short, Lake Washington possesses every industrial advantage that nature could bestow save one—that is, access for great ships to the sea; and even in this direction nature has done so much that there is comparatively little for man to do. No man who is familiar with the facts but what will admit all of the natural advantages of this canal, as I have stated; but the officials constantly say, "Not now, wait a while; the business of your city does not yet demand it." Some years ago you gave us a survey; then a small appropriation to commence work on a canal much smaller than the one at present contemplated; then you annexed as a condition precedent to the expenditure of the appropriation that we must, free of cost, secure to the Government a right of way.

Although then in the midst of the panic, the citizens of Seattle started out bravely on this, to them, great work. It was done at a cost of $250,000. Still the Government hesitated, and during the time of that hesitation, from 1897 to 1902, Seattle grew from a city of 40,000 to a city of 110,000. Then a board again pronounced the undertaking feasible, but said, "Not yet;" and before that report can be considered we have added 40,000 more to our population, and during all of these years our increase in business has surpassed our increase in population, and to-day, both in business and population, Seattle is growing more rapidly than ever before.

I beg to remind you, gentlemen, that five years ago our shipping business was insignificant, but to-day there is more shipping business transacted at Seattle than is transacted at any other city on the Pacific coast. If this canal were pushed with all speed, by the time of its completion Seattle would be a city of half a million of people, with a trade ten times greater than at present, and the conditions under which the construction of this canal would become advisable, even according to this board, would have been reached and passed.

I will give you some of the reasons for this faith. The only prophecy of the future is the past and present. The discovery of gold in Alaska assured Seattle's prosperity, but the day that Dewey sailed into Manila Bay assured her commercial supremacy. That day was the greatest day in the history of Seattle. That day the Fates decreed that Seattle was destined to be one of the great cities of the earth—the greatest city on the greatest ocean in this greatest nation. That day inevitably designated Seattle as the gateway to the Orient. It brought us commercially face to face with 500,000,000 customers—customers who largely buy what we produce and who largely sell what we can not produce, a condition radically different, promising much for the future, from the conditions between this country and Europe. This nation controls practically one-half of the coast line of the Pacific, and if we are not criminally negligent or inconceivably ignorant of our interest with our new possessions, we will eventually control the future trade with the Orient and the Philippines. The extent of this trade no mind can measure, and it will in time certainly become the greatest foreign trade of this country.

Seattle has to-day two great transcontinental railways; three more send their cars into Seattle. These railways from St. Paul to the coast traverse a section of country that is rapidly developing and is capable of supporting a large population. Such conditions, at least not to so great extent, do not exist with those roads that terminate at San Francisco. Seattle is two days nearer the oriental ports than is San Francisco. Seattle is 500 miles nearer the Great Lakes than San Francisco. When a car comes from the East loaded with wheat or cotton or other products to the wharves at Seattle it does not have to depend upon oriental products or return empty, but it is loaded with Washington lumber or shingles.

It is estimated that there is to-day standing in the forests of Washington 195,000,000,000 feet of merchantable timber; enough to supply the demand of the civilized world for years to come. Last year Washington furnished more than 50 per cent of all the shingles used in the United States. The Washington shingle comes even to the Atlantic coast. The Puget Sound country is enabled to furnish loaded cars both ways, thus solving one of the greatest problems of modern transportation and meeting a condition impossible for other Pacific ports. Puget Sound timber is not only brought eastward by railways, but it is carried by ships to every part of the civilized world.

This advantage of loaded cars both ways, of being nearer to oriental markets, nearer to the Great Lakes, of having between it and the Great Lakes a rich and productive country, as certain as our trade with the Orient continues to grow, will, day by day and year by year, with the ever-increasing power, weigh in Seattle's favor, and will eventually, as certain as the law of supply and demand, as certain as distance shall be an element in transportation, establish Seattle's supremacy.

SEATTLE'S GROWTH.

With the law requiring all army and navy supplies to be carried in American bottoms, and the coastwise laws applied to the trade between the Philippines and this country, laws that are likely to be enacted at this session of Congress, in the next two years our trade will grow with a rapidity heretofore unapproached even by the recent marvelous increase. The two greatest ships that float the seas have just been launched for the trade between the Orient and Seattle.

I call your attention to the following facts with relation to the growth of Seattle as bearing upon the necessity for the rapid prosecution of the construction of the canal:

Seattle had a population in 1897 of 40,000 people; to-day she has 150,000. In 1900 $173,580 was spent in street improvements; in 1902 $1,014,688, and in 1903 $1,230,094.

Building permits: 1897, 616,000; 1902, 6,384,000; 1903, 6,914,000.

Value of improvements: 1897, $360,131; 1902, $6,325,178; 1903, $6,495,781.

Assessed valuation of property: 1903, $56,942,505; an increase over 1902 of $5,373,852.

Mercantile business has increased, as a whole, within the past twelve months, from 20 to 25 per cent.

Bank deposits: 1896, $2,710,371; 1902, $28,242,805; 1903, $31,762,324.

Bank clearances: 1896, $28,157,065; 1902, $191,885,973; 1903, $206,913,571.

Post-office receipts: 1896, $82,549; 1902, $276,983; 1903, $338,024.

Custom-house receipts: 1896, $66,794; 1902, $507,760; 1903, $578,673.

Real-estate transfers: 1896, $8,574,965; 1902, $17,927,763; 1903, $18,486,510.

Seattle has 92 miles of street railway, employs 1,825 men, and carried in 1903 42,000,000 passengers.

At the one shipyard of the Moran Bros. & Co. not only has there been splendid progress made on the battle ship Nebraska during 1903, but in addition, at this yard, there has been repaired 116 different vessels at a total cost of more than $2,000,000.

Since the board met and made their report that there was no present necessity for increased wharfage room at Seattle there has been built twenty-three new wharves, furnishing about 3 miles additional frontage. The boats going from and coming to Seattle in the last year have carried 1,000,000 passengers.

Lumber shipments: 1899, 647,836,262 feet; 1902, 1,134,147,226 feet: 1903, 1,410,572,846 feet.

Shingles: 1903, 5,722,240,000; increase over 1902, 593,760,000 (11½ per cent).

Number of cars of lumber and shingles: 1897, 25,610; 1902, 69,560; 1903, 78,465.

Last year we sold to the Philippines exports to the value of $614,151, and goods from the Philippines for transportation amounted to more than $1,000,000.

The total commerce of Seattle for 1903 was as follows:

Foreign exports	$12,894,905
Foreign imports	20,343,552
Shipped coastwise	22,006,523
Received from coastwise	16,212,232
Shipped to local ports	10,165,262
Received from local ports	7,032,755
Total	88,655,229

I challenge the history of the world to equal that record. This is but the beginning of Seattle's trade. It is but a promise of what the future will bring.

Let me urge you, in conclusion, to remember that our country has a Pacific coast as well as an Atlantic coast; that the Pacific looks out upon a people vastly greater in population, a trade vastly greater in its future possibilities than does the Atlantic. The Pacific coast faces 500,000,000 people who are anxious and willing to trade with us. In the Orient lies our future commercial prosperity; in the Orient lies our future commercial greatness; in the Orient lies the hope of the future commercial supremacy of this great Republic.

Fate has destined Puget Sound to be the gateway of this great oriental trade. Puget Sound to-day has more natural advantages, more natural resources, is more rapidly developing than any other region upon the face of the globe. Its marvelous growth within the last few years is but the beginning of what it will be within the next few years to come.

Eight years ago Seattle had practically no trade upon the seas, but to-day more business is transacted upon the wharves of Seattle than is transacted at the wharves of any other city upon the entire western coast of the great Pacific Ocean.

While I claim no power "to look into the seeds of time," yet I have perfect confidence in the prophecy that some of this House will live to see Seattle the third city, commercially, in this country. The people of Seattle and of the State of Washington are terribly earnest in their request for the construction of this canal.

We understand its benefits and its necessities. We know the possibilities and the promises of our city and her commerce, so we come asking an appropriation; ont an insignificant appropriation, as crumbs thrown to a beggar, but we want an appropriation commensurate with our commerce, commensurate with our future greatness.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. VAN DUZER].

Mr. VAN DUZER. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply for the purpose of referring to a little incident that occurred here the other day, in which the State of Nevada and the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and myself, as a Representative from Nevada, were concerned.

When the rule regarding the statehood bill was being debated, one of my constituents from Nevada sent in his card and I promptly responded and escorted him and his charming bride to the gallery. My friend was a young man from Tonopah [laughter], and he just recently married a very handsome young lady from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.] There is a sort of reciprocity between Pennsylvania and Nevada. Pennsylvania comes to Nevada for her rich mines and, in this case, Nevada has gone to Pennsylvania for a handsome wife. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DALZELL had the floor, and I remarked to the young lady sitting by my side, "There is one of the distinguished statesmen from Pennsylvania," referring to Mr. DALZELL. "Oh, yes," said she, "we are very proud of Mr. DALZELL [laughter]; I live in his district." I was just about to add a good Democratic compliment as a courtesy, when, with a sweeping gesture and characteristic emphasis, he said, in closing his speech, "And we have before us always, and will always have before us, unfortunately, because of our system, the example of Nevada." [Laughter.]

It is unnecessary to state that I hastily excused myself and sought the floor, but by the time I reached the floor he had moved the previous question. It was my intention to have asked unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five minutes to explain why the State of Nevada is "an unfortunate example." [Laughter.] I rise in my place at this time merely to show why the State of Nevada is not "an unfortunate example." [Laughter.]

I thank God that the gentleman "will always have before him the example of Nevada." [Laughter.] I am quite sure that the example of Nevada is anything but unfortunate as far as Pennsylvania is concerned. Some few months ago Charles M. Schwab invested a few thousand dollars in Tonopah, and in sinking a shaft struck ore the size and richness of which indicates millions, and just to-day in looking over the Tonopah papers I notice that Charles M. Schwab and a party of Pittsburg millionaires have gone to Tonopah in a private car. [Laughter.]

While we do not particularly fancy the example "of Pennsylvania steel-trust promotions" [laughter], yet we welcome Pennsylvania and hope that the next private car will include the Hon. JOHN DALZELL, of Pittsburg. [Laughter.]

To-day Philadelphia, sadly stricken by the asphalt trust, the steel trust, and Lake Superior consolidated, is rapidly recouping her losses in Tonapah.

It strikes me that Nevada has not been such an unfortunate example, at least as far as Pennsylvania is concerned, because to-day both Pittsburg and Philadelphia are investing more heavily in Nevada than in any section of the West and are reaping a golden harvest of profits. [Laughter and applause.] All I fear is that when once the distinguished gentleman brushes the cobwebs of protection from his vision he will be wanting to annex Nevada to Pennsylvania. [Laughter and applause.]

But, sir, I wish to say to you that the greatness and glory which surround your own section are due rather to law than to human energy or natural resources. Pittsburg, a city which you no doubt love, is the creature of law. High protection has enabled vast fortunes to be accumulated and has reared a mighty city at the junction of two waterways. Protection, which has stifled competition, fostered trusts, created monopoly, stimulated political corruption, has made Pittsburg a city, it is true, to be wondered at; but, sir, whatever of greatness attaches to my State is and has been the result of human energy and of the natural resources, and we have not relied upon the Government or the Republican party or upon statutory enactment for our history, full of activity, intensity, and achievement. [Applause.]

If there has been any unfortunate example, it is certainly not the example of Nevada, but the example of the Republican party, which has been unfortunate for Nevada. I recognize in you the most distinguished leader of the Republican party in Congress, and if western Pennsylvania has outstripped Nevada in wealth and population it is because your party and your party policy, while it was giving legislative protection to your chief industry—your iron mines and steel plants—was striking down our great industry—our silver mines and milling plants.

Your party forced us into the Union. Your party, the Republican party, needed Nevada. You had to have her. She served your purposes splendidly. She saved the Union and your party with her vote, and saved the finances of this nation when we needed metallic money. I serve notice upon Congress right now, and particularly upon the Republicans in this House, that I do not propose that any man shall make a political football out of Nevada. [Applause.]

At this late day, when the very darkest of her days was caused by the adverse legislation of the Republican party upon our leading industries, and while you are profoundly silent upon the silver question and are standing guard as watchful sentinels over what you term the "corpse of silver," you know full well that it is to you a live issue, which you will revivify as soon as expedient from a political standpoint for the purpose of absolutely destroying it if you have the power so to do.

It is not a dead issue, and to-day it is the greatest factor in our financial system. Your Fowler bill, your Hill bill, your Aldrich bill are all aimed at this issue, which you are constantly endeavoring to keep in abeyance, and your ultimate intention is to eliminate silver from our currency and reduce its value to a few cents an ounce. The Republican party, as far as Nevada is concerned, is indeed an "unfortunate example."

Why should the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, the distinguished leader of the Republican party, see fit to lament Nevada? Nevada has no cause to hide her face in shame, and it is a distinguished honor for me to defend her from the attacks of gentlemen whose geographical horizon is bounded either by partisanship or by local self-interest. [Applause.] Her admission into the Union was dramatic; her services at that time to the Union a continuing source of pride. Her United States Senators for forty years have ranked with the statesmen of America.

They have contributed more to the legislative history of the nation than have those from Pennsylvania. Her wealth has added as much to civilization and progress as has that of Pennsylvania. It is true we have no steel trust, nor have we ever had any Homestead riots nor whisky rebellions, neither do we have long hours of labor nor low wages. With few millionaires, yet we are without paupers. Our wealth is not wrought by tears, heartaches, or blood, by child labor, foreign labor, nor by motherhood's sacrifice. [Applause.]

It is needless for me to enter into any extended description of Nevada's history and Nevada's resources.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania thinks Nevada an unfortunate example. Is it because of her history? Her history is one of a race of conquering and dominating pioneers, adding to civilization an empire of magnificent resources. Is it because of her productions? She has added more to the wealth of the nation than Pittsburg. Is it because of her population? Then I simply wish to call to the attention of the gentleman that the future development of western America will be a realization more fascinating and wonderful than that which has marked the growth of the great East.

Jefferson could hardly foresee the magnificence of the Louisiana Exposition at St. Louis. Lewis and Clark could hardly foretell the future of the great Northwest. The present development of the West, if sounded in prophecy of fifty years ago, would have seemed more visionary than the stories Columbus carried back to Spain. One hundred years ago Pittsburg was the outpost of western civilization. Fifty years ago Pittsburg was a village and no one could foresee the day when the smoke of commerce should hang like a cloud over a rich and populous city. Without any stretch of imagination, in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, we have in Nevada a town named Reno that has more promise to-day than Pittsburg had fifty years ago.

It will be no extravagant statement to say that the possibilities of Reno to-day are as great as those of Pittsburg fifty years ago. Reno's natural resources are as great. Her agricultural possibilities are greater. Her mineral possibilities are greater. Her railroad possibilities are as great. She is not only the gateway to the West, through which commerce must go East and West and North and South, as it was the case with Pittsburg fifty years ago, but she is the center of a richer and more resourceful territory, with possibilities of less competition than Pittsburg. We have not the coal, but Reno is situated to-day as the natural center of a country the richest in the West. Her climatic conditions are most favorable. Her present population is full of energy and hustle. She is a city of beautiful residences. She is an educational center. She is full of industrial activity. She is destined to be an agricultural center, a railroad center, a mining center, and a manufacturing center.

Her railroads reach northward into southern Oregon, where the forests of the West are untouched; her roads lead south to where the greatest mineral zones of the world lie. She is midway between Portland and Los Angeles, and will be some day the midway terminal between the eastern slope of the Sierras, with her lumber, mines, horticulture, agriculture, power possibilities, and mineral wealth tributary to her. As a railroad center she has the lead of any city in the arid region.

As a manufacturing center she has power possibilities which may make her a Worcester or a Salem. A turbulent stream with rapid fall furnishes unlimited possibilities. And then, why ship our wool to New England when we have the facilities at home? Why ship our hides and leather eastward, when we have the raw material and the power at home? Why ship our cattle to Chicago and Kansas City, when we can build our own great cold-storage plants.

Why ship our ores to Denver, Salt Lake City, and El Paso, when Reno is a natural smelting center with inexhaustible mineral resources? Pittsburg of fifty years ago hardly justified the predictions of the Pittsburg of to-day. Yet within three years Reno has grown from 5,000 to 12,000 in population.

Give Reno competitive freight rates by competing lines of transcontinental lines, make her a terminal traffic point, and she will rival Sacramento, Cal., or Salt Lake City, Utah. Her growth will be magic.

Nevada only needs opportunity to make her great; Reno only needs opportunity to make her great. She is the natural terminal point for southern Oregon. Reno is destined to be a great distributing center. She will be the industrial clearing house of the arid region. She needs low freight rates to bring in raw materials and low freight rates to ship out her products and finished raw materials.

The Newlands irrigation act means an immense population for the arid region. Reno stands as the gateway. Mr. Newell, of the reclamation, prophesies a population of 500,000 for Nevada, and under such conditions Reno will be a young Pittsburg.

She stands ready to furnish all the beef Pittsburg can eat; she can supply you with creamery butter, with honey. Her woolen mills of the future can clothe you; her shoe manufactories of the future keep you dry shod. She can supply the lumber of commerce for you.

She can give you copper sufficient for your electrical purposes, your borax, your salt, and furnish gold and silver for your commerce and dividends from mines to strengthen your financial credit.

You call Nevada an unfortunate example, and yet the dreams of a swift industrial development will make Reno in half a century the Pittsburg of the West—in population possibly not your equal now, but in patriotic citizenship quite your equal, in abundance of raw materials your superior, in mineral products at least your rival, and in the production of the precious metals without a peer.

When we look to a future bright with such promise, is there aught in the example of brave Nevada that can shame any American citizen?

Large in area, small in population, rich in resources, which the policy of your party has continually retarded, we are an examples of energy and achievement of which the Union should be proud.

Senator WILLIAM M. STEWART added to the Constitution of the United States an amendment which has shaped our racial and industrial greatness.

Senator John P. Jones delivered a speech on protection which has since become a text-book, and from which even the great protection State of Pennsylvania has never equaled.

Senator FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS is the father of irrigation, a governmental policy which will have a wider influence on American civilization than any law ever placed on the statute book, a measure which will furnish homes for the millions and build up an empire as rich and populous as can be found anywhere in the world.

Has the fortunate example of Pennsylvania ever produced three Senators whose names will live as long in political history? Our Mackey has done more for commerce than your greatest money king; our George Hearst more for education than your Carnegie.

Our millionaires will have influenced our times more than yours.

In literature we have our Bret, Hartes, Mark Twains, our Sam Davis, and our Sam Dunham.

I might compare and contrast and exploit our greatness with that of your State, and I could reach only one conclusion, and that would be that in the example of Pennsylvania there is little we could follow with credit, but in the example of Nevada there is much that Pennsylvania could follow with profit. [Laughter.]

I think the time has arrived in Nevada's history, now so full of promise, and whose history has been a history bright in example, that, fast assuming a position when her wealth and population is making her a factor, further taunt or insult should be omitted, and that gentlemen who are prone to criticise should first inform themselves as to our history and our possible future.

Feeling that the constant carping about Nevada has become a habit rather than an intentional reflection, I promise the House that just as often as the misinformed continue to hold Nevada up as an unfortunate example, just so long will her present Representative hold her up as an example that any State could emulate with safety and with honor. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DALZELL. I only suggest that my friend from Nevada would do well hereafter to wait until a speech is ended before he makes his compliments. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN].

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, several days ago I introduced a bill, H. R. 14833, identical in terms with the bill introduced by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], authorizing the Commissioner-General of Immigration to establish an information bureau on Ellis Island for the better enlightenment of immigrants and for their better distribution throughout this land.

I fear, Mr. Chairman, that we do not fully realize the tremendous influence that immigration has had and is destined to have upon the internal development of this country.

We are a nation born, as it were, of the peoples of the earth. Already more than one-third of our population are of foreign parentage, and this number is annually augmented by over three-quarters of a million immigrants. That the future of this country will be wrought largely by foreign hands is beyond question. What is the work of development which this country unfolds before the industrious immigrant, and what are the opportunities offered him here? These are the questions now agitating the country and which we as Representatives are called on to aid in solving. Some rambling poet thus apostrophized this country:

> America! half-brother of the world!
> With something good and bad of every land.

So wide and varied are our industries, so cosmopolitan are our people, that we can scarcely escape the application of these lines. We may add, however, that with an area measured only by an entire zone, with climatic conditions unapproximated in any country on the globe, with physical conditions as varied as the thoughts of the wildest dreamer, we have, by the skillful and energetic use of those natural advantages, become not only a brother but an elder brother, feeding and clothing the nations of the earth. We lead the world in the production of cotton, corn, and wheat and it is to this fact that we owe the distinction of being the wealthiest of nations.

With what zeal, then, should we guard the agricultural interests of those sections which pour into our coffers annually millions of newly created wealth.

In passing let us look briefly at the industrial status of those sections. In the Middle West, and some Northern States where corn is the product, we find a dense white population, composed largely of desirable European immigrants and their descendants, and as a natural consequence we find farm lands in the highest state of cultivation and selling at what to us of the South seem to be fabulous prices. Agricultural conditions there are all that could be desired.

In the West and Northwest, the great wheat-growing section of this country, we have witnessed industrial evolutions which are simply startling. Modern appliances for planting and harvesting, and the railroads, those great arteries of commerce which have done so much for our internal improvement, have enabled a somewhat scattered immigrant population to take first place in the world's supply of cereals.

Now, let us turn to the South and view the conditions there, for it is of this section mainly that I desire to speak.

It is said that in the South alone may be found the pure blood of the settlers of this country. This is a very pretty thought, but it scarcely compensates for retarded industrial development.

Though we have about $200,000,000 invested in textile industries in the South, to say nothing of the millions invested in other manufacturing enterprises, we are nevertheless essentially an agricultural people.

The doctrine of political economy is: "That communities manufacture only when the population has become too dense to profit by tilling the soil." Measured by this standard we are not naturally a manufacturing people, and are such only because of our proximity to the raw material and of our unequaled natural advantages. While we welcome capital into our midst, and feel that ere long conditions will warrant a fuller development of manufacturing interests, the sudden and enormous growth of this industry has brought us face to face with a grave problem.

Since the days of slavery our lands have been but poorly tilled. No thought of their preservation is ever entertained, the doctrine being to "wear out the old and cut down the new." A German family is often supported on the products grown on 2 acres of land, while 30 to 40 acres constitute a one-horse farm in the South. This prodigality and wasting of lands, than which none better may be had in the world, is due to the scarcity of labor; and yet from ranks already thin have been drawn annually thousands of mill operatives.

We are practically without competition in the production of cotton. Our crop just marketed amounted to over half a billion dollars. Think what this means to the South. Think what it means to the United States. Can we afford to allow this industry to decline? And yet, I tell you that it is declining. Every year witnesses a great influx to our cotton mills of the intelligent farming population, which at best was inadequate for the proper cultivation of our soil. Under the new conditions cities and towns are springing up everywhere. Demand for farm products of every kind is growing, while the capacity for production, owing to the scarcity of labor, is declining fearfully.

But some, from the past, would call up the skeleton of overproduction. Mr. Chairman, in a few years the South, under the most favorable conditions, can not supply the world's demand for cotton. Have we not seen the world's demand raised from 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 bales within the past five years? What, at this rate of increase, will be the demand, say, twenty years hence? A well-informed English authority states that at the present ratio of demand the world will require 23,000,000 bales of cotton annually within the next ten years.

Those who read between the lines in the many eastern disturbances know that within a score of years China, like Japan, will have felt the quickening effect of western influences, and in the most remote corner of that great sleeping Empire will be sold the products of this and European countries. Overproduction to-day is but little more than a specter of Wall street, and at most can be only temporary. The danger is that England, being the greatest sufferer from underproduction in this country, will so encourage cotton growing in India and Africa as to develop serious competition. Already the English spinners have this matter under consideration, with a view to urging it upon the Government.

If increased production is necessary to meet increased demands, let the demand be met by southern development. Having seen the great western wilderness, with its hostile Indians, its scarcity of water, and other attendant obstacles, pass, as if by magic, into peaceful, thrifty Commonwealths, and, considering that this was wrought by immigrants in little more than a quarter of a century, we conclude that with this tide of immigration once turned southward we may look forward to an era of agricultural development which will meet all demands upon us and allay competition abroad.

In the light of experience it is evident that great activity and concert of action on the part of the southern people will be necessary in order to direct immigration southward. Of 700,000 foreigners landing in this country during the year ending June 30, 1902, less than 10,000 settled in the entire South, and 5,000 of that number settled in Louisiana.

Let me digress a little here to correct two erroneous ideas which have militated very much against the South in securing desirable immigrants. The first error is that the South does not desire immigration. This is utterly untrue. While the South has never exercised itself as other sections have in securing immigrants, there is no place under the Stars and Stripes where the stranger finds a more congenial reception.

The second error is that the immigrant fears he will be degraded by contact with the negro in the same line of work. In answer to this I will say that the southern white man works in the field and elsewhere with the negro and is fully respected. From personal observation I may add that the immigrants who settled in my own section are not only as highly respected, but are as thrifty and prosperous as the best of our citizens.

Let me say in this connection that there is no disposition in the South to get rid of the negro. While he is improvident touching his own affairs, under the intelligent direction of the white man he is unexcelled as a laborer. When let alone by agitators he is contented and happy and is well adapted to the warm, southern climate. He will be found as useful to the small immigrant farmer as he has proven to be to us.

We will now review some of the opportunities which the South offers to the immigrant:

The land area of the South is 585,310,000 acres. In 1900 the total farm acreage was 387,690,426 acres. The total improved acreage was only 145,185,599. This leaves about 242,000,000 acres of farm lands to be put into profitable cultivation.

The unimproved farm lands of the South give a greater area for settlement and cultivation than the total area of Texas, Louisiana, and Arkansas combined. Over 110,000,000 acres of this land lies east of the Mississippi River, and there is comparatively a small amount of it which is not available for crops of some kind. For diversity, quantity, and quality of productions the Southern States are unsurpassed. Mr. Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, after touring the South, said: "No section of the world offers such inducements for diversified farming;" and he predicted a future for that section such as has not been witnessed before in this country.

That our people grow cotton almost exclusively is due to the fact that at prevailing prices it is the most profitable and merchantable crop that is planted. Where the farmer turns his attention to diversified crops the results compare favorably with the best efforts of farmers without this region. A Pennsylvania farmer settling in North Carolina on lands which cost him $5 per acre, lands thought to have been worn out, raised 18 bushels of wheat per acre. An Illinois farmer settling in Madison County, Ala., a few years ago bought 500 acres of land at $15 per acre. Last year this land yielded 30 bushels of wheat per acre on 175 acres planted.

A farmer in Anderson County, my district, realized this year on a one-horse farm of ordinary land, from cotton and other products, over $1,200. According to the figures of a late yearbook, good and bad wheat fields together in South Carolina yielded an average of $8.62 per acre, against $7.57 in Minnesota, $7.07 in North Dakota, $6.84 in South Dakota, and $9.75 in Iowa; and the value of land in South Carolina is much lower than in any of the States named. A few years ago tobacco culture was not thought of in South Carolina. To-day, from a comparatively small area in which the experiment has been made, we sell annually more than $2,000,000 worth of tobacco.

In the great Appalachian belt, from the Potomac River to the Tennessee line, the soil is peculiarly adapted to fruit growing, and especially to the apple industry. Virginia has been giving attention to this industry, and she is now the third State in the Union, with a fair prospect of becoming the first, in the production of this fruit. The celebrated Albemarle pippin, of Virginia, is considered the finest export apple that this country produces, and practically the whole crop of this variety is marketed in London at $5 per barrel and more. It is said that the mountainous sections of North and South Carolina are also well adapted to the growth of this variety of apple. In this same belt peaches, grapes, and other fruits are produced in the highest state of excellence.

That the greatest yield of corn per acre was in South Carolina, I need scarcely remind you. That the North has its vegetable gardens in the South Atlantic and Gulf States; that the greater portion of semitropical fruits, such as oranges and bananas, are shipped from Southern States; that great quantities of fish and game with which the northern markets are supplied are shipped from that section are facts with which every vendor in the streets is familiar.

In fact, the scope of southern industries is so great that we can not classify or enumerate them in the brief space of this discourse. Suffice it to say that no worthy immigrant from the North or from Europe can land in our midst without finding an inviting field in which to exercise his bent or inclination.

As I am perhaps more familiar with the peculiar advantages of my own State, and as it is perhaps becoming that I should particularize only with reference to it, I shall attempt to lay before you some of those advantages.

South Carolina's 34,000 square miles of territory may be considered the garden spot of the Atlantic coast country and the ideal location for the home seeker for several very potent reasons. The State is in the shape of an isosceles triangle, protected on its northern side by the towering walls of the Blue Ridge mountain chain, while on the east, the coast line, the tempering Gulf stream makes its inward bend on its way to the British Isles, its influence on the climate being so marked that an annual mean temperature of 65° is obtained, it never being greater than 50°, even in the extreme alpine region.

In the center of the triangle an unvarying mean temperature of 47.2° in winter, 63.4° in spring, 76.4° in summer, and 63.9° in autumn is maintained, with ten and one-half hours of daylight on the shortest day of the year and fourteen on the longest. With such meteorological conditions South Carolina is easily the southern France of America. Coupling this matchless climate—known the world over through the scores who have sought and recovered lost health at such resorts as Aiken, Camden, and Summerville—with a most productive, sandy, and porous soil, capable of growing money crops the year through—cotton, indigo, tobacco, sugar, tea, rice, corn, wheat, oats, barley, fruits of all kinds of finest quality, truck of every description, in short, all crops common to the different portions of the United States—coupling this with rarest deposits of minerals—gold, tin, iron, lead, copper, manganese, bismuth, aluminum—granite of finest quality, kaolin and other money-value clays, her great water powers and other resources of value to the investor, the warrant for the assertion that this State is the ideal spot for the home-seeker who wishes to devote his energy to agriculture or industrial pursuits or the investor seeking sure results from his energy and enterprise is apparent.

South Carolina is one of the original States of this Union. She has been primarily an agricultural State. She has never realized the need of labor until the last year or two, but now she has established her "department of agriculture, commerce, and immigration," in charge of Commissioner E. J. Watson, a most able and efficient officer, and issued her invitation to the peoples of other lands and other portions of this country to come and enjoy her exceptional advantages. This has come about by reason of the industrial awakening of her people in the last decade and by the phenomenal success attained in industrial development. The upbuilding of the cotton-manufacturing industry and of manufacturing enterprises of other kinds to that degree which makes her the second State in the Union to-day, with about $40,000,000 invested in such plants, as stated generally of the South, has unconsciously drawn from the fields the intelligent white tenant class of her citizens, a strong type of American citizen, until now intelligent white labor is needed to carry the agricultural development to that state of perfection that it can easily attain.

The tendency of the negro is to the trades in the great centers of population. This is following in the wake of the education of the race. This State is to-day aiding the negro in these lines by maintaining a mechanical college, where he is given such training, preferring intelligent white labor on the farms, with their intensified methods, and aiding in the solution of a great problem.

Diversified farming is now claiming the attention of this State's best farmers and landowners, and they want European, eastern and western, methods employed. Hence they invite the sturdy white settlers to come and share with them what nature has so lavishly bestowed upon their land. They ask them to come while undeveloped lands may be had at minimum prices on easy terms, and not, as in thickly settled strips of country, at $150 an acre. It is the province of this new department of our State government, just established, to collect these lands, locate the settlers, and watch over them, giving fostering care to their welfare.

The stock-raising industry is now merely in its infancy, notwithstanding the thousands of acres of rich and valuable meadow lands. Many are going into this industry, and the man who is familiar with its methods, settling there at this time, can not but reap a harvest. So it is with poultry raising, dairying, and trucking for the early eastern markets.

No State in the Union for its size has finer railroad facilities. The map is a network of railroad lines, converging at the center of the triangle, Through the State run the three main North-to-South trunk lines, with fast passenger and refrigerator service, each with many branch lines, reaching into all the counties. One of the trunk lines has more of its mileage in this State than in any other of the States it traverses. The navigation of the inland waterways is now thorough, a line with connections with steamships for New York, Philadelphia, and Boston having just been opened to the very center of the State, making rich river bottom lands available for such settlers as are furnished by Holland, for instance. The telegraph and the telephone connect practically every town and hamlet with the outside world, and the farms can and do secure the latter service.

Educational advantages in South Carolina are unsurpassed. In the country the State maintains a superior type of public free schools under the direction of the State superintendent of education. All the towns and cities have modern and up-to-date free public schools and high schools, carrying the education of the children to the college stage. The State maintains and heartily supports a literary higher institution of learning with a record of a century, a splendid agricultural and mechanical college, a fine military academy, and a college for the literary and industrial training of its women that possesses a widespread reputation. There are in different portions of the State four other high-class colleges and universities for the education of men and seven colleges for the education of women. Surely South Carolina's educational atmosphere equals her matchless climate and makes her a leader in the cause of education.

But not alone in the instances mentioned is the prosperous and rapidly developing little State a leader. She has set the pace in the South in the matter of building model good roads. It is now some years since the work was begun, and the sand-clay mixture, well-drained system of roads was first introduced here, soon attracting the attention of the Federal Government's good-roads experts, who have used them as object lessons in good-road building in other parts of the country. To-day this State has miles upon miles of this class of roads, a joy to the farmer and automobilist alike, and the good work has but just begun. In some counties the splendid granite deposits have been well utilized in the building of lasting macadam roadways.

The topography of the country in South Carolina has blessed the State with rarest water powers. A conservative estimate places the developed and undeveloped water powers at 1,000,000 horsepower of water power. The development of a portion of this power a decade ago led to the introduction of transmitted electric power, generated at water-power plants, to cotton mills some miles distant. This was first tried here, and to-day many a spindle is operated by the overhead motor drive furnished with electricity carried long distances over wires. This was one of the great elements entering into the rapid development of cotton manufacturing in South Carolina. It made investors independent of high-priced sites beside water powers, and removed all question of availability of sites. It is noteworthy to remark in this connection that in 1882 only 4,113 horsepower of water power was in use. To-day, in one city alone, there is a single plant developing nearly three times as much.

In speaking thus at length of my own State it is in no sense with the idea of disparaging the resources of other States, but I rather refer to it as something of a type of the whole South. Surely there is much in common for which we should feel justly proud, to which I can only refer in this connection.

The value of cotton mills in the South in 1880 was $21,000,000; in 1903, $175,000,000. In 1880 farm property was valued at $2,212,000,000; in 1900 it was valued at $5,158,000,000. In 1893 southern exports amounted to $250,072,790; in 1903 to $542,011,661. In 1880 the South had 20,000 miles of railroad; in 1903 the mileage was 50,000. In 1880 the South manufactured 397,000 tons of pig iron; in 1903, 3,300,000 tons. The value of lumber products in 1880 was $39,000,000; in 1903 they reached the sum of $200,000,000. In 1880 the South mined 6,000,000 tons of coal; in 1903 she mined 70,000,000 tons.

This internal development, rapid and stupendous as it is, is only an earnest of what we may reasonably expect in the future under proper conditions.

We invite the northern and western farmer and the deserving European immigrant to share with us "this goodly heritage." We would have them link their arms in ours now at the dawn of a new era and participate fully in the benefits and glories of our development.

In England, Ireland, and Scotland only one person in thirty-one owns land, and this is mortgaged for 60 per cent of its value. In the populous rural sections of the North farm lands sell at from $100 to $150 per acre. We offer you lands at from $5 to $15 per acre, which, with a little attention, are just as productive and more desirable, owing to climatic advantages which adapt them to a great variety of crops. While we are awake to the necessity of immigration as a means of keeping our farming interests commensurate with our manufacturing interests, we confess some solicitation, and we think the United States Government should feel some solicitation, as to the character of those immigrants.

This Government should look well to the laws restricting immigration; and while no worthy person, sound physically and mentally, should be turned back, we should see to it that this country is not made an asylum or almshouse for the undesirable citizen of the Old World. We want only voluntary immigrants; not such as are induced by their own countries to seek new homes. It is true that the constant loss of able-bodied young men, for it is this class who usually emigrate, is a severe drain on the old countries. They have all the care and expense of rearing them to years of maturity, which is estimated at $600 to $1,000 per individual, and receive absolutely nothing in return. Aside from this item of expense, however, emigration works but little detriment to the old countries, for they are all densely populated, and in all, save Ireland, the births are very much in excess of the deaths.

While we should hold out open arms to the deserving immigrant who is not satisfied with conditions in his native land, it is our inherent right and but self-preservation to exclude that turbulent, thriftless, disaffected element who, restrained only by force at home, in this country indulge in most unbridled license. We need tillers of the soil, who by industry will build up the waste places and make our hillsides and valleys golden with the fruits of honest toil.

That this is a condition and not a theory which we are confronting may be inferred from the following figures compiled by Chairman McLeod, of the Western Passenger Association: Out of 700,000 immigrants arriving here in 1902, New York received 203,824; Pennsylvania, 139,000; Illinois, 45,845; Massachusetts, 50,939; Ohio, 25,900, with other Northern and Western States following with from 5,000 to 15,000. You will note that the greatest influx was into States having the largest cities, already overpopulated, and, as I have stated previously, comparatively none went to the South. Of this 700,000 accounted for, 2,947 had professions, 79,769 were skilled workmen, 422,379 were classed as miscellaneous, and 153,149, including women and children, had no occupations.

If this miscellaneous class were laborers, who in time would seek the rural districts, we might well welcome them. If they are so many additional charges on cities already burdened, we can not calculate the possible evils which may arise from their coming. We can easily assimilate the industrious workingman, but this country can no more assimilate great hordes of disaffected immigrants than the human system can assimilate an overdose of poison.

It is the purpose of the bill which I introduced to meet this very exigency by establishing a bureau for the intelligent distribution of worthy immigrants. As to what countries furnish the most desirable immigrants, speculation or opinion is very much divided. There seems to be strong prejudice against the Asiatic and southwestern European. Until lately considerable prejudice existed against the Italian, but with most favorable testimony in his behalf from Georgia, Louisiana, and a number of other Southern States, our people look with a great deal more favor on these hardy, industrious agriculturists.

It is not alone the foreigner whom we would invite to our Southland. In fact, the settler whom we most desire is the intensive northern farmer. In the South he will find conditions of soil and climate which respond most readily and abundantly to intensive methods of farming. He will find lands selling at much less per acre than he rents his northern lands for annually. He will find a people frank and congenial in their dealings. He will obtain a better idea of southern conditions, and will more fully acquaint his northern brother with those conditions, thereby overcoming local prejudices. I assert, in the light of wide observation, that no northern farmer can reside for two years in our midst without becoming one with us.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that my bill is an important one, looking to the proper selection and distribution of immigrants and to the best interests of the immigrants themselves, in furnishing them, helpless and alone as they are, such information as will enable them to choose wisely the homes of their adoption, must be apparent to everyone. The importance to this nation of aiding and encouraging desirable immigrants to come amongst us can be realized only in the light of the fact that our future history will reflect in great measure the characteristics of those immigrants.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN].

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I regret at this time to intrude myself upon the quiet and calm of this deliberative body. The Republican Members of this House and of the Senate have, during this entire session, vied with each other in eulogizing and in glorifying the distinguished President of the United States. They have tumbled over each other in the rush to give unqualified indorsement and approval to everything he has done and to everything he has said. I do not wish to make invidious comparisons in this House, especially among Republican Members, but candor compels me to say that no gentleman of the Republican side has even approached the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] in the extravagance, in the fulsomeness, and in the elaborateness of his praise. The gentleman has attributed to the President all the virtues which an ideal man, an ideal citizen, an ideal soldier, or an ideal statesman should possess.

We on this side, Mr. Chairman, respectfully beg to differ with the gentleman from Ohio. In such conflict of opinion authority is always of the highest importance. And, sir, to sustain our opinion of the distinguished occupant of the White House I shall cite to you an authority so high, so eminent, and so infallible that no Member upon that side, not even the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], will have reason to dispute or doubt. That authority is no more and no less than the distinguished gentleman from Ohio himself [Mr. GROSVENOR]. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

It may seem strange, Mr. Chairman—it may astonish the Republican Members of this House to know that at one time in his life the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] was an eminent and an interesting contributor to the New York Journal. [Laughter.] When the Republican convention met in Philadelphia in 1900 it was General GROSVENOR who was a most entertaining and conspicuous contributor to the New York Journal in regard to the character and the Vice-Presidential qualifications of the distinguished President. Bespeaking his permission, I beg to quote from the four signed letters by the gentleman from Ohio.

On June 21, 1900, in a signed letter to the New York Journal, the gentleman from Ohio said of Mr. Roosevelt:

There is something new here under the sun.

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

We have a brilliant, erratic, curious sort of a man—whose friends are trying to promote him. His enemies are trying to destroy him, and a great herd of selfish politicians are trying to use him for their own selfish and shameful ends.

[Laughter on the Democratic side]—

Just here I wish to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that perhaps from these letters he got the idea into his head that he had seen somewhere that "everybody is for Mr. Roosevelt and nobody wants him." [Laughter.] He gets it from the distinguished gentleman from Ohio. We recall that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] the other day, said that he had never heard it or seen it in any paper.

But I have. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

I read on:

And apparently not one of them, neither friend nor foe nor selfish person, seems to have the slightest care for his welfare. That man is Theodore Roosevelt, governor of New York.

[Loud applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

And again:

It is said that last night he shouted and screamed and danced in the meeting of the New York delegation and said: "I am saved; I am saved!" Saved from whom? Saved from the men who want to get rid of him. Is that it? Saved from the men who injudiciously in their friendship for him want to see him nominated. Is that it? Saved from the men who are fighting over him as a bone of contention, one for his defeat and another for his elevation, and neither one cares for him. Is that it?

[Laughter.]

Further he says:

It is coolly and calmly admitted, and not denied when charged, by a certain great force in New York and in the New York delegation, that they are opposed to Roosevelt for governor because they do not think he is the proper man for the place and because he does not suit them. Therefore they are willing to push him off and dump him—

Just mark the word "dump!" That is the way we get rid of refuse in the South—"dump" it [laughter]— and dump him upon the Presidential ticket, upon the sole and sordid interest of themselves and their own schemes of politics. Here he is. Suppose he should be nominated for Vice-President to-morrow, what will be said of him?

You must remember that Roosevelt had time and time again said he was not going to be a candidate, and would not be a candidate under any circumstances, and the gentleman from Ohio was opposed to Mr. Roosevelt as a Vice-Presidential candidate. He knew him. [Laughter.]

Suppose he should be nominated for Vice-President to-morrow. What will be said of him? That either he was a dishonest man or else that he did not want the place, and in this last instance it would be said of him that he had no power of his own, no will, no voice—

But we all know that Roosevelt has a voice [laughter]— that he was simply taken possession of by the men who hated him, who were opposed to him, and forced into the position in order that they might get rid of him.

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

So, then, we have him made Vice-President by the very men who wanted to get rid of him. And the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is corroborated by ex-Senator Thurston, who also was a contributor to this paper at the same time. I want to call attention to how accurately they sized up this Vice-Presidential candidate. Here is what Senator Thurston says. Remember they were trying to get rid of him:

And it would be a cage for a man of Roosevelt's temperament and boundless ambition. Now, a caged lion at least can roar, but a lion in the Vice-Presidential cage can not even roar. He must keep still. He has no voice in the Government.

[Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

So, then, Roosevelt is in public life to-day, nationally, because his friends and his enemies wanted to put him in a place where he could do neither harm nor good. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

But, gentlemen, I want to make an alarming statement, especially in the face of all this exaltation of Roosevelt by the Republican party, and declare to you that Theodore Roosevelt was distasteful to William McKinley; and I challenge any Republican on that side, and I challenge any Republican in this nation to deny it here or elsewhere. I charge more, that Theodore Roosevelt as a candidate for Vice-President upon the Republican ticket was distasteful to William McKinley, and not one of you can deny it.

I charge, further, that Theodore Roosevelt, as Vice-Presidential candidate, was humiliating to the friends of the McKinley Administration, and I dare any one of you to deny it. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] Gentlemen, think of it! He was humiliating to General GROSVENOR himself, how his great champion upon this floor, and he dares not deny it. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] I call upon him to deny it. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I have made that charge, and none of you will deny it. I now produce the same high and infallible Republican authority for that, and it is a little pathetic. [Laughter.]

In another letter of the gentleman from Ohio to his paper, the New York Journal [laughter and applause on the Democratic side], of date June 19, 1900, he writes:

That Roosevelt to-day is being pressed by the following influences is very well understood. First. The demand of Mr. PLATT and the Platt-Quay combination that McKinley shall be forced to take a distasteful running mate of their selection.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

No man in this House, no man in this nation, was closer to William McKinley than the distinguished gentleman from Ohio. No man knew McKinley's wishes, and no man knew McKinley's tastes better than the gentleman from Ohio, and he says that Roosevelt's promoters were trying to "dump him upon the Presidential ticket," because they knew he was "a distasteful running mate" to William McKinley. And yet you men stand here in this House and gulp down every single thought of Roosevelt, everything that he says, and everything that he does, and no one of you dares to raise a defending voice in memory of William McKinley.

I declare to you that the gentleman from Ohio was right, that McKinley was right, for both felt and knew that Roosevelt would be a distasteful running mate for any American statesman. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I said that I could show that Roosevelt not only was distasteful to McKinley, but was absolutely humiliating to the closest friends of his Administration. The gentleman from Ohio was as close a friend of McKinley's Administration as anybody. In speaking of the purposes of the Platt-Quay combination in attempting to force the unfortunate Governor Roosevelt on the national ticket, he says in his letter that it was "the wish of Mr. QUAY and his coadjutors to humiliate the immediate and close friends of the Administration of McKinley." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

To humiliate my good friend from Ohio and other close friends of McKinley's Administration was the reason why they were pushing him! [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, just think of it. Contemplate the amusing spectacle of any Republican in the United States being humiliating to my friend from Ohio [laughter], and contemplate the more amusing spectacle that to-day this man who was distasteful to McKinley and was humiliating to his friends is now marshaling under his banner the combined hosts of Republicanism, with the gentleman from Ohio as chief bugle blower. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

My friends, my Republican friends, I wish I had time to read all of these extracts from the letters of this distinguished gentleman. I have them typewritten here, and it would make most interesting reading for all if placed in parallel columns with the twenty-eight page eulogy of Roosevelt which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] put into the RECORD the other day. [Laughter.]

I wish the gentleman from Ohio to understand that it is not out of any hostile spirit toward him. I will show before I get through that I am the best friend that he ever had upon this floor. [Renewed laughter.] I wished these extracts from his letters to go into the RECORD as a tribute to his knowledge of men. [Renewed laughter.] I want to embalm them in the RECORD as a monument to that unerring judgment of human nature that is essential to a statesman and a leader. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] As a further mark of my respect and friendship for him, I desire to say to the gentleman that I agree with him in his solemn, written, signed, unshackled, deliberate estimate of the man. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

I know that General GROSVENOR was right when he wrote these letters. He may have been right by mistake [laughter], but he was right that time. I wish to ask the Clerk to read one more extract from them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Read it yourself.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. No; I want the Clerk to read it, because it sounds so great I wish to enjoy its melody and its music. [Laughter.] Now, this is the advice which the distinguished gentleman from Ohio gives to Mr. Roosevelt—a "Rooseveltian soliloquy," it would be called.

The Clerk read as follows:

Let Mr. Roosevelt sit down right now and calmly consider. I do not believe he is a man who can appreciate good advice when he gets it, but let him sit down and calmly reason with himself in this way:

"The little temporary time I operate upon the tail end of the Presidential ticket will, of course, have a whole lot of hurrahs in it. All the McKinley men will hurrah for me, and all the other fellows will hurrah for me; but is it not the calm, deliberate judgment that when the moment comes to turn the searchlight on me four years hence, the people will say: 'This man has not any courage, any nerve, for he could not bring himself by one word to extricate himself from the dilemma he admits he was in, though crying out, "I am saved! I am saved!" ' But it is a great thing to be shouted at in a convention. It is a great thing to have men come to my room and cheer me and congratulate me, but the American people are the coldest-blooded people on earth. They look through shams, they look through tricks, and they look through all sorts of performances."

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

"Where will I be when they study the whole of this issue of this campaign? Why should there be any such question over me? Is there anyone so anxious to make me Vice-President—an inconsiderable office as compared with the governor of New York? Is there anybody who intelligently wants to do this, and who intelligently believes it is for my good? Not much!"

[Much laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. He declares in one of these letters that Mr. Hanna was opposed to Roosevelt's nomination as Vice-President, and adds that "it would be a great thing for Roosevelt to defy somebody once and stick to it."

I want to leave these extracts, but there is one that amuses me so much that I will read it. He knew and had seen this soldier, this hero of San Juan Hill and El Caney, and described him as he entered the convention:

The governor wore his Santiago hat, and the very atmosphere of San Juan Hill and El Caney and all that sort of thing was around it and diffused from it, and he marched with a martial tread down the aisle—

And sat down. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, Roosevelt was elected Vice-President. His friends and his enemies had, as they thought, securely put him in the cage prepared for him. But fate, with stoic indifference to the dignity of our nation, disdaining to consider consequences, broke the bars of the cage which the Republican party had made for him, and Theodore Roosevelt was made President, not by the people's ballot, but by the assassin's bullet. But they tell us that this "curious, erratic sort of man" magnificently takes McKinley's place. Here in this House I solemnly protest against such desecration of the memory of William McKinley. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The ant-hill taking the place of the mountain! The owl's screech taking the place of Beethoven's divine symphonies! The minnow taking the place of the whale! The firefly taking the place of the noonday sun! [Applause on the Democratic side.] Theodore Roosevelt taking the place of William McKinley! I protest! I protest!

Mr. Chairman, your party and your section might have expected great things and good treatment at the hands of Mr. Roosevelt, but we of the South could not. We knew that twenty-five years after Lee surrendered, this gentleman, in two of his public volumes, had denounced Jefferson Davis as an arch traitor and had declared that until out of the dictionary had been stricken the word "treason" Jefferson Davis was a traitor. We felt then and we feel now that that was a strike, across the memory of the idolized dead, at the whole South and the old Confederate soldiers. We knew, too, that in one of his volumes, The Life of Benton, perhaps the most widely read work of which he is author, he declared that "through the southern character there ran a streak of coarse and brutal barbarism." We could expect little from him. Would I startle this House to remind it that after the passing of nearly forty years from Appomattox, Mr. Roosevelt, President of the United States and of a united people, stood here in the capital city of our nation and proclaimed to the world that the Confederate soldier was an anarchist? So surprising was this utterance, so revolting was it, that the Washington Post, a loyal supporter of Mr. Roosevelt's Administration, was led to observe editorially:

It is disagreeable enough to the southern people to be officially designated as "rebels," and now to add "anarchist" is an exasperation which we find it impossible to believe the President really intended.

These words from the lips of a President, and at the national capital, while yet the grave at Canton was wet with the tears of southern grief!

Let this House and the Republican membership of this House compare, if you please, these stinging, coarse, insulting words of your President with the kindly, gentle, loving words of William McKinley as he stood in the heart of the South and, in the presence of the old Confederate soldiers, said:

And while when these graves were made we differed widely about the future of this Government, those differences were long ago settled by the arbitrament of arms, and the time has now come in the evolution of sentiment and feeling under the providence of God when, in the spirit of fraternity, we should share with you in the care of the graves of the old Confederate soldiers.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Again he says:

Sectional feeling no longer holds back the love which we bear in our hearts for each other.

And again:

It is a pleasure for me to meet in this welcome these veterans of the gray, these ex-Confederate soldiers, and to feel that, in common with all our fellow-citizens, their hearts are in touch with the highest aims and purposes of our great Republic.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Compare these words of William McKinley with those words of Theodore Roosevelt and then tell us if he magnificently "fills the shoes of William McKinley!" [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, some days ago the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], in his speech complained that lawlessness and lynchings in the South stimulated lawlessness and lynchings in the North. In passing, he will permit me to express regret that the good people of Massachusetts are so quick to imitate our vices and so slow to emulate our virtues. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] Now, I want to ask him if it is not a fact that the three books which I have before me, Ranch Life and the Hunting Trail, Oliver Cromwell, and The Winning of the West, by Theodore Roosevelt, are not in almost every private and public library and in every school library throughout the North?

I trust, sir, it will not shock this House and the law-loving and law-abiding people of our country too greatly when I tell them that Theodore Roosevelt in these books deliberately justifies and advocates lynch law for the stealing of a $10 rat-tailed Texas pony. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I wish to suggest to my friend from Massachusetts that these books of this distinguished author, so widely read in the North, teaching the right to lynch human beings for stealing horses, might possibly have some influence in stimulating to lawlessness the great and good people of the North. Let me read from Ranch Life and Hunting Trail, pages 14 and 93:

During the last two or three years the stockmen have united to put down all these dangerous characters, often by the most summary exercise of lynch law. * * * Bands of horse and cattle thieves have been regularly hunted down and destroyed in pitched fights by parties of armed cowboys, and as a consequence most of our Territory is perfectly law abiding. * * * A little over two years ago one committee of vigilantes in eastern Montana shot or hung nearly sixty—not, however, with the best judgment in all cases.

[Prolonged laughter and applause.]

It is the fashion—

Not to be shocked, not to be outraged, not to be horrified, but—

It is the fashion to laugh at the severity with which horse stealing is punished on the border, but the reasons are evident. Horses are the most valuable property of the frontiersman, whether cowboy, hunter, or settler. * * * They are always marketable and are very easily stolen. Horse stealing is a most temptiffg business, etc.

Now, let me read from the work on Oliver Cromwell, at page 52:

In great crises it may be necessary to overturn constitutions, to disregard statutes, just as it may be necessary to establish a vigilance committee or take refuge in lynch laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a few minutes more.

Several MEMBERS. Give it to him.

Mr. LLOYD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Twenty-five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. I have not yielded any.

Several MEMBERS. Give it to him.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for fifteen minutes, yielded by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD], who has control of the time.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. In Winning of the West we find the following:

The good men in such a case band themselves together as regulators and put down with ruthless severity by the exercise of lynch law, shooting and hanging the worst offhand.

In many of the cases of lynch law which have come to my knowledge the effect has been healthy for the community—

[Applause and laughter on the Democratic side]——

but sometimes great injustice is done. Generally the vigilantes, by a series of summary executions, do really good work, but I have rarely known them to fail, among the men whom they kill for good reasons, to also kill one or two either by mistake or to gratify private malice.

Mr. Chairman, I do not defend, nor do we in the South defend, lynching for any crime. [Applause.] I condemn, and we in the South condemn, lynching for any crime except the unspeakable crime against womanhood. We do not, and law-abiding people should not, advocate or encourage lynching even for this. The hand of civilization and Christianity is uplifted against it, and, sir, good people the wide world over should uphold that hand. But lynch law, to avenge the brutal outrage upon innocent, helpless womanhood, and to protect it, is a statute written, old and unrepealed, in the heart of poor, weak human nature, and at unfortunate times is invoked in every section and in every land. Let us who believe in the absolute sovereignty of the law over all crimes, from the lowest to the highest, not despair when, in sparsely settled communities, with no ready and sufficient police force, excited men turn to lynch law. There are times when the mute lips of the outraged and murdered victim appeal too loudly for even the strongest of us to resist. We can only hope that through the Christian manhood of our country, in the mercy and wisdom of God, a way may be found for the final repeal of this terrible and dangerous law.

But, Mr. Chairman, I challenge you to point out another man in official life throughout the civilized world that has ever publicly defended or justified lynch law for theft of any kind under any circumstances.

I put it to your consciences. Do you not believe that we have a right to protest against any Republican in this House or in this nation condemning any section or any man in this country for lynching a brute, white or black, who commits the unspeakable crime, until you have burned these lynch-law-teaching books or until you have repudiated, either at your convention or at the polls, their author, Theodore Roosevelt? [Loud applause.]

I believe in American citizenship—in its freedom, in its independence. I believe that every American, regardless of parties, owes some loyalty, some allegiance to the President of his country. But, Democrat as I am, I must believe that every self-respecting Republican in this House and in this country will feel his cheek burn with shame when he contemplates the fact that a President of the United States, a President of this civilized, Christianized Republic, has openly published, and has persistently, in three volumes, disseminated throughout this country and throughout the world his defense and his advocacy of lynch law for theft. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

How high has our civilization reached when here a great party of great men, standing by decency, standing by order, standing by civilization, persists in making President of the United States this lawless-spirited man? I ask the people of this nation, in the name of God how the spirit of anarchy can ever be driven out of this country while one of its great parties insists upon retaining in the highest office of this Republic the master spirit of lawlessness? [Applause on the Democratic side.] When may we expect the law to assert its majesty throughout our broad land while a great party bows its acknowledgment to Theodore Roosevelt as superior to the law?

My friends, you may search yonder Library with its millions of volumes and I venture the assertion that, barring the books of the President, upon no page can you find where a man claiming to be civilized and Christianized has ever advocated publicly lynch law for theft.

The surprise of one who loves his country and cherishes the memory of the great men who have honored it will not surpass his humiliation when he is reminded of the vicious, persistent, and unwarranted attacks which our President, in his books, has made upon so many of his distinguished predecessors. He has defamed Thomas Jefferson in every imaginable way. In his Winning of the West, Naval War of 1812, and Thomas H. Benton he denounces Jefferson as "vacillating," "timid," "shifty doctrinaire," "incompetent," "ungrateful," "intriguing against Washington," "secretly aiding French," his influence "distinctly evil," declaring that he was "constitutionally unable to put the proper value on truthfulness," and that he "was the most incapable Executive that ever filled the Presidential chair."

He denounces Madison as "timid," "incapable," "a ridiculously incompetent leader for a war with Great Britain," his Administration as "feeble," and accuses him of "imbecile incapacity" and of bringing "shame and disgrace to America" in the war of 1812.

He denounces Monroe as a mere "figurehead" President, with "no especial ability," and declares that his administration as Secretary of War under Madison was a "triumph of imbecility to the last."

He denounces Andrew Jackson as a "figurehead," "ignorant," "managed by politicians," "low politicians molded him to their will," and declared that his Administration "corrupted the public service in every way." He denounces Van Buren as sordid, odious, corrupt, declaring that "he faithfully served the mammon of unrighteousness," that "he succeeded because of and not in spite of his moral shortcomings."

He denounces Harrison, Taylor, and Fillmore as "small Presidents." He denounces Tyler as a "politician of monumental littleness," and declares that he was "peevish and puzzleheaded" and that to "call him a mediocre man is unwarranted flattery."

He denounces Polk as "the very smallest, excepting Tyler, of the line of small Presidents who came in between Jackson and Lincoln," and declared that he gathered to him the "vicious, corrupt, and criminal."

He denounces Pierce as a "truckling, time-serving, northern politician" and a "small politician of low capacity and mean surroundings."

He denounces Buchanan as a "truckling, timeserving politician, fit representative of the sordid and odious political organization of Pennsylvania."

Mr. Chairman, one who has such a profound contempt for those who have gone before him can not hope to merit the respect of those who shall come after him. I know not what place in the life of our Republic posterity may accord him, but whatever he has done, whatever he may do, one thing is certain, history will mark Theodore Roosevelt out, in unique and shameless solitude, as the relentless defamer of our nation's Presidents.

What, sir, will that good and godly sect, the Quakers, think of our President when they are reminded of their outlawry by him? In his Thomas H. Benton (p. 37) we read:

A class of professional noncombatants is as hurtful to the real healthy growth of a nation as is a class of fire eaters, for a weakness or folly is nationally as bad as a vice or worse, and in the long run a Quaker may be quite as undesirable a citizen as is a duelist. No man who is not willing to bear arms and to fight for his rights can give a good reason why he should be entitled to the privilege of living in a free community.

No man in public life has ever expressed such a merciless contempt for the farmers and laborers of our country. After attributing to the cowboys of the West a moral depravity of which no cowboy has been guilty within half a century and against which I must protest; after declaring that they were "brutally dissipated," that "when drunk on villainous whisky they cut mad antics, ride horses in saloons, firing their pistols right and left," etc., in his Ranch Life and Hunting Trail (pp. 9 and 10), he adds:

They are much better fellows and pleasanter companions than small farmers or agricultural laborers; nor are the mechanics and workmen of a great city to be mentioned in the same breath.

I am indebted to the diligence and kindness of my distinguished friend from Georgia, Judge BARTLETT, for the following additional evidence of Mr. Roosevelt's supreme contempt for the American farmer. In a speech made by him in New York in October, 1896, at a "sound-money" meeting in the Wool Exchange, reported in the New York Journal October 28, 1896, Mr. Roosevelt said:

I shall confine my remarks to what General Porter has said about patriotism. Patriotism comes first, and I hope you will not fail to display it next Tuesday. Mr. Bryan and his adherents have appealed to the basest set in the land, the farmers.

Mr. Chairman, search the world over, ransack history from the beginning, and you will look in vain to find another who has in any way maligned the farmer of his own country. It is a marvel that any party should offer as a candidate for the Presidency a man who has so viciously traduced the character of the best type of our citizenship, the American farmer.

In referring to a committee of the New York legislature, before which questions affecting the interest of labor came, and to a delegation of labor men who appeared before it, he describes them in his American Ideals, Volume I, page 105, as "The rogues' gallery," and one of the labor men who spoke as "a sleek, oily little fellow, with a black mustache, who had never done a stroke of work in his life." And another as "a fellow-professional of another type—a great, burly man who would speak of the Wrongs (with a capital W) of Labor (with a capital L) and bellow as if he had been a bull of Bashan."

No workingman should ever again object to government by injunction after reading the following from Mr. Roosevelt's American Ideals (Vol. II, p. 18):

The men who object to what they style "government by injunction" are, as regards the essential principles of government, in hearty sympathy with their remote skin-clad ancestors who lived in caves, fought one another with stone-headed axes, and ate the mammoth and woolly rhinoceros.

They are interesting as representing a geological survival, but they are dangerous whenever there is the least chance of their making the principles of this ages-buried past living factors in our present life.

They are not in sympathy with men of good minds and sound civic morality.

Mr. Chairman, I want every man in this House who has any respect for this body, who has any respect for the Senate, be he Democrat or Republican, to hear what I shall read. It will astound every Republican in this House, and every Democrat, when I tell them that Theodore Roosevelt, while governor of New York, the dignity and responsibility of which position should have controlled his rashness and sobered his judgment, denounced a Republican Congress as "cattle"—the Congress, be it remembered, that was giving ready loyalty to William McKinley in all things!

In proof of this startling statement let me read from his speech. I hold in my hand a book entitled "The Public Papers of Governor Roosevelt," containing his speech before the Chamber of Commerce at Syracuse. Congress, guided by the wisdom and conservatism of McKinley, was not enacting just the particular legislation touching the Army and Navy that in his (Roosevelt's) individual opinion they ought. I now read from that speech:

Just at this moment Congress, in Washington, seems to have made up its mind that, having provided for the fact that we must take care of the Philippines and of Cuba, there is not to be any army with which to take care of it, and that the armed resistance is to be made by proclamation. Well, it is a little soul harrowing to have to deal with cattle who take that view of the responsibility of the nation

So this man denounces you as a herd of cattle. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, we need not be surprised at this denunciation; but the humiliating spectacle is that since he has been made President he has treated this Republican Congress as a herd of cattle. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

And, more humiliating still, you have allowed him to treat you as cattle, and you have lain down before him in his green pastures. Think of the leadership in that Congress—the same leadership that is in this Congress. I see the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who were the leaders upon this floor; and he virtually denounces them as the old lead steers of the bunch! [Laughter on the Democratic side.] He thinks Congress is his great ranch, that you have been roped in for the "round-up," and he treats you as he did his herd at Elk Horn. He allows no hooking and no kicking. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SIMS. They are all dehorned.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. And none has started a stampede except the young gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH], and now I believe he confesses himself the tamest and gentlest yearling in the whole herd. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

A MEMBER on the Democratic side. Branded!

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Branded! Now, my friends, permit me to say this to you not in a partisan spirit. I assert but the simple truth, wishing I had voice loud enough for every man in the nation to hear, when I declare to you that any man who has such a profound contempt for the legislative branch of this Government is unfit to be the head of the executive branch. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] I have read from his speech to give you an inkling as to what you may expect from him when he is no longer held back by an ambition to succeed himself. You must continue to be the herd of cattle for him or else he will turn you out of his ranch. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Contemplate the intolerance of the man! A Congress that was acting in harmony with the wishes of conservative William McKinley was not doing exactly what he thought they ought to do in every detail. In a published speech, while governor of New York, he denounces them as "cattle." Don't you know he is a dangerous man? I don't care what you say outside, I know you say inside that he is. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I said in the beginning that I was going to show the distinguished gentleman from Ohio that I was the best friend he has in this body. I think I am going to show him that I am the only friend in this nation who will come to his rescue. He may be surprised when I read from one of Roosevelt's published books, in which Roosevelt denounces the gentleman by name as a "champion of foul government and dishonest politics." [Applause on the Democratic side.] I hold in my hand a book—just look at it!—spectacular, like the President. [Laughter.] From American Ideals, volume 1, pages 166, 167, and 168, discussing the subject of civil-service reform, I read—the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will give attention, too:

The main fight [on civil service] at each session [of Congress] comes up on the appropriation bill. There is not the slightest danger that the law will be repealed. * * * As a matter of fact, in every Congress resolute efforts are made by the champions of foul government and dishonest politics to cut off the commission's supplies. The bolder men, who come from districts where little is known of the law, and where there is no adequate expression of intelligence and honest opinion on the subject, attack it openly. Every man interested in decent government should keep an eye on his Congressman and see how he votes on the question of appropriations for the commission. The opposition to the reform is generally well led by skilled parliamentarians, and they fight with the vindictiveness natural to men who see a chance of striking at the institution which has baffled their ferocious greed.

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

These men have a gift at office mongering, just as other men have a peculiar knack of picking other people's pockets.

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Many of the spoils leaders are both efficient and fearless. They strike hard blows. In consequence, the leaders on the side of decency must also be men of ability and force, or the cause will suffer.

I wish I had time to mention all of the names he mentions, but among the chief of these he mentions General GROSVENOR, of Ohio, as one. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to read pages 167 and 168 and 169, and then read his speech in this House on January 12 and 13, and tell this House, honor bright, if the President does not make you feel like "thirty cents." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, what high crime had these gentlemen committed that they should be thus publicly branded and their good names stigmatized by Theodore Roosevelt? Their only offense was their views did not exactly coincide with Mr. Roosevelt's views on civil service.

This is the man whom we fear. This is the man whom the people of this country—Republicans and Democrats, capitalists and laborers, rich and poor, strong and weak—fear. And, sir, when the check of his ambition to succeed himself has been loosened from his conduct no man can tell, no man can dream, to what length he will go and to what length he will carry this nation.

[Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, availing myself of the privilege of extending my remarks by printing in the RECORD accorded to me by the House, I desire to submit some further views and opinions entertained by our strenuous President.

Of the political organizations of his own State, forgetting that he was a product of one of them, he, in Thomas H. Benton, page 81, says:

New York has always had a low political standard, one or the other of its great parties and factional organizations, and often both or all of them, being at all times most unlovely bodies of excessively unwholesome moral tone.

In American Ideals (Vol. I, p. 69), he says of the New York legislature:

Among my colleagues there were many very good men. There was a still more numerous class of men who were neither very good nor very bad, but went one way or the other, according to the strength of the various conflicting influences acting around, behind, and upon them; and, finally, there were many very bad men.

Again, on page 73, he says:

In other words, before taking any active steps we had to "size up" our fellow-legislators, to find out their past history and present character and associates, to find out whether they were their own masters or were acting under the directions of somebody else, whether they were bright or stupid, etc. As a result, and after very careful study, conducted purely with the object of learning the truth, so that we might work more effectually, we came to the conclusion that about a third of the members were open to corrupt influences in some form or other; in certain sessions the proportion was greater and in some less.

* * * * * * *

On one occasion there came before a committee of which I happened to be a member a perfectly proper bill in the interest of a certain corporation.

The majority of the committee, six in number, were thoroughly bad men who opposed the measure with the hope of being paid to cease their opposition.

On page 71 he gives this tip to the man of foreign birth who has been elevated to public life by his fellow-men:

It is from these same great cities that the worst legislators come. It is true that there are always among them a few cultivated and scholarly men who are well educated and who stand on a higher and broader intellectual and moral plane than the country members, but the bulk are very low indeed. They are usually foreigners, of little or no education, with exceedingly misty ideas as to morality, and possessed of an ignorance so profound that it could only be called comic were it not for the fact that it has at times such serious effects upon our laws.

In American Ideals, volume 2, page 23, he favors the Populists with this compliment:

Refinement and comfort they are apt to consider quite as objectionable as immorality. * * * A taste for learning and cultivated friends, and a tendency to bathe frequently, cause them the deepest suspicion. * * * Though they often make war on vice, they rather prefer making war on prosperity and refinement.

And again, in his pamphlet on the Campaign of 1896:

Thrift, industry, and business energy are qualities which are quite incompatible with true Populistic feeling Payment of debts, like the suppression of riots, is abhorrent to the Populistic mind. Such conduct strikes the Populist as immoral.

Space forbids other extracts from the writings of Mr. Roosevelt. His attacks upon almost every element and phase of American citizenship would exhaust the RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Roosevelt has expressed his contempt for the farmer; he has expressed his contempt for the workingman; he has expressed his contempt for the Quakers; he has expressed his contempt for the American of foreign birth; he has expressed his contempt for both the great political parties; he has expressed his contempt for law; he has expressed his contempt for one great section of our country; he has expressed contempt for the legislative branch of the Government; he has expressed contempt for a long line of distinguished Presidents; he has expressed contempt for eminent leaders of his own party on this floor.

Could it surprise him if the people of all parties in retributive justice should express at the polls in November their contempt for him?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in control of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD].

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, the majority side have been very kind in this debate. I do not think that under the circumstances they will object if I yield five minutes more, but that is the extent of it.

Mr. HAMILTON. I would say to the gentleman from Missouri that an opportunity ought to be given to the gentleman from Ohio to make a reply to-night. It is growing late. Both sides of this House are anxious to pass this bill under consideration, and if it is possible the gentleman from North Carolina can get along without the additional minutes yielded to him.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. I will ask this——

Mr. HAMILTON. The reply ought to come to-night. The gentleman from North Carolina will admit that.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. I will ask, then, with the permission of the House, that I may have leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You have got that.

Mr. HAMILTON. I want to yield to the gentleman from Ohio to make a reply to-night.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. I would be willing to yield, provided that I can have some time after the gentleman from Ohio concludes.

Mr. HAMILTON. Both sides of the House want to pass this bill.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to get permission to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio time to reply to the gentleman from North Carolina. [Loud general applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, it is totally unimportant, so far as the Members of this House are concerned, and it is, moreover, unimportant to the country what I might have said or written at some other far remote time. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] We on this side of the House have listened with absolute attention to the gentleman from North Carolina while we were all anxious to go to dinner, and the moment I begin a brief reply there seems to be a disposition to make discord and interruption on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The House will be in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. As I was saying, it is unimportant what I may have said, or what I may have believed, or what I may have written four years ago. If men are to be judged from that standpoint, then will the gentleman from North Carolina object to his associates who then shouted themselves hoarse for Bryan and 16 to 1, and to-day denounce Bryan from one end of the country to the other? Not only so, but the gentleman and his associates—I do not say the gentleman himself—would be found guilty of having spoken over and over again in the most vindictive and denunciatory manner of that great, beloved, dead statesman, McKinley, whom he to-day eulogizes with sycophantic praise on this floor. [Applause on the Republican side.]

No man from the days of George Washington down to the present time was ever hounded, pursued, and condemned as William McKinley was by the Democratic side of this House, and by the Democratic press and stump orators only four years ago. Not long before that they came upon the floor of this House and publicly and without rebuke charged William McKinley with having held back the proclamation of war against Spain for the purpose of enriching his friends by speculation on Wall street. Those charges were not rebuked; and yet to-day the gentleman from North Carolina can come with tears in his voice as he reads the utterance of that grand statesman, who spoke words of kindness to the people who were hurling anathemas against him.

Four years ago, at the city of Philadelphia, I was an opponent of the nomination of Roosevelt for Vice-President. I was there a delegate at large from the State of Ohio, and I had a perfect right to have a choice, and I chose to support with all the power I had the nomination of a distinguished gentleman from Iowa, now Senator DOLLIVER. I wrote in the New York Journal, an enterprising newspaper, whose editor and owner is to-day being hounded from one end of the United States to the other by every Democrat who aspires to any sort of leadership or dictation in the party, and then they come here and denounce me, a man who is not afraid to speak his mind on the stump or in a newspaper. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

At that time I wrote and published the popular opinion of gentlemen of position at Philadelphia of Roosevelt. It was widely circulated, and generally and indeed unanimously believed by public men, as I understood it, that the leading Republicans of the State of New York were urging the nomination of Roosevelt because, in their opinion, some of his policies as governor of that State had made it doubtful as to his reelection, or at least doubtful as to his being the strongest candidate for governor of the State of New York, and I made perfectly plain that which was said by every man there, and I take back no word that I said. If the gentleman supposes he is coming here with an utterance that I wrote in a newspaper, and that he can humiliate and bring me to an apology, he has got the wrong man, and does not know the situation as I do. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, what was the condition? Mr. Roosevelt was not a man with whom I had ever associated intimately in public life, and that was my misfortune. I knew him, and had a sharp contention with him upon this identical question of civil-service reform, and I had stood firmly then where I stand now, and where the Democratic party stands to-day if they are not hypocrites in what they declare.

I differed with Mr. Roosevelt. I did not believe that the machinery of this Civil Service Commission was a proper adjunct to the administration of a great government, and I have never changed my mind, and I should think vastly less of the President if he had not in those days of contention used strong language in denouncing the men, my associates here in Congress, who seemed to put ourselves in so absurd a position by voting to strike out the pay of the Civil Service Commission. Of course the public by this time has come to understand that we have done all that merely as a matter of protest against the absorption of the political power of this country by the Civil Service Commission.

And I contended, just as I contend to-day, against the position of the President at that time upon the question of the administration of the Civil Service Department of this Government, of which he was a member. So he wrote of me what he had the right to write. He wrote of me that I was one of the active and strong opponents of the doctrine, and he used language that was by no means unfitted for the occasion from the standpoint that he believed at the time, and the gentleman from Iowa and myself and others were classified, and the gentleman has seen fit to garble the statement and not read the names of a large number of other prominent gentlemen who were included in the category at that time. And I can say to the gentleman he has not sprung anything so wonderfully new in this House, as it was very ably and eloquently presented in the House some days ago by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON], and he is only thrashing over old straw when he comes here and reads what had been read by the gentleman from Tennessee.

A MEMBER. He thrashed it pretty well.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let us see what happened from that time to this. This is now over four years ago, and my connection with

Mr. Roosevelt in public life is just what I have described, and no more. That I ever said of him that he was distasteful to me as a candidate for Vice-President I deny.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. I did not make that charge.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then what did you say, and what do you mean? Innuendo and insinuation are much more adapted to the gentleman's course of argument than bringing forward the facts.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. I read from your letter.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I never said he was distasteful to me, nor did I say that he was distasteful to anybody else, that I remember of. [Laughter on Democratic side.] Now, Mr. Chairman, if anybody can tell what is alarming the other side by that remark, I do not know. Now what happened? Mr. Roosevelt was nominated. No matter what the motives that secured his nomination were. No matter whether I was in favor of him or not. He was nominated and put upon the Republican platform, side by side with McKinley, and he was not abused in that campaign by the Democrats.

McKinley received all the bitterness, all the vile vituperation that the English language can convey, and his running mate was exempt. Mr. Roosevelt went upon the stump, and I have this to say, with some knowledge of stump oratory in the United States, and the career of men who have participated, that from my earliest recollection down to the present time no man ever made a better impression for himself and for his party than Theodore Roosevelt made in the campaign of 1900. [Applause on the Republican side.] That was the start. Then he came to this city, modestly took his place under the constitutional provision, and presided in the Senate of the United States. It is not a place or a grand opportunity for a man to display greatness, or characteristics peculiar to special types of manhood, yet there never was a word of criticism, so far as I can recall, as to his dignified presiding in the Senate and his modest demeanor among the Senators and his actions among the people of the United States whom he met here.

Then came the crisis in his life. William McKinley was dead, and the tears of the Democratic party began to gush out for the first time. The man who had been denounced with all the bitterness that the language can communicate was wept over by the same men; and Roosevelt was called by the Constitution and by the call of duty to appear at Buffalo and take the oath of office and become President of the United States, and then it was that the people of the United States began to know him, and then it was that he entered upon a policy, a wider and grander field of operation, for the kind of a man who becomes a great man, than he had ever had before. The first thing he did, standing almost over the dead body of McKinley, was to state that, in the presence of Almighty God, he assumed the duties of the President, and promised that he would carry into faithful execution all the policies of William McKinley. That sentence, Mr. Speaker, of Roosevelt's, saved the loss to the people of this country in money alone of hundreds of millions of dollars.

At the death of a President, and that, too, a President who stood as the champion of a great policy, and who held in his hands the threads of the governmental action in so many directions that affected trade and commerce, it was natural to fear, and we all did fear, that there would be a panic in Wall street that might spread to the country and might precipitate the country into an immeasurable stampede of destruction.

It was feared that there was a panic almost ready to break out in very many centers of the country, and which would have extended itself to Europe, but the voice of the man in whose integrity of purpose the people had confidence stilled the rising tide as the voice that on the lake spoke the words "Peace, be still," and allayed the storm. He spoke to the business interests of the United States and of the world and his "Peace, be still," was the promise faithfully to carry out the work of McKinley.

It was the statement of the man, and the public believed that he would take up the work of McKinley; take up the broken chain of his Administration and go forward to the discharge of his duty, following the impulse of a generous nature and guided by the Cabinet that McKinley had left. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I stand here to-day a friend of McKinley—that is true, as suggested by the gentleman—knowing something as to whom his real friends are, knowing something of whom his assumed friends are, and I say that there is not one of the leading and distinguished friends of William McKinley in the United States of America whose name and opinion has come to my knowledge who is not ready at all times to say without hesitation and always that he has been treated with kindness, with cordiality, and with the strongest kind of support by Theodore Roosevelt. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Look at the men who stood by McKinley and see who the men were that were taken into the counsel and advice of Roosevelt. I do not care now to enumerate them, but the man who above all other men stood nearest to McKinley, the man who loved him like a brother, transferred his affection instantly at Buffalo to Theodore Roosevelt, and from that day until he himself passed away, never faltered in his utterances, always and everywhere, that Roosevelt had cordially and earnestly and honestly redeemed the pledges that he made at Buffalo. [Applause on the Republican side.] I know something about Theodore Roosevelt now, and do you think that you can, by a quibble and by taking little extracts from newspapers, carrying your sneers and innuendoes with them and carrying your manipulation of the words that he used, sow discord among the friends of McKinley now cordially supporting Roosevelt or among the Republicans of the United States? If you think so, go on, and when the campaign is over you will find that you have, to use a western expression, been all the time casting your eyes up a tree where the animal had not climbed.

Four years have developed this man. Four years have brought out from him the great characteristics that you are afraid of. Four years have impressed his character upon the people of the United States. Four years have taught them to know that however strongly his language may have been, used in certain arguments he may have made, behind it and over it and under it and all around it is the great essence of patriotism and integrity of purpose and honesty, such as becomes an honest man. These are the opinions of Roosevelt. Nobody undertakes to say that he can not go back over his career and find some utterance of his that he would not have him repeat, and the same thing can be said of every other man. Nobody doubts that, but how contemptible it is in the light of the great questions ahead of us, how picayunish it is, how little it is, how like a peanut politician from a back township in the district of Podunk somewhere, to go before a great audience of intelligent men and undertake to pick out and criticise utterances made by a gentleman writing books for popular approval when he was a private citizen of the United States of America.

He has spoken unkindly of somebody down South, and that is a crime in the estimation of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN]. He has spoken unkindly of Jefferson Davis, and I hold in my hand a document published by one of these organizations that are so much afraid of the bloody shirt, anxious to get rid of dissensions between the North and South, which declares solemnly, and puts it in an official document, that Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's Battle Hymn of the Republic is blasphemy; that beautiful poem that has thrilled millions of men, women, and children, "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," is now called "blasphemy" in this year of conciliation and good will. Loyalty and "blasphemy" run along very closely together.

To add something to my speech which will remind our people of the olden times, I add the beautiful hymn:

BATTLE HYMN OF THE REPUBLIC.

Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord:
He is trampling out the vintage where the grapes of wrath are stored;
He hath loosed the fateful lightning of his terrible swift sword:
His truth is marching on.

I have seen him in the watch fires of a hundred circling camps:
They have builded Him an altar in the evening dews and damps;
I can read his righteous sentence by the dim and flaring lamps:
His day is marching on.

I have read a fiery gospel, writ in burnished rows of steel:
"As ye deal with my contemners, so with you my grace shall deal;
Let the hero, born of woman, crush the serpent with his heel,
Since God is marching on."

He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat;
He is sifting out the hearts of men before His judgment seat.
Oh, be swift, my soul, to answer Him! be jubilant my feet!
Our God is marching on.

In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in His bosom that transfigures you and me.
As He died to make men holy, let us die to make men free,
While God is marching on.

What are we coming to when such a beautiful hymn as this is thus denounced and driven from the schools of the South?

So you see that this is a mere quibbling about words, and to think that by reason of an attack upon the President of the United States because in some remote day he said something about Jeff. Davis—and I do not think the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN] would greatly condemn him for it in private conversation to-day—the people of the North are going to condemn Roosevelt is the height of absurdity. In no act of his official life has he done anything that you can criticise. You tell us in the language of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], copying copiously from the very able remarks that he made here a few days ago, in substance if not literally, that he has assumed to dictate to Congress. What is it that he dictated to Congress? I challenge the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN] in his own time, sometime, when we do not want to go home to dinner, to tell us what it was that he has dictated to this side of the House or to that. What public act of Congress was the result of the dictation of the President?

I deny that he has dictated anything to Congress; I deny that he has gone beyond the purpose and intent and letter of the Constitution in advising Congress as to what he desired, fulfilling his duty as the President of the United States, and I have had some knowledge of public men. I have been in the country a long time, much longer than has the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN], and I have had access to and knowledge of public men, and I will say that I have never known a public man holding a high position that was more amenable to the sentiment of public declarations and the advice of his party and those surrounding him than is Theodore Roosevelt. [Applause on the Republican side.]

If it were proper I could go into details, showing where he here changed his policy upon a certain thing and there changed his declarations in his message, and here did this to accommodate the opinion of men surrounding him, and I believe that to-day of my own personal knowledge and personal acquaintance with the two men, as between Theodore Roosevelt and William McKinley, there has been less of determined purpose to carry out his own personal views in public affairs than there was with Mr. McKinley. So much for that. So the whole thing falls to the ground, excepting that somebody said that I wrote, from Philadelphia, that, in my judgment, he was not a desirable candidate for Vice-President. I believe to-day that there is a much more important question before us, and I believe that he is the most available man for the office of President, and the most threatening and dangerous candidate to the Democratic party that can be named on the Continent of America. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I do not doubt that the sharp criticisms of Roosevelt and his personality and his past speeches and writings are all born of the dread the Democrats have of the man as our candidate.

I believe that President Roosevelt represents in his own career, in his own utterances, in his own position to-day, the highest ideals and best sentiment of the Republicans of the United States. I believe that his whole career has been a protest against the demoralizing, antiquated, and obnoxious ideas of the Democratic party. I believe that the people of the United States have confidence in his integrity, and I know they have. I believe his career as President has been one of the most brilliant that has ever graced and adorned the head of the Government of the United States, and I speak with no extravagance when I say that his judgment upon the great public questions of the day has been unerring. I speak calmly and deliberately, and measure my words when I say that he is in exact and perfect accord with the best sentiment and the truest instincts of the Republicans of the United States, and yet the Democratic party's manifest purpose is to enter the campaign of 1904 with the silly battle cry, "Personal detraction and personal abuse of Theodore Roosevelt."

And that seems to be your object and purpose. You have no principles; you can not agree upon them. You gathered together the wisdom of the Democratic party of the United States, and went over to Albany, N. Y., to promulgate a platform, and, having got through with it, you can not tell to-day whether it was the utterance of a Democratic platform or the soliloquy of some student in a Sunday school or country debating society. [Laughter and applause.] Colorless, unimportant, odorless and unsatisfactory, tasteless and insipid. And if you will only nominate a colorless candidate, and put him upon a colorless platform—and you can not get any other one agreed to—we will show you that the people of the United States believe in a man that says something, believes in something, believe in a man that does not undertake to secure a nomination for President without daring to tell the convention that nominates him, or the country, whether he stands on his "head or on his heels upon the great questions of the hour." [Applause on the Republican side.]

The American people will not be satisfied with a candidate for President whom they do not know. They will not be satisfied with a President who will go into the Presidential office unpledged to any party policy or any political action. It is typical of Democratic policy to suppress from the people all knowledge of their candidates and their past, and in the present case we are threatened very strongly it seems to me with the manifest purpose of the Democratic party to make a platform of scattering generalities and make personal assaults upon the President of the United States, assail the Administration of the country and disgrace it as far as possible in the estimation of mankind, and then bring a colorless and odorless candidate and place him upon a colorless and odorless platform and ask the people of the United States to commit themselves to the horrors and uncertainties of a Democratic Administration unpledged to anything.

And there will be nobody cheated when we nominate Roosevelt at Chicago. We know who he is, what he is, and what he is in favor of. Can you say as much for your candidate? Who of you can guess? What is he? Nobody knows. What is he in favor of? Nobody dares to undertake to say. What is his platform? There is no platform upon which you can agree.

Without detaining my friends here from their dinner, I have simply to say that all these attacks upon Roosevelt only attract the attention of the people to the sterling character of the man and the brilliancy of his career. No man in this country ever had a brighter, a more brilliant career. He undertook that task which men coming before him had attempted and in which they had usually failed. He undertook the task of holding his party in line and standing by the platform and doctrines and teachings of his party, coming to his high office, as he did, by the death of the President; and he has succeeded beyond the hope of his closest friends. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Therefore it is that I warn the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] that that rock upon which he is pounding—the eternal principles of truth and justice and Republicanism—is too securely anchored to be moved by any such attack. The waves may dash against it in vain. Let me remind the gentleman—using the language of Scripture—he has pointed out that some of us were not originally believers in Roosevelt, and we agree to it; but let me tell him the times have changed, and the stone that the builders tried to reject has become the head of the Republican corner. [Loud and long-continued applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAMILTON. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman yield to me for two minutes?

Mr. HAMILTON. Certainly.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL].

[Mr. BEALL of Texas addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LLOYD. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BENNY].

Mr. BENNY. Mr. Chairman, since the beginning of the present session there has been an almost continuous procession of Republican orators on the floor of this House proclaiming "the Republican party is the friend of labor." It looks as though the Republican Members of the House had begun to think that the people of the land, and particularly the laboring classes, didn't see things that way, and that attention might be drawn from the shortcomings of the party in power, so far as labor is concerned, by a grand cry all along the line, "We are the friends of labor."

But, verily, you on the other side do protest too much. You have overdone the thing, and have called attention, by the very vehemence of your announcement, to the glaring difference between your promises and your performances concerning the welfare of labor in the United States. If the Republican party has been labor's friend, why is it necessary to make announcement to that effect day after day? Do you suppose, if you had been the friend of labor, that labor would not know that just as well as you do? Don't you know that labor has been lately keeping at least one eye open to see who its friends have been and who its enemies? And I have marveled in this, my first session, to hear so many protestations of love for labor from the Republican side. I have been lead to wonder what it all means. One would think, to listen to your speeches, that your chief men sat up late at night thinking out ways and means for helping labor along on its stormy path. Why all this outcry at this particular time?

Mr. Chairman, your party has been in control of this Government for the past seven years, subject, of course, during the last three years to the lien of the partial possession thereof by the distinguished gentleman now occupying the Presidential chair. During all that time your promises to labor were many, your opportunities to carry out those promises were without limit, but your performances were pitiably few.

In the burying ground at Cemetery Hill, just outside of Lakewood, N. J., is a tombstone upon which is inscribed, after the name of the person in whose memory it was erected, these words: "He meant well, tried little, and failed much." I have thought more than once this session that when a monument is erected to the memory of the Republican party and proper inscriptions are to be made thereon, what it did for labor could best be told by striking out the first two words of that old inscription and placing in their stead the words "It promised," so that the message to posterity then will read: "It promised well, tried little, and failed much."

And now a Presidential election is only six and one-half months away. Is that why you talk until the RECORD is full to overflowing about your love for the workingman? Your show of affection for him before election is really pathetic, and the extent to which your love grows cold immediately after election must be due, at least in part, to the abnormal pressure on your emotional organ in the earlier period.

No wonder the Republican party would like at this time to be known as the friend of those who earn their living by hard work. You know you have succeeded more than once in recent years in frightening the workingman into voting your ticket by awful tales of mills closing down, factories bursting up, and business going to the bow-wows in case of Democratic success, but you seem now to realize that Lincoln told a great truth when he said: "You can fool some of the people all the time; you can fool all of the people some of the time; but you can't fool all the people all the time." And you have about made up your minds there is only one way to get the vote this year of those who labor, and that is by appealing, not to their fears, but to their sense of gratitude. If you can only make them believe that you have honestly and truly been their friends, then you might turn to them with the cry now, "One good turn deserves another, won't you return our kindness to you by voting to keep us in control of the Government?"

But there is one wise old man on your side who could see a little farther than most of you. He had his ear close to the ground for, lo, these many moons. He heard the people coming. He knew from the voice of the multitude that little credit was given to the statement that the Republican party was the laborer's friend, and so the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] a few days ago, fearing that his party's record would wreck it in the coming campaign, devoted about eighteen pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the object of bringing to the front the record of Theodore Roosevelt and relegating to the rear the record of his party, and the gentleman from Ohio apologized while he did it.

There are about 14,000,000 voters in this country, nearly, if not quite, two-thirds of whom are wage-earners. Organized labor in the various labor unions numbers 2,000,000 voters. These 2,000,000 union men, organized and fighting for the uplifting of all men who labor, will absolutely control the next election for President, because they hold the balance of power, and it is this army of hard-working, well-organized men that the Republican party is trying by every means in its power to first convince that your party. Mr. Chairman, has been its friend, and after that to get the vote of for its candidate next November.

A short review of some Republican promises to the laboring men and the way they were not carried out may be interesting at this time.

In the Republican national platform of 1896, under the head of "The merchant marine," I find these words:

We favor restoring the early American policy of discriminating duties for the upbuilding of our merchant marine and the protection of our shipping in the foreign carrying trade, so that American ships—the product of American labor employed in American shipyards, sailing under the Stars and Stripes, and manned, officered, and owned by Americans—may regain the carrying of our foreign commerce.

Four years went by and nothing—absolutely nothing—was done, although your party was in power in every branch of the Government.

A few weeks ago more than 100 Members of this House went on a pilgrimage to Jamestown, Va., and stopped off at the great shipbuilding plant at Newport News. You who were there saw a number of vessels—five, I think—being built for the United States Navy. There was a plant, valued, it is said, at twelve or thirteen millions of dollars and employing 7,000 men, complete in every detail and prepared to handle every kind of work known to the shipbuilder. Those present marveled at the extent of the works as they were shown through. A splendid little city of nearly 30,000 people has grown up behind this plant and depends largely upon that industry for its prosperity, aye, for its very existence, and yet the one pathetic fact that riveted the attention of most of the Members that day is that not one merchant vessel of any kind or class was in course of construction in that great yard. A few vessels building for the Navy of our country was all that stood between that plant and that city on the one side and ruin on the other. Let the United States stop suddenly the building of ships of war, and the city of Newport News and the shipbuilding yards there, with their thousands of men, would be plunged into ruin.

We have paid during the past twenty years three thousand millions of dollars and are now paying $200,000,000 a year to foreigners to carry, in foreign ships, the foreign commerce of this country, almost every dollar of which ought to be paid to Americans for carrying that foreign commerce in American ships.

For the year ending June 30, 1903, the repeated entrances of foreign vessels employed in our foreign carrying trade was 21,018, with an aggregate tonnage of 24,187,081 tons.

You Republicans who talk long and loudly of your love for labor, have you any idea at all what the upbuilding of our merchant marine means for labor, without counting what it means to the country itself, or to our other interests? You promised in 1896, in the interest of labor, to restore "the early American policy of discriminating duties, * * * so that American ships—the product of American labor," etc., would regain the carrying of this enormous commerce. Don't you know that to build ships to carry this commerce would give steady employment to 100,000 men for five years, and to keep up such a fleet of merchant vessels after they were built would maintain every shipbuilding plant in the country on full time?

Have you had time to figure out the number of men, the thousands and thousands to whom employment would come in the various works of providing tools, and houses to live in, and food and clothing, and other necessaries and comforts of life for this army of men? Wouldn't the rebuilding of our merchant marine be a healthy prosperity that would send its blessings into every channel?

The first four years of President McKinley's Administration passed by and a very small portion of the second term when President Roosevelt became, through the lamented death of his predecessor, the Chief Executive. His principal characteristic is said to be energy, or, as many put it, strenuousness, and his motto "Words are good when backed by deeds, and only so." And surely with such an energetic man to push matters, and this plain platform of 1896, there ought to have been at once some forceful legislation on this subject.

Your party and your President were well aware of the necessity for action, for, in addition to the clear language of your 1896 declaration, your platform of 1900, upon which Theodore Roosevelt stood as a candidate for Vice-President, contained this paragraph:

SHIPPING.

Our present dependence upon foreign shipping for nine-tenths of our foreign carrying is a great loss to the industry of this country. It is also a serious danger to our trade, for its sudden withdrawal in the event of European war would seriously cripple our expanding commerce. The national defense and naval efficiency of this country, moreover, supp y a compelling reason for legislation which will enable us to recover our former place among the trade-carrying fleets of the world.

When those declarations of 1896 and 1900 were made you knew the condition of affairs. You knew that in 1796 we carried 17 per cent of our foreign commerce in American ships, and that in 1826, just thirty years later, by reason of the Jefferson and Madison policy of discriminating duties, this had increased to 98 per cent, so that then we carried almost all of our foreign commerce in our own vessels.

These are the early American policies to which your platforms promised we would return. You were aware that our shipping has been dwindling until at the end of the last fiscal year, June 30, 1903, the percentage of our foreign commerce carried in our own ships had dropped to 9.1 per cent, and at this date is even less. And the most lamentable fact is that not one vessel for this commerce is now being built in the United States.

The situation is one that ought to make every American who loves his country hang his head in shame.

Your 1896 platform mapped out very plainly your pathway. Your 1900 declaration called attention once more to the danger of delay. The American mechanic was all ready for his employment and willing to bless you if you gave it to him. Why, then, didn't you do something? Why didn't you try to do something? Why didn't you go ahead and return to the early American policies, as you promised? Where has your love of country and of labor gone to? And why have you failed so absolutely?

And now after seven years of promise your mountain has labored and brought forth a mouse in the shape of a bill now before the House providing for a commission to investigate and report at the next session—just after election. What is your reason now for asking a commission to investigate after seven years of wasted time? Is it because you don't know what to do? Was your plan of 1896 wrong? The only explanation I have heard was by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], who said that a return to the "early American policies," to which you promised in 1896 you would return in order to reestablish our merchant marine, would conflict with some treaties entered into by this Government with foreign countries; but inasmuch as these treaties, thirty or more, were all made long before the platform of 1896, some of them nearly if not quite a hundred years ago, there is no more danger in that direction now than when the platform was written.

Why during the seven years of your complete power have you not enacted some law in line with your promises on this subject? You solemnly said you would in these words, taken from your platform:

Such are the principles and policies of the Republican party. By these principles we will abide, and these policies we will put into execution.

And instead of earnestly trying to execute these policies you now deliberately refuse to legislate and throw the whole thing over until after election.

You even claim that the principal object of the tariff is to raise wages and that protection to industry is merely incidental. Everything you have done or promised to do you now claim has for its object the betterment of the condition of the laboring man. Day after day we are regaled on this floor by Republican speeches glibly telling us that Republican tariff schedules have raised wages 12 per cent. Any laboring man will deny that and insist that wages have fallen more than 12 per cent during the past two years. But when the question is asked, "What good does even a 12 per cent increase of wages do the workingman when the cost of his food stuffs and other necessaries has been increased 43 per cent?" every man on your side dodges it as though it were a 12-inch shell.

But the man who labors and his wife who struggles to keep his larder stocked and his home furnished both know whether his wages of to-day will buy as much as would his wages of seven or ten or twelve years ago. You can't fool either with your figures or your calculations. They deal not in figures, but in the actual money and the actual things that money will buy. And they don't guess about it. They know that the amount of money paid to-day in wages will not buy the same quantity or quality of the necessaries and comforts of life as could be bought by the amount of money paid in wages in the years before you came into power.

This man and his wife know only too well that even if the husband has been fortunate enough to have had his wages increased 12 per cent it means only this: That if his wages before were $10 per week this increase raised them to $11.20, while the 43 per cent increase in the cost of living means that what he could before buy with his $10 now costs $14.30, so that he is $3.10 a week worse off than before. And so, every man who works—laborer, mechanic, clerk, or whatever he may be—figures out for himself his wage or salary as it was a few years ago and what that amount would then buy, and then compares it with his present wage or salary and what that amount will purchase now. And in most instances, particularly in the case of the great army of clerks, the salaries have not increased at all, while the cost of living has gone up tremendously.

And if you insist that your policies raised wages and also the prices of goods, the comfort you may get out of it will be cold indeed by the time of next November.

When your party, Mr. Chairman, goes begging for labor's vote this fall, when your orators are shouting from every platform your undying love for the men of toil, when you are recounting the things you have done, and are promising again to pass all sorts of legislation in behalf of labor if labor will only once more vote you into power, the workingmen of the land will remember only too well for your peace of mind your glaring failures. Not only will your utter disregard of the solemn promises of your platform in regard to the merchant marine be fresh in mind, but every man that works, and the friends of every workingman, and the people of the country in general will not forget your treatment of labor measures in this session.

No more faithful class of employees exists anywhere in the world than the 23,000 letter carriers in the cities of the United States. His calling requires that the letter carrier be mentally and physically strong and active; he must be and is absolutely honest and sober; he is required to be a model of politeness; he must dress well and keep his family well, because, forsooth he represents, in a conspicuous place where multitudes see him all the time, the Government of the United States. And that Government permits no shabbiness in the letter carrier or in anything pertaining so him, excepting only his salary.

The letter carrier has had to bear, in common with all our people, the burden of an increase of 43 per cent in the cost of living; he has had no 12 per cent raise in wages that it is claimed on the other side has been given to labor generally because of Republican policies. His salary has remained stationary, while the things his salary must buy for his family have gone up and up, adding to his difficulties of making both ends meet. For each day he is away from his work, through sickness or otherwise, a day's pay is taken from his wages. If he is injured by being bitten by a dog, or falls on the ice and breaks a leg, or is otherwise injured in the discharge of his duty, or, through exposure to wind and weather, contracts pneumonia or other disease, this great Government refuses to pay him anything for the time he is unable to perform his duties. In other words, he is paid for the days he works, and not paid for the days he does not work, without regard to the reasons for his not working. He labors from one and three-quarter years to seven years as a substitute, at an average of $26 per month, before being appointed as a regular carrier.

The pay of a man who is appointed a regular carrier after two years' service as substitute is as follows:

First year, substitute	$300
Second year, substitute	300
First year, regular	600
Second year, regular	800
Third year, regular	1,000
Total for five years	3,000
Average	600
Average for ten years	800

That is in cities of the first class.

In second-class cities the average for the first five years as above is slightly less, viz, $580, and $740 for ten years.

From these sums is deducted, however, the amount lost for each day the carrier fails to work.

Ever since your party came into power these men have been patiently waiting for you to carry out your campaign promises to them, and give them the increase of $200 a year for which they have so often petitioned. In your love for this particular kind of labor what has your answer been? Nothing but "wait until next session" or "wait until after election." This session you had the matter squarely before the House, and when the proposition was made by the Democratic Members to add the increase to the carriers' salaries, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, objected on the ground that the increase was new legislation.

Will you ever forget the appeal of the Democratic leader, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET]? How, with outstretched arms, he appealed in the name of the letter carriers that the objection might be withdrawn, and how, with almost brutal frankness, the gentleman from Indiana repeated, "I object!" Do you remember how, then, the Speaker sustained the point of order, and how an appeal from the decision was taken to the House itself? You know now and you knew then that if the House had voted to not sustain the decision of the Chair the letter carriers would have received the increase. And yet when that question was put to a vote every one of you Republicans who shout yourselves hoarse in announcing your love for labor voted to sustain the decision, and thereby voted against the carriers' increase, while every Democrat voted to not sustain the decision, and therefore in favor of that increase. You may talk yourselves blue in the face, but you can never wipe out the record of that vote in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which will rise up to confound you in every part of this country every time you dare again proclaim your friendship for him who has to work to live.

But you have added insult to injury in the case of the letter carriers. You not only have refused them the increase they so well deserve, but you have stood silently by while the present occupant of the Presidential office has directed, by his official order, that no more shall these men have even the right guaranteed them and all other citizens of the United States by the Constitution to petition Congress for a redress of their grievances. Never again, says the President, shall the letter carriers, under pain of dismissal, send their petition to the Congress of the United States.

Why? Because the President says so. But the carriers can and will appeal to the people of the country, and they need not say a word, either. All the people know them and know what they want and what they deserve. And their wrongs will be righted. If I mistake not the people of the Seventh Indiana district, the man who will represent that district in the Fifty-ninth Congress will not interpose an objection that so grossly injures a great body of worthy workingmen: and if I do not mistake the signs of the times, the people of the country will work such a change in the political complexion of this House at the next election that the number of Republican "friends of labor" will be too small to prevent these men from getting their due. I want to call attention to the fact that you did vote in favor of an increase in the salaries of the rural free-delivery carriers because of the fact that many Republicans expected to be benefited thereby in the coming campaign. Every Democrat in this body was glad to see even that slight justice done to a few men who labor, and voted with you. I call attention to it for the reason that I believe it to be the only thing you did in any way to assist labor.

The two measures of most importance to the laboring men were the eight-hour bill and the anti-injunction bill. Both of these you first amended in committee so as to make them practically useless, and then killed them altogether. Again your love for labor was shown to be a farce.

When the Philippine shipping bill was up for discussion a few days ago and it was shown that every seaman on the ships carrying our foreign commerce across the Pacific is a Chinaman, and an amendment was proposed by a Democrat requiring that American seamen should be employed in that commerce, your "love for labor" again came to the front. Your party voted for the Chinaman because he costs little and against the American because he costs more, with the result that the amendment supported by the Democrats of the House was defeated, and your friend the Chinaman will continue to man the ships.

In every matter affecting the laboring man, since I have been in this House, the Republican has been for labor with his voice and against labor with his vote, but when you meet labor face to face next fall you will not find labor's voice one way and his vote the other.

It is a remarkable and a sad fact that while the laborer has been his own best friend he has, at the same time, been his own worst enemy. By his persistent and long-continued efforts he has raised himself from a serf to the full measure of God's imperial man. Philanthropy has had very little to do with labor's rise. His motto of "one for all and all for one;" his determination to be rated as a man equal in every respect to every other man, no matter what his calling; his deep-rooted conviction that he would rise in spite of all obstacles, because he was right; his religious belief that God never made one man so good that he could own another man, or one man so poor that he should be owned by another; his knowledge that all property is produced by labor and capital combined, and that he, the laborer, was not getting his proper share of that production; his determination to make for his child a better place in this life than he himself had been able to reach, and his insistment that his weaker brother should not be left behind to perish, but should, by his effort, be assisted upward with him, have been the causes of his rapid advancement in recent years; but, while doing these things during practically the whole of the year, he has, unfortunately, on the one day in the year when he is the equal in power of every other man in the land, including the President of this Republic—the one day when his united action at the ballot box would do more for himself than most of his work during the balance of the year—been absolutely wasting his energies. His house has been divided against itself. With the same object in view, he has been voting one way and his brother has nullified his ballot by voting the other way.

But I believe that things will soon be different. This session of Congress has helped to open labor's eyes. Perhaps next election will show that the laboring man is hereafter going to use his most powerful weapon for good, not against his brother (and therefore against himself), but against his enemy. He will do as those who have opposed him have always done, stand shoulder to shoulder with his brother at the ballot box; find out who is labor's friend and who is labor's enemy; try to do as the enemy has done—remember the friend long enough to vote for him, and not forget the enemy until he has voted against him—and when he has done that a number of times he will receive fewer promises and more performances, with great benefit to himself and enormous advantage to the peace and prosperity of labor, capital, and the people at large.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the hour of adjournment is rapidly drawing near, and the time approaches when under our system of government the Members of the popular branch of the legislative division of our Government must submit their legislative conduct to the judgment of the people whom they represent. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I rise in my place for the purpose of asking the Republican party what they have done to commend themselves to the laboring people of this country. What legislative act of theirs can they point to as a reason why the toilers of this nation should again be led to believe the oft stated and reiterated assertion that the Republican party is the friend and supporter of the American workingman? Whenever the present tariff law is attacked on the floor of this House or whenever the Republican party is charged with placing burdens on the majority for the benefit of the minority, it has been and is now the unfailing cry of the gentlemen at present in the majority in this body that measures of this kind interfering with the commercial relations between nations can be justified, if on no other ground, at least upon the theory that they enable the manufacturer of this country to pay American wages to his employee.

This is the argument that is constantly made. It is an argument which never fails to bring forth applause. It may be true that under a protective system the combinations fostered by such a system may be able to extort such high prices for necessaries of life, such as meat, coal, clothing, shoes, as to enable them, if willing, to pay high wages, but we have not yet reached the millenium, and bitter experience has taught the workingman of America that the raising of a tariff schedule doesn't automatically increase his wages; that there is no provision in the statutes compelling the employer to share with his employee the plunder taken from the people under cover of law, and so we find that when the American workingman desires to enforce his rights, increase his wages, and improve his condition, he has recourse, not to a political party, but exercises that prerogative of American citizenship of which he hasn't yet been totally deprived and refuses to work—in other words, he goes on strike. And here, Mr. Chairman, we have the fundamental cause for the labor troubles that have come upon this land during this period of much-vaunted prosperity.

Legislation has been enacted under Republican rule which admittedly had for its object the enabling of the American manufacturer to sell his goods without competition, and, consequently, at a higher price. We have seen that advantage has been taken of this legislation and that prices have been raised all over this land. We have seen that we are asked to pay for our goods not only sufficient to pay the cost of manufacture, sale, and a fair profit to pay dividends on watered stock and imaginery capital, but we have been asked and compelled to pay prices sufficiently high to enable our goods to be freighted to and sold in foreign markets in competition with the foreign manufacturers whom we are taught to fear so much.

The Republican theory of protection is that we can afford to pay high prices in order to employ the labor of our own land, and while this theory has been demonstrated to be a vicious one, and so denounced by no less a person than the present President of the United States, still its advocates have not followed it out to its logical conclusion.

If the manufacturer is to be protected by having a ta if wall interposed between him and the competition of the world, and if that be a beneficent arrangement, what earthly excuse is there for asking the workingmen of America to remain unprotected from the tide of foreign labor which is constantly setting toward these shores and enters into competition with him in numbers sufficient to prevent him from getting the wages which he would be enabled to demand were his labor protected to the same extent as capital? This, Mr. Chairman, I believe to be the crux of the whole question. It doesn't matter so much, for the purposes of this discussion, whether or not protection is a wise, economic policy or not; but the point I make is that if you justify protection on the ground that it advantages American labor to protect his employer from having his goods put into competition with goods manufactured abroad, what have you to say to the American workingman for your failure to protect him from the foreign laborer, who comes here to sell the same wares that are sold by the American mechanic, to wit, the product of his brain and hand?

Can anyone doubt that if the Pennsylvania miner, for instance, were asked to compete only with American citizens his wages would be higher and his conditions of labor better than they are at present? Can anyone doubt but that if the American mechanic were protected against the million or more immigrants which come to these shores each year, who are thrown into the bitterest kind of competition with him, he would not be able to get a larger share of his product than he now receives? I contend, Mr. Chairman, that it is illogical for the Republican party to pretend that the protective system is based upon a desire for the well-being and welfare of the American workingman, while at the same time permitting him to be subjected to the competition of the labor of the entire world. The Republican party is the party of protection so far as the manufacturing interests of the country are concerned, but it is the party of free trade so far as the laboring men themselves are concerned.

I can't make this point too emphatic, that the real free traders, the only men who desire to submit the American workingman unprotected to the competition of the labor of the world, are the members of the Republican party, and yet I have never heard a protection speech delivered on the floor of this House by the gentlemen on the other side in which they had not declared that the sole and controlling reason for the protective-tariff system was the desire on the part of the Republican party to benefit the laboring men of America. But, while the Republican party hasn't shown any disposition to aid him, the American workingman has been busy in his characteristic fashion, and has been reaching out for what he wants and demanding it in no uncertain tones. He has, through his representatives, asked the present Administration and this Congress for certain measures which he believed to be beneficial to him, and I think it is fair to try the claims of the Republican party to the friendship of the American workingman by the practical test of what they do for him, rather than by the vague and deceptive one of what they say about him.

Organized labor, representing millions of men actually within its ranks and untold millions of others who, while not enrolled in any organization, are benefited or injured by any injury or benefit to their organized brethren, respectfully asked from this Congress the enaction of certain laws which they seemed to think would aid them in meeting conditions which they are called upon to face. As I have attempted to show, the Republican party admits its responsibility for the increased living expenses of these men; and it being necessary for them to make a stand and demand that their wages increase at least in proportion to their expenses, they used the ordinary weapon of the American workingman under such circumstances and went on strike. They found, however, that their opponents no longer were satisfied to rely on the ancient and mediæval weapons of hunger and starvation, which, while effective in the end, were not speedy enough.

Organized labor has learned to deal with these weapons by providing and laying up a day of prosperity against a day of adversity, so that their opponents had recourse to the law, and not to that law with which we have long been familiar—the law which is placed upon the statute books by the calm and deliberate judgment of a legislative assembly, sanctioned by the Executive, and published broadcast, and which every citizen is called upon to take notice of and obey—but a finer kind of law, a law that has its origin with and is only limited by the caprice of some particular member of the judiciary; so that we have seen men and women in this country who were striking to enforce their reasonable demands enjoined from doing that which the law of the land permitted them to do, but which became unlawful the moment it was prohibited by the judicial decree.

We have seen every interpretation made which would enable judical officers to get to the desired result in labor injunction cases, namely, to bring the strikers or some conspicuous one among them before the power of the court without delay, without preliminary investigation by a grand jury, and there try them for that which according to the law of the land is not criminal. They try him how? By a jury of his peers? No; he is tried by the judge who made the decree, so that the very fundamental idea upon which our Government is based is defeated. Two of the three distinct and separate departments of our governmental system are merged into one, and the decree is construed and punishment inflicted by the same mind and the same hand that originally drafted it. The net result of this innovation has been that any man who dares to go on strike in this country can be imprisoned for it. Not only can be, but is.

The court of errors and appeals of the State of New Jersey has held that the punitive order or the order punishing a prisoner for contempt of court can not be reviewed, and it will not take notice of an allegation that the acts forbidden were lawful, that the acts charged were not committed, that the acts charged were not proven, or that the punishment is cruel and unusual. So that we have this strange anomaly of one judicial officer mightier and more powerful than we have been led to believe were the combined legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government. The laboring men in this country realize that if these scattering decisions of the courts were permitted to crystallize in the settled law of the land their condition would be reduced far below the much-feared pauper laborer of Europe and have asked this Congress to protect them against this vision. The following bill was introduced:

[H. R. 89, Fifty-eighth Congress, first session.]

A bill to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That no agreement, combination, or contract by or between two or more persons to do or procure to be done, or not to do or procure not to be done, any act in contemplation or furtherance of any trade dispute between employers and employees in the District of Columbia or in any Territory of the United States, or between employers and employees who may be engaged in trade or commerce between the several States, or between any Territory and another, or between any Territory or Territories and any State or States or the District of Columbia, or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations, shall be deemed criminal, nor shall those engaged therein be indictable or otherwise punishable for the crime of conspiracy, if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime, nor shall such agreement, combination, or contract be considered as in restraint of trade or commerce, nor shall any restraining order or injunction be issued with relation thereto. Nothing in this act shall exempt from punishment, otherwise than as herein excepted, any persons guilty of conspiracy for which punishment is now provided by any act of Congress, but such act of Congress shall, as to the agreements, combinations, and contracts hereinbefore referred to, be construed as if this act were therein contained.

The act, as you see, provides for nothing except that what one may do lawfully two or more may combine to do lawfully, and that no such agreement shall be considered to be in restraint of trade or commerce, and that no injunction shall be issued restraining them. Here was the opportunity for the present Congress and the Republican Administration to show once and for all whether or not they were really the friends of the laboring man of this country. They have shown time after time, with almost sickening humility and sycophancy that they are the friends of the manufacturers and have told the American workingman that his interests and those of the manufacturer are identical. So, on what theory could they refuse this legislation? Who was going to be hurt by it? No man is empowered to do anything in this bill except that which we have always believed he was able to do, namely, to organize his fellow-men and go on strike.

The Republican party admits that it is responsible for high prices; that it has made these prices high in order to enable the manufacturer to pay living wages to his men. Now, I should think they would have embraced this opportunity to show their good faith and their burning desire to aid and assist the workingman in obtaining his share of the prosperity for which they claim to be responsible by simply making it lawful for him to act in concert with his fellow-man for their common good. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that if such had been their desire this bill, known as the "anti-injunction bill," would have had smooth sailing through the Judiciary Committee and the floor of this House.

We might, of course, have seen it meet the fate of many other bills which have passed through this House in recent years; we might have seen it go to its long last resting place in what has been called "the graveyard of the people's hopes"—the United States Senate; but we might have borne that, for we are more or less used to it. But how can we explain the fact that the popular branch, the branch of Congress which must come before the people of the United States and ask them to pass judgment upon their conduct, should have failed to pass a measure of this kind? There is only one reason that I know of. There were many hearings held upon this bill before the Committee on the Judiciary. The parties interested appeared before the committee through their representatives; that vast body of citizens with whose welfare is connected the welfare of every man, woman, and child in this great country, and upon whom the vast structure of our Government in the last analysis rests—the American laboring man—appeared before that committee. His able representatives showed the injustice and the oppression which the lack of this legislation made possible.

The members of the committee were assured that the laboring men of this country were a unit in favor of the passage of this bill; that they believed it to be absolutely essential not only to their welfare, but to their very existence, and that the fight they were conducting was a fight for the right of American citizens to make a stand for living wages and decent conditions of life. On the other hand, representing the manufacturers, was an imposing array of talented counsel arguing that this legislation was demanded in the interests of criminals and lawbreakers. So we have here before this great Congress the issue clearly cut and sharply defined between the vast masses of toilers on the one hand and their oppressors on the other.

I say oppressors, Mr. Chairman, not that I desire to take the position that every American manufacturer is a tyrant. Of my own personal knowledge I know better than that; but the organized opposition to this measure had its inception in manufacturers who are utterly regardless of the welfare of this Republic or its citizens, and who are interested only in the amount of money that can be reaped from the toil of their employees. The committee, after having sat for many days, decided not to report this bill, every Republican voting against it and every Democrat voting that it be reported.

There is another measure which the laboring men of this country through their representatives asked this Congress to pass. It is a measure, the whole history of which is one reproach to the Republican party. I refer to the eight-hour law. We find that in 1868 an act was passed declaring that eight hours shall constitute a day's work, but the Department of Justice of the then Republican Administration decided that act was not applicable to mechanics, workmen, and laborers who are in the employ of a contractor with the United States; that the act was not intended to extend to any others than the immediate employees of the Government.

The Supreme Court also held in relation to this act that it was in the nature of a direction by the Government to its agents, that it created no contract between the Government and its employees, and did not prevent the Government from making agreements with them by which the labor might be more or less than eight hours a day. Dissatisfaction with the law as construed by the heads of Departments and the Supreme Court was shown, and the act of 1892 was passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the service and employment of all laborers and mechanics who are now or may hereafter be employed by the Government of the United States, by the District of Columbia, or by any contractor or subcontractor upon any of the public works of the United States or of said District of Columbia is hereby limited and restricted to eight hours in any one calendar day; and it shall be unlawful for any officer of the United States Government, or of the District of Columbia, or any such contractor or subcontractor, whose duty it shall be to employ, direct, or control the services of such laborers and mechanics, to require or permit any such laborer or mechanic to work more than eight hours in any calendar day except in cases of extraordinary emergency.

SEC. 2. That any officer or agent of the Government of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or any contractor or subcontractor, whose duty it shall be to employ, direct, or control any laborer or mechanic employed upon any of the public works of the United States or of the District of Columbia who shall intentionally violate any provision of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each and every offense, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court having jurisdiction thereof.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall not be so construed as to in any manner apply to or affect contractors or subcontractors or to limit the hours of daily service of laborers or mechanics engaged upon the public works of the United States or of the District of Columbia for which contracts have been entered into prior to the passage of this act.

The committee which reported this act, which afterwards became a law, used the following language:

And again, second, it makes it unlawful to allow or permit a laborer or mechanic to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day, thus prohibiting evasion in the manner the act of 1868 was evaded.

The measure herewith submitted, it is thought, will secure a practical enforcement of the purpose intended to be secured by the act of 1868. It limits the service and employment of all laborers and mechanics employed by the Government of the United States, by the District of Columbia, or by any contractor or subcontractor of the United States or of the District of Columbia upon any of the public works of the United States or the District of Columbia to eight hours in any one calendar day; makes it unlawful for any officer of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or any contractor or sub-contractor, whose duty it shall be to employ, direct, or control the services of such laborers or mechanics to require or permit such laborer or mechanic to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day, except in cases of extraordinary emergency; makes the willful violation of its provisions a misdemeanor, and imposes suitable penalties for such violation.

When this was done the representatives of organized labor were overjoyed in the belief that their long and hard-fought battle had been won through recognition by the Government of the idea that eight hours constituted a good and sufficient day's work for laborers and mechanics. We find, however, that while Congress has power to pass or amend a statute, it has no power to amend the head of a Department or implant in him or the executive officers of the Government the slightest grain of sympathy with the toilers of this country, so it came to pass that all over this broad land the act of 1892, which made it a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of a thousand dollars or imprisonment for six months or both, is grossly violated every day of the year under the very noses of the officials of this Government sworn to enforce the provisions of that very law.

We find the law being violated in the District of Columbia almost within the range of the vision of that unyielding champion of law and order, Theodore Roosevelt, the President of the United States. In consideration of this fact, it is interesting to look back upon the views held on this subject by the present President of the United States, as expressed in an article which appeared in the Forum for September, 1895, containing the following language:

The worst possible lesson to teach any citizen is contempt for the law. Laws should not be left on the statute books, still less put on the statute books, unless they are meant to be enforced. No man should take a public office unless he is willing to obey his oath and to enforce the law. * * * I am far too good an American to believe that in the long run a majority of our people will declare in favor of the dishonest enforcement of law, though I readily admit the possibility that at some given election they may be hopelessly misled by demagogues, and may for the moment make a selfish and cowardly surrender of principle.

One might say, Mr. Chairman, that it would be a rash and foolhardy man who would violate a law which an Executive holding the sentiments here expressed was called upon to enforce, and especially a law which calls for fine and imprisonment of the violator; but the fact remains that in the District of Columbia there is under construction a filtration plant, work on which has been going on for some years, and the law is admittedly constantly and daily being violated, in that the laborers and mechanics employed thereon are worked in two ten-hour shifts per day. What magnificent words were uttered in 1895 and what a magnificent opportunity for deeds presents itself in 1904; but, Mr. Chairman, has anybody been called upon to go to prison for the violation of this law? Has the Executive, who has been bearded and flouted by these violators of the law, taken any steps to enforce it?

Let us see. I had the honor, Mr. Chairman, to call it to the attention of the Chief Executive of this nation that the eight-hour law was being violated in this District, and that while laboring men all over this country were taunted with and punished for the slightest violation of the law, those high in place and power and station could disregard it with impunity. Mr. Chairman, if there is anything that will produce class feeling, class bitterness, and class hatred, it is the knowledge that the laws are made to be regarded only by the poor and weak and made to be disregarded by the rich and powerful when it suits their convenience. What is the plea, if you will, made to this charge? It is that the construction of this filtration plant is an emergency and is therefore exempt from the provisions of the law.

It is an emergency, they say, because it is necessary to hasten its completion; and the very reason which they urge for the violation of the law is the reason for its enforcement, for if there is a necessity for haste in the construction of this plant what is to prevent the contractors or subcontractors engaged in its construction from carrying out the spirit as well as the letter of the eight-hour law by employing three shifts of men to work eight hours per day, thus occupying twenty-four hours each day in the construction of the plant instead of twenty hours under the present system. This is a fair illustration, Mr. Chairman, of how laboring men have been treated by the Republican party and by this Administration.

To make it impossible for a situation like this to present itself and to extend the beneficent results of the eight-hour law to every kind of labor purchased by the Government of the United States to which it was practicable, a bill was introduced in the present Congress and referred to the Committee on Labor. Many days the committee spent listening to the friends and opponents of the bill, and, if I may be permitted to say it, there was not an argument used by the opponents of that measure which was not used against reduction of hours of labor from sixteen to fourteen, from fourteen to twelve, and from twelve to ten. Precisely the same exploded theories were advanced in almost identical language.

The Fifty-seventh Congress had passed an eight-hour bill without an opposing voice on the floor of the House; it had gone to the Senate and there it met the usual fate; and the Republican stump orators pointed with pride to the record of that Congress on that particular bill, so that it would seem that this Congress, being also Republican in complexion and composed largely of the same Members as the Fifty-seventh Congress, would likewise have passed a bill to which they claim the Republican party had been committed and which they claim the credit of having originated and passed, and yet we find that precisely the same organized opposition that appeared against the anti-injunction bill appeared against the passage of the eight-hour bill. We find the same issue raised; the same people on the one side and the same people on the other; the same appeal from the toiling masses of the country; the same demand by their oppressors, and, Mr. Chairman, the same results, for the Committee on Labor of the House of the Fifty-eighth Congress considered the eight-hour bill and every Republican Member present voted against its consideration by the House and every Democratic Member but one voted that it be reported.

But this was not the end of the eight-hour proposition. It might well have been said that the Republican Members of the House could not justify the action of their committee, but, Mr. Chairman, the Republican Members of this House were given an opportunity, in the shape of amendments offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH] and myself to the naval appropriation bill, when we asked you to put in the contracts under which these ships were being built a provision that eight hours should constitute a day's labor. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. FOSS] made the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from California, which the Chair ruled out; that on a fair vote in the Committee of the Whole the entire Republican party with the exception of two Members voted against the motion made, while the entire Democratic side voted to include it in the bill, and, right there, Mr. Chairman, so far as I know, was the first time that the Republican party let drop the mask and once and for all declared itself for the armor-plate trust and against the workingman of America.

The convict-labor bill, a bill which seemed to have no opposition, a bill which seemed to be wholly without objectionable features and designed only to prevent the American workingman from being compelled to compete with prison-made goods, was before the Committee on Labor.

There were no highly paid attorneys opposing this bill, and manufacturer and laboring man alike, so far as I, a member of the committee could see, were in favor of its passage. The bill was unanimously reported some three weeks ago and placed on the Calendar of this House, and there it has slept dreamless and undisturbed, so that this Congress bids fair to end without a line of legislation being written on the statute books at the request of organized labor, while the railroad-subsidy bill, the ship-subsidy commission bill, and every other bill asked for in the interest of the privileged classes of this country has been safely guarded and guided through the labrynthian ways of the House to final passage. Now, what great fact does this demonstrate?

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, it demonstrates to the working people of this country that the Republican party, so far as they are concerned, have thrown off the mask and have made a treaty with their foes. It means, sir, that in their desire to be retained in power they have weighed in one hand the votes and the influence of the laborers of America, in the other hand the campaign contribution of the protected and privileged classes of this country, and have decided against the masses and in favor of the classes. It may be that the Republican party has done wisely in this regard from their standpoint; it may be true, as it has been stated before the Labor Committee, that there is no such thing as a labor vote; it may be true, as confidently stated by the emissaries of Mr. Parry, that, judged by past performances, the labor vote is but the unsubstantial fabric of the vision, but, however that may be, this action marks a new departure in Republican policies. For the first time the mask has fallen from their faces and discloses their true countenance.

The laboring men of America are bound from this time on to march beneath the banner of Democracy. We have told them this time and time again, but now you have voluntarily come forward and reenforced our words. You have driven them from you and told them to do their worst. Laboring men of this country are on trial, and the coming election will demonstrate whether or not they can be insulted, ignored, and trampled upon by the Republican party and still be bamboozled into voting that ticket. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the American workingman is a fair representative of the American people, and I believe he was the kind of a man referred to by that great workingman, Lincoln, when he said: "You can fool some of the people all the time, all the people some of the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time." And next November I confidently believe that the workers of this country, after having carefully considered the facts, after having gone over the records of the two great parties, will return to the fold of that party which has always been their friend, which could not exist without them, which can not be defeated if they are within its ranks.

Mr. HAMILTON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY].

[Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I present a telegraphic memorial from the Chamber of Commerce of New York, remonstrating against the proposed Chinese-exclusion legislation. I ask unanimous consent that it be read.

There being no objection, the memorial was read, as follows:

[Telegram.]

NEW YORK, April 22, 1904.

Hon. THOMAS C. PLATT,
United States Senator, Arlington Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

The Chamber of Commerce of New York sends its protest against the amendment to the Chinese-exclusion act being added to the general deficiency appropriation bill. In view of the efforts that are being made to cultivate and increase trade relations with the Chinese Empire, further restrictive measures would, in our opinion, be suicidal, and we believe would entirely subvert these efforts.

MORRIS K. JESUP, President.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the memorial lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. HOPKINS presented a petition of Francis Beidler & Co., of Chicago, Ill., and a petition of the Cross Press and Sign Company, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to reduce the United States mail rates on first-class matter from 2 cents to 1 cent; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15165) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the navigable waters of St. Andrews Bay, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3070) granting an honorable discharge to Henry B. Wise, alias Henry W. Bach, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STONE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11972) to authorize the Ox Bow Power Company, of South Dakota, to construct a dam across the Missouri River, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALGER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 29) providing for the transfer of certain military records and records from the Interior and other Departments to the War Department, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT MEMPHIS.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2866) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.," approved April 24, 1888, to report it favorably without amendment. It is a very short bill and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHOCTAWHATCHEE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14590) to authorize the courts of county commissioners of Houston and Dale counties, Ala., to construct a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River between Houston and Dale counties, Ala., to report it with an amendment.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the bill just reported by the Senator from Arkansas may be now considered.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the street railways or public highways leading to the said bridge, and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal-telegraph purposes.

Mr. PETTUS. That amendment relates to a creek. It is never navigable. It is a county affair. It seems to me that the bill ought not to be killed by an amendment. I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment.

Mr. BERRY. I will state that it is a section, which is put in all bridge bills. It is always recommended by the Secretary of War, and it has been the custom of the Committee on Commerce to comply with it. For that reason it was put in the bill by the committee.

I know nothing about the facts in this particular case, whether the section ought to be on the bill or whether it ought not, but it has always been put in all the bridge bills. The War Department always recommends that it be put in when it is left out of any bill pending.

Mr. PETTUS. This is merely a country road built for country purposes by the county authorities over a creek. As the act is repealable at the will of Congress it seems to me the bill ought not to be killed now at this stage by that sort of amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. EDWARD O. C. ORD.

Mr. BLACKBURN. By direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3737) to authorize the President to appoint Capt. Edward O. C. Ord to the grade of major in the United States Army and place him on the retired list, and I submit a report thereon. By direction of that committee I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That hereafter there shall be printed monthly by the Public Printer 9,000 copies of the Monthly Summary of Imports and Exports and other statistical information prepared in the Bureau of Statistics for publication by the Department of Commerce and Labor, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 copies for the use of the Department of Commerce and Labor.

That the joint resolution approved December 18, 1895, restricting the number of copies of the Monthly Summary to 3,500, shall be, and hereby is, rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HALE. I object to its consideration now. I want to examine it, because I do not think the distribution proposed is what it should be. I think more copies should be given to Congress and less to the Department; but I am not prepared just now to offer the amendment, and therefore I object, so that it will go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will go to the Calendar.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR OF EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. LAND IN WASHINGTON CITY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. It is a very brief bill, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to confirm title to lots 3, 4, and 5 in square No. 979 in Washington, in the District of Columbia."

LIFE-SAVING STATION IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. ALGER. I report back from the Committee on Commerce, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 12044) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at or near Eagle Harbor, Keweenaw Point, Michigan, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENNESSEE RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back with amendments the bill (H. R. 15014) to enable the Secretary of War to permit the erection of a lock and dam in aid of navigation in the Tennessee River near Chattanooga, Tenn., and for other purposes. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. BATE. The Senator from Minnesota asks for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HALE. This is a long bill. As it has been read, I will not object, but I must object hereafter, on account of the condition of the appropriation bills, to anything being taken up.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 5, line 14, after the word "act," to insert:

, and in case of failure to comply with the requirements of said bond the said contracting party shall forfeit to the United States the full amount thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, on page 6, line 24, to strike out the word "damage" and insert "compensation;" in the same line, after the word "value," to insert "exclusive of the franchise hereby conferred;" on page 7, line 1, after the word "act," to insert: "such value to be determined by mutual agreement between the Secretary of War and the owners of said property, and in case they can not agree, then by proceedings instituted in the United States circuit court for the condemnation of said property, such proceedings to conform as nearly as may be to the laws of the State of Tennessee, in respect of condemning lands for the right of way for railroad purposes;" and on page 7, line 3, after the word "contract," to strike out "and" and insert "or;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That the right is expressly reserved in the United States to revoke by act of Congress the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred by this act; but in the event of such revocation the United States shall pay to the municipality, corporation, company, firm, or persons who may erect said lock and dam under the provisions of this act, as full compensation, the reasonable value, exclusive of the franchise hereby conferred, of all properties erected and lands purchased by them necessary for the enjoyment of the benefits conferred upon them by the provisions of this act, such value to be determined by mutual agreement between the Secretary of War and the owners of said properties, and in case they can not agree, then by proceedings instituted in the United States circuit court for the condemnation of said property, such proceedings to conform as nearly as may be to the laws of the State of Tennessee in respect of condemning land for the right of way for railroad purposes: Provided, That to insure compliance with the terms of the contract or of this act, or to protect the interests of navigation, the Secretary of War shall have power at any time, before or after the completion of the work, to order a suspension of all privileges granted by this act: And provided further, That compliance with such order of suspension may be enforced by the injunction of the circuit court of the United States exercising jurisdiction in the district in which the work is situated, and proper proceedings to this end shall be instituted by the Attorney-General upon request of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REVISION OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions to report the following resolution, and I ask for its present consideration. I submit with it a written report.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the pension laws of the United States have not since the origin of the pension system been revised; and

Whereas, owing to the fact of different wars and different acts of Congress which have been passed relative thereto, some of which clearly apply to one condition and others to other conditions, a confusion has arisen with respect to their interpretation; and

Whereas some of these acts are overlapping, some of them practically repealed, and some in part obsolete by implication; and

Whereas the interpretation of different Assistant Attorneys-General and Pension Commissioners has brought about a further conflict as to the legal effect of certain acts, and has made doubtful the full legal right of pension claimants; and

Whereas by reason of these conditions the pension laws of the United States are in a condition of uncertainty and should be revised and codified; and

Whereas the said laws are not in all respects adequate to meet the present conditions of the survivors of our wars:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to have prepared by officials of the Pension Bureau and to report to the Senate at its next meeting in December, 1904, a proposed revision of the pension laws of the United States, applicable to all of the military service of the United States, the same to contain full notes of statutes and decisions; and that there be arranged in separate titles so much of the law as is still applicable and has reference specially to each particular war for which a pension law has been passed.

That there be drafted in such code, separate and distinct from the substantive law relative to pensions, rule of procedure for pension claims, providing therein such blank forms as will enable a pension claimant to conduct his own case.

Mr. GORMAN. It is utterly impossible from the hurried reading to get the whole purport of the resolution. Let it go over until Monday and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule and be printed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15054) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Secretary to resume the reading of the bill at section 5 and read the bill to its conclusion.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to one of the amendments on page 90.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments in italics on page 90 have been agreed to, and the amendment of the Senator will not be in order until the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. QUARLES. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed at section 5, on page 22, and continued to its conclusion.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the provisions covering the sections of the bill which have just been read by the Secretary are most important, and deal with the whole subject of extending the statutes relating to the immigration of Chinese persons into this country. Several amendments have already been offered, and notice has been given of other amendments that will bring the whole subject-matter before the Senate.

I wish to say for the Committee on Appropriations that these provisions were incorporated in the bill in the House of Representatives at the very end of the discussion, and only came to the Committee on Appropriations immediately afterwards. In the present condition of public business the Committee on Appropriations had no opportunity to consider the subject-matter fully or even partially.

Besides that, as the bill came from the House of Representatives, whatever may be the view of members of the committee, and whatever might have been the view of the committee after thorough examination, it was thought that it was better to report, without any change, the provisions of the House bill on this subject-matter to the Senate for its consideration.

There has been—and it was so understood in the committee—nothing done that binds any member of the committee in reporting to the Senate the whole project as inserted by the House of Representatives, which commits any member of the committee to the adoption of the whole or any part of it. For one I should certainly be in favor of some of the amendments which have been suggested and will be offered here.

I make this statement in order that the Senate may understand the position of the Committee on Appropriations upon the matter; that it was obliged to do what it did in reporting the whole subject to the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to offer an amendment on page 91, line 14, to strike out the words "except as hereinafter specifically provided," and then I desire to move to strike out sections——

Mr. SPOONER. What section?

Mr. CULLOM. Section 6 and the following sections of the bill under consideration. The amendment I have just stated was to section 5.

Mr. HALE. Senators in referring to these different sections should refer to the number given after the one stricken out. The first of the sections now under consideration is section 5, which was formerly numbered 3.

Mr. CULLOM. In section 5, on page 91, line 14, after the word "condition," I move to strike out "except as hereinafter specifically provided." Then I desire to move that all of sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13 be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do I understand that the amendment the Senator from Illinois proposes is in section 6?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No; in section 5.

Mr. CULLOM. In section 5 of this bill, which is the first section relating to the subject of Chinese exclusion.

Mr. MITCHELL. But the Senator's amendment as printed appears to be an amendment to section 6.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is to strike out.

Mr. CULLOM. That is to strike out several sections. My amendment to strike out sections begins with section 6.

Mr. MITCHELL. Leaving in section 5.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; with the amendment I have suggested, striking out, on page 91, line 14, the words "except as hereinafter specifically provided."

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois why he proposes to strike out section 6?

Mr. CULLOM. Because there is no necessity for it if we want to retain the law specifically as it is now, in view of the doubt as to how the courts might decide the matter.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will suggest another reason.

Mr. CULLOM. I could also give others, if I thought it necessary.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We do not want to legislate that Chinese shall not go into the canal zone.

Mr. TELLER. Shall not go where?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Into the canal zone; which that provision prevents.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am in entire accord with the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] that it would be the poorest possible policy, and utterly indefensible, for the United States to fetter its hands at all as to the labor which shall be employed in the construction of the Panama Canal; and if this section can possibly be construed as affecting that subject, it ought to be stricken out, or it ought to be amended so as to render it impossible that it should be so construed.

I should like, if the Senator from Connecticut pleases, that he would indicate the language in section 6 which would be subject to that construction. I confess I have not examined it carefully.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Section 6 provides:

That the said laws so reenacted, extended, and continued shall be so construed as to permit the entrance into or residence within the United States, and any territory subject to its jurisdiction, of those persons of Chinese descent who are citizens of the United States by reason of birth and those who are specifically granted by law such privilege, and no others.

The 10-mile limit on the Isthmus of Panama is within the jurisdiction of the United States. There can not be any question about that. The language of section 6 would, therefore, exclude from that zone all persons except those who are specifically granted by law the privilege of coming into the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think that would be remedied by striking out the words "and no others?"

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is the only thing that there is in the section—"and no others."

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know whether it is true or not, but these amendments, as I have understood, were drawn by the Attorney-General in the Department of Justice to cover——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should be very sorry to believe that this was the handiwork of the Attorney-General.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know. I have been told that it had his approval. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] probably knows. I do not undertake to say. The provisions were drawn to meet some difficulties that have arisen because of the denunciation of the treaty by China. Section 6, as I read it, is permissive. If the words "and no others" were excluded, as one phase of it, if there is any occasion for the provision at all—and I assume there was or it would not have been drafted—it ought to commend itself, I think, to the favorable consideration of the Senator from Connecticut or anyone else.

SEC. 6. That the said laws so reenacted, extended, and continued shall be so construed as to permit the entrance into or residence within the United States, and any territory subject to its jurisdiction, of those persons of Chinese descent who are citizens of the United States by reason of birth.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator will observe, however, that section 9 gives to an immigrant inspector the "right to decide questions of fact upon which rests a claim of citizenship set up by any person of Chinese descent."

Mr. SPOONER. That is another proposition.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him a moment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SPOONER. I yield.

Mr. FORAKER. I think there is great force in the point made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] a moment ago, to the effect that the only thing in section 6 of any importance is the language at the end, "and no others." Anyone who is a citizen of the United States by birth, although he may be of Chinese descent, has a right to enter without any enactment here or in any other place to that effect. So, too, has anybody a right to enter who is specifically authorized by law to enter. So what is the necessity for section 6 at all?

Mr. MITCHELL. Not a particle.

Mr. FORAKER. Unless it is to put in the words "and noothers."

Mr. SPOONER. It is a very strange proposition that anyone would industriously draw such a provision for the purpose of including the words "and no others."

Mr. FORAKER. What else is there in the section but that?

Mr. SPOONER. Nothing, unless the law as it exists has been found to operate to exclude persons of Chinese descent born in the United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I can not believe, Mr. President, that the Attorney-General himself ever drew that section or some of the other sections that there are in this bill. Somebody in his office or in the office of the Immigration Commissioner may have drawn it, and the Attorney-General may have given it his approval without very much examination, but I can not believe that the Attorney-General drew it.

Mr. SPOONER. It is very certain that we ought not to prohibit Chinamen from going to work on the canal.

Mr. CULLOM. This little discussion, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly; but I want to say a few words more.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not know the Senator had the floor. I will wait until he has concluded.

Mr. SPOONER. I yielded to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], and now I yield to both Senators.

Mr. FORAKER. I am very thankful to get the floor under any circumstances. There is not very much I wanted to say, but it seems to me it goes to the pith of this whole matter.

Section 6 is a provision that citizens of the United States may be admitted to the United States or to any Territory under the jurisdiction of the United States. That is one proposition. The other proposition is that those who are by law specifically authorized to enter the United States or any place under the jurisdiction of the United States may be allowed to enter. What is the use of putting that in any statute? Therefore I can see no propriety, let alone necessity, for the section, unless it is to be connected with the clause "and no others." That is all there is to it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, what I desired to say, if the Senator from Colorado will excuse me a moment, is evidenced as I think by this little discussion.

Mr. TELLER. I have not yet got the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. This portion of the bill, according to the statement of the chairman of the committee, who brought the general bill into the Senate, has not been considered by anybody. The Senate Committee on Appropriations concluded to bring it in here, let the Senate take charge of it, and do what it pleased with this portion.

I submit whether it is not wiser and in the interest of good legislation that all the portion of the bill that was brought in on the subject of Chinese immigration be stricken out, except that part which makes it surer that the law will stand in harmony with the treaty of 1894, if it has not been annulled; so that when the time comes and another session convenes, we shall have an opportunity, through committees, to take up the whole subject and report such legislation as ought to be enacted.

Mr. CLAY. If the Senator's amendment prevails, as I understand, it will merely reenact the present law. Is that correct?

Mr. CULLOM. No; it simply makes it certain that the present law means that Chinese laborers shall be kept out. That is all.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not quite agree with the Senator from Illinois who has just taken his seat, that the committee did not do anything about this matter. I think the committee did. They considered it.

Mr. CULLOM. I was only taking the statement of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. I am free to say that I have not found anybody who knew exactly what the provisions of the bill meant. We did go over it; but, so far as I know, at least we were uncertain as to exactly what it did mean.

Mr. President, this whole trouble can be settled by simply reenacting the act of two years ago—the act of April 29, 1902. To do that is very simple, and I have offered an amendment that does that, or at least I gave notice that I would offer an amendment to that effect. While it is very uncertain in my mind as a question of law whether it is necessary to have such an enactment, I think it is very wise and very prudent that we should have.

Mr. SPOONER. Reenacting the act of 1902 would simply continue whatever doubt exists now under that act, would it not?

Mr. TELLER. It would if we enacted it exactly as it was, but I propose to change it by striking out a few words with reference to treaties. That was the purport of amendment which I gave notice I would offer.

Mr. President, this is a pretty important question. In order that Senators should have a little time for examining it, I think I shall avail myself of the privilege of making some remarks on this bill, but in an entirely different direction. I stated some days ago that I desired to discuss the land question, and I wish to discuss it for an hour or so, if I can have an opportunity to do so without appearing to interfere with the passage of the appropriation bill.

Mr. President, we have had two political speeches on appropriation bills within a few days, one yesterday and one a few days ago. I do not intend to make a political speech. I am going to speak about the interest of the community in which I live particularly.——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I want to appeal to the Senator—of course it is for him to decide—that in the present condition of public business it is very important that the pending bill should be finished to-day. I hope the Senator will see his way clear, as he wishes to speak upon a subject-matter entirely foreign to the bill, to wait until the bill is disposed of. Of course the Senator must settle that for himself.

Mr. TELLER. It is pretty difficult for me to decline to accede to the request of the Senator who has the bill in charge, but I am met with another difficulty. There is another appropriation bill to follow this one. I do not think, under the circumstances, if it is not agreeable to the Senator who has the bill in charge, that I ought to go on; but I wish to say now that when this bill is through and the next appropriation bill that follows it is up, if there is not another appropriation bill to follow that immediately, I am going to take the floor and discuss the land question, which has been discussed here for some time. I am not going to ask the Senate for the privilege of doing so or anything of that kind, because I assert that I have a right to do that on any bill which comes before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TELLER. But I wish to give notice that I will take that liberty and exercise that Senatorial right of speaking, but not on either of the appropriation bills. But when they are through, no matter what the bill is that comes up, even if it should happen to be a pension bill, I will do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to say a few words on the amendment. I do not know in detail what the Senator's amendment is. It was offered this morning and not printed. I do not know whether it is an exact reproduction of the act of 1902. We can reenact the act of 1902 by striking out the words——

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask the Senator if he is referring to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Is not that in print?

Mr. TELLER. Is it in print?

Mr. LODGE It is in print, I think.

Mr. TELLER. Very well. Then I will avail myself of an examination of the printed copy.

Mr. LODGE. It is in print.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would send it to me. I have not one on my table.

Mr. CULLOM. What is it the Senator wants?

Mr. LODGE. Your amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I want to reenact an act of 1902. I think that is the safest thing to do.

I find in the provision that comes from the House several things I do not understand, and I do not know what the effect of them would be. While, of course, it comes here with the authority of the House Committee on Appropriations, it does not come from the committee which really ought to have charge of this question, even in the House. This is a question for the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that, as I understand, the Committee on Appropriations in the House did very much as the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate did. This amendment, I understand, divided into a number of sections, was introduced from the Committee on Foreign Affairs to the House and was accepted by the Committee on Appropriations there.

Mr. TELLER. I was not aware of that.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator excuse me one moment more?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say one word as respects the attitude of this bill here.

The Senator from Colorado is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and he understands, as we all do, that the Committee on Appropriations did not attempt to deal with the details of the House provision.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. That is what I said.

Mr. ALLISON. For one, I was not sufficiently familiar with the legislation to know without a very careful examination what the several sections meant, and I think it would require a great deal of study to understand them. I merely wish to say to the Senate now that the Committee on Appropriations, which usually endeavors to examine that which it presents to the Senate, under the circumstances has left that question to the Senators who are more familiar with the legislation on the subject in the past.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Senator from Colorado proceeds, will he allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], whether he intends, provided his amendment shall be adopted, to follow it with any other amendment to any other part of the House provision?

Mr. CULLOM. I have not expected to do so. My motion, and I propose to stand by it, is to adopt section 5 with a slight amendment, striking out four or five words which refer to the sections after that.

Mr. MITCHELL. Section 5 of the act of 1888?

Mr. CULLOM. No; of this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Section 5 of this bill?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes. The motion is not to strike out section 5, but to strike out four or five words in it which refer to the sections that follow, and which sections I propose to strike out.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is to say—I want to understand this—it is proposed to strike out sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, and 14.

Mr. CULLOM. Bodily.

Mr. MITCHELL. Bodily. You want to strike out those sections of the act of 1888?

Mr. CULLOM. No; I want to strike out the sections which follow section 5 of the bill you have in your hand.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand it now.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this bill as it came to us from the House reads as follows:

That section 1 of the act of Congress approved April 29, 1902, entitled "An act to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent," is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"All laws in force on the 29th day of April, 1902, regulating, suspending, or prohibiting the coming of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent into the United States, and the residence of such persons therein, including sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, and 14 of the act entitled 'An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States,' approved September 13, 1888, be, and the same are hereby, reenacted, extended, and continued, without modification, limitation, or condition"—

Now, here come the words that are important—

"except as hereinafter specifically provided."

I presume that is what the Senator——

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Illinois proposes to strike that out.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose so. I do not see him in his seat.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The reason for it is that those words refer to the subsequent sections.

Mr. TELLER. In this bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In this bill.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Illinois proposes to strike that out.

Mr. TELLER. The bill as it came from the House continues:

"And said laws shall also apply to the island territory under the jurisdiction of the United States, and prohibit the immigration of Chinese laborers, not citizens of the United States, from such island territory to the mainland territory of the United States, whether in such island territory at the time of cession or not, and from one portion of the island territory of the United States to another portion of said island territory: Provided, however, That said laws shall not apply to the transit of Chinese laborers from one island to another island of the same group; and any islands within the jurisdiction of any State or the District of Alaska shall be considered a part of the mainland under this section."

It strikes me that the sixth section here, which is proposed to be stricken out, does not mean anything at all. I am told that it must mean something, because the Attorney-General is supposed to have drafted it. If it came from the Attorney-General's Office, it probably came from some $1,200 clerk, who had been directed to prepare it.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it is perfectly obvious that it is not from the Attorney-General.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, I will agree to that. I do not believe any Attorney-General would have drafted that provision.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if it will not disturb the Senator, I would like to read from the RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. What record?

Mr. GALLINGER. From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. From the House proceedings?

Mr. GALLINGER. From the House proceedings, if you please.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is as follows:

I gladly bear testimony to the earnest and intelligent work of the gentleman whom he has placed at the head of the Bureau of Immigration—Mr. Sargent—and the ability and fidelity of that gentleman's principal legal adviser, Mr. Campbell. In such hands the exclusion policy is secure, and I am informed that the amendment comes directly from these friends of that policy.

So it would seem that it did not come from the office of the Attorney-General.

Mr. TELLER. It does not make any difference where it comes from; it is absurd, and I do not think it would be very creditable to us to put it into a statute. We do not know what it means. I will not make any comment on that, because it seems to me it must be stricken out under any condition. I do not believe that any of these provisions add particularly to the value of the existing law—the law existing to-day, and which will exist until the treaty expires on the 7th day of December.

I do not care to go into a debate on this question. My colleague [Mr. PATTERSON], who went into it extensively, was very much impressed with the certainty that if before the 7th day of December some legislation is not enacted the country would be open to Chinese immigration. I can not give my full assent to that view. I am inclined to think that if I had to determine the question I would hold otherwise; but I agree that there is enough in it, and that it would be such a great disaster to the American people if it should be held by the proper tribunal to determine the question that it did open the door to the Chinese, that in order to make sure we ought to enact some kind of legislation, either that proposed by the House or something that we ourselves may propose.

I do not suppose there are many sections of the country which have very much interest in this question. We went through it way back in 1888 and in subsequent years. The whole people, at least the whole Pacific country—and by that I include my own section, for while part of it is on the Atlantic part is on the Pacific in the sense that the waters run into the Pacific—is very much interested in this question. I think it is one of those things which you can not afford to delay or neglect. It is said that we ought not go far enough to prevent Chinamen from going to Panama. I am perfectly indifferent about that. Whether you exclude them from Panama or whether you admit them will not interfere with American labor of any kind. I have said, and I repeat it, that experience has demonstrated that a Chinaman can not do that work in Panama, and you will not get a considerable number of Chinamen to attempt it. But if it is desirable to try them, I have no objection. However, I do want to be very sure that no condition arises by which Chinamen will flood our western coast and come into competition with our western labor.

There are some sections of this bill which, if they could be properly administered, I do not know but that it would be well to enact, or something in line with them. But I think it is exceedingly dangerous in the last hours of an expiring session to attempt to meddle with the existing law, which we have discussed here for twenty years and which has finally been crystallized into shape where it is acceptable, practically, to everybody; that is, as acceptable as it ever will be.

Of course there is considerable sentiment in some sections of the country in favor of the employment of Chinese labor. I am speaking now of our western country. I believe there is considerable such sentiment in some regions where orchards prevail and where intense farming is conducted, to which these people are especially adapted; but the great mass of the American people and all of the Western States are exceedingly hostile to the admission of Chinese labor. Senators from those States will, I believe, bear me out when I say that nothing could be more disastrous to the American people than to have a great inrush of Chinamen.

In saying this I do not mean to say anything discreditable to the Chinaman. The truth is that the Chinaman is the greatest labor competitor for the reason that he can live upon wages on which an American laborer would starve, and because most of the Chinese who come here do so without the responsibility of a family, and they live in a way in which no American laborer would live, whether he had a family to support or not. The Chinese may add something to the wealth of the country, because they perform labor, but if they personally accumulate anything it goes abroad. It is not invested in this country and does not add to the permanent wealth of the country.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator that not only will they work for less, but they will work fifteen hours a day.

Mr. TELLER. As the Senator from Georgia says, they will work fifteen hours a day. They are good laborers, and while they do not do as much in an hour as an American laborer will, when you take into consideration the fact that they work for so much less and that they will work just as long as the foreman says they must work, without any additional compensation, it is obvious that they become very severe competitors. For that reason I do not wish to leave in this bill sections about which I have doubt, although one of the representatives of the labor interests of the country called on me this morning and assured me that this is what the labor people want. However, I do not feel under any obligations, moral or otherwise, to yield my judgment to that of any organization of that kind.

I am opposed to the admission of Chinamen into the United States, except in the limited way we have admitted them, and I believe the best interests of the country were promoted when we passed the rigid exclusion acts heretofore. I want to maintain them. I do not know that there is any proper demand for any severer laws than those which have been enacted.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut rose.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator from Connecticut desire to interrupt me?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am simply waiting. I thought the Senator was about through.

Mr. TELLER. I will sit down and give the Senator a chance.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I should like, as concisely as I can, to speak of this proposed legislation. It deals with a very delicate, complicated, and difficult matter.

I will commence by saying that China wants to be a friend to the United States and to have the United States a friend of China; that that condition, existing now for years, has been strengthened by our course during the last Chinese troubles. China regarded the United States, during all those troubles and the negotiation which followed them, as being especially the friend of China. The United States wants the trade of China. It is a very important matter. Other countries want the trade of China, and would be glad to make China feel that the United States is not its friend.

Now, this condition has arisen: China has given notice that she desires that the treaty of 1894 shall terminate at the end of the first ten-year period, which will be December 7 of this year. It is not because she wants to have her laborers come into the United States. She expressed in the treaty of 1894 her desire to keep her laborers out of the United States. But China feels aggrieved with the United States because under that treaty the United States has by law and by construction held that everybody is a laborer except the persons specifically mentioned in the treaty of 1894. They were Chinese officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for pleasure or curiosity.

The United States claims that everybody is a laborer except the persons named in the treaty of 1880, I think, and in the law of 1888; and China says that the United States is therefore trying, under the claim that it will not admit laborers, to exclude what she calls her higher classes—scholars.

For instance, Wu Ting Fang, if he ceased to be an official under the Chinese Government, could not come to this country, because under the rulings he would be classed as a laborer. He could not come and settle here in Washington. He could not accept the invitation of the universities to deliver lectures throughout the country. A man worth $10,000,000 in China, retired, and who desires to take up his residence in the United States rather than remain there, would be classed as a laborer. That is what China objects to. She does not want her laborers to come into the United States. She has so declared.

China has given notice that she desires to terminate this treaty next December, not because she wishes to get her laborers into the United States, but because she desires to make a new treaty which will define more specifically the word "laborers," and thus accord to those whom she calls her "higher classes" the privilege of coming into the United States. That negotiation is in progress, and therefore it becomes a very serious question whether we ought now by legislation to close the door of that negotiation. We can not, perhaps, fully understand China or her feeling in this respect; and yet I think we may to some extent. It is, therefore, as I say, a delicate matter.

Now, like the Senator from Colorado, I have no desire to open the doors for the admission of Chinese labor into the United States—real laborers. I am willing to go a good way to be sure we keep out real laborers, but I do not think we ought to go so far as to keep out persons who by no construction of language or law or custom could be classed as laborers.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator, if it does not interfere with his statement, in which I am very much interested, has it practically operated in cases to keep out such persons?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly. I do not wish to speak of the drastic and uncivil way, and I will not apply a harsher word to it, in which this law is administered by the immigrant inspectors. I do not wish to go into that.

In 1902 the House passed a long bill on this subject proposing to put into law all the Treasury regulations and very drastic provisions with regard to the way the law should be administered. It came to the Senate and was discussed for days and weeks and months, and the Senate substituted for it practically what became the law of 1902. It went into conference. We had a conference, I think, lasting at least a week, as the Senator from Georgia will remember. The result of it was that we agreed upon the law of 1902, which continued all laws then in force, reenacted them, continued them, and, in order that there might be no mistake, specified certain sections in the law of 1888, although it extended all laws. There was a provision that the laws were "reenacted, extended, and continued, so far as the same are not inconsistent with treaty obligations."

The claim was made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], who addressed the Senate, that if the treaty of 1894 should terminate next December the treaty of 1880 would be revived, and, therefore, the words "not inconsistent with treaty obligations" would apply to the treaty of 1880, which only regulated, limited, and suspended the coming of Chinese laborers and did not absolutely prohibit it.

I do not think, Mr. President, that that contention is well founded. I think the law of 1902 would be in full force and effect after the treaty expired. I have examined the subject very carefully. I can not in my mind have any doubt about it, and I understand that is the opinion of the Attorney-General. But I do not wish any doubt to exist on the subject. If there is a doubt on it, I am perfectly willing that there should be legislation such as is contained in the fifth section, which will remove that doubt.

Therefore I support the fifth section, the only object of which is to remove any doubt that can exist as to whether the law of 1902 which we enacted will remain in force after the expiration of the treaty.

But as to the other legislation in this bill, Mr. President, I think we ought not to deal with it at the present session. First, it has never received the sanction by report of any committee of this body or of the House of Representatives. It was proposed as new legislation against the rules of the House upon an appropriation bill and carried through. It had not received by report at least the sanction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House. It had never been introduced as a bill in the Senate. It was not thought of by the Senator from Colorado. It was not thought of by the peculiar representative of the antiexclusion sentiment in the House. It came at a time when the session was about to close and when no sufficient consideration could be given to it.

I think these considerations of themselves, without even a reference to what is proposed to do, ought to be sufficient to exclude it from the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Is was never before the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It was never before the Immigration Committee. No bill has been introduced in the Senate; it has been before no committee in the Senate, and there has been no opportunity for a committee to consider it. I venture to say that when it came to the Senate there were not three Senators who had any idea of what it meant. I am somewhat familiar with this matter, and I confess that I did not know what it meant. I do not know entirely now, but I will point out very briefly some things that I think it means.

With reference to the sixth section, which is proposed to be stricken out, I can see no reason for its enactment except that it will unquestionably exclude Chinese laborers from the canal zone. I take it, therefore, that that was the object of it.

The seventh section defines who a Chinese person or person of Chinese descent shall be. Without reading it, it is in effect that if a person comes here from China asking to be admitted, with the certificate of the consul that he is not a laborer, he is to be excluded if he is a Chinese person or a person of Chinese descent, and that is to be determined by the rule as to whether he had a Mongolian ancestor one hundred and four years ago who was a subject of a Chinese Emperor, and if an inspector says that he believes such is the case, then the person is excluded unless he can then and there prove to the contrary. That is what section 7 is.

Whom does it exclude? A good many Japanese, all Koreans, a very large proportion of Filipinos, for they had Mongolian ancestors who were subjects of the Emperor of China one hundred years ago. So if they have one particle of Chinese blood in their veins, coming down from an ancestor of a hundred years ago, they are to be excluded on the statement of the inspector that he believes they had such an ancestor, unless right then and there they can prove the contrary.

I submit, Mr. President, we ought not hastily to pass legislation of that sort.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if, from his familiarity with such legislation, he knows of any other instance in which an act of Congress so directly tempts an inspector of the Government to commit perjury?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will say that some of our immigration laws give very great powers to inspectors to determine such questions——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is necessarily so.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think that is necessarily so; but I do not think they have ever gone as far as this particular instance.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I quite understand the Senator from Connecticut on this peculiar provision about the Mongolian ancestor. I do not know what it means. I do not know what necessity there is for going back one hundred years.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is to draw tighter around the person who attempts to come from China into the United States, though he may not be a laborer, the cords which bind him. If he had a Mongolian ancestor one hundred years ago and an inspector says he believes that is the fact, it is conclusive evidence that he is a person of Chinese descent. That would take in a great many Japanese——

Mr. TELLER. Of course the burden of proof is on him to show that he is not of Chinese descent.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes; and he can not do it, as a matter of course.

Now we come to the next section.

SEC. 8. That wherever the word "laborers" is used in the laws relating to the exclusion or expulsion of Chinese it shall be construed to include all persons of Chinese descent not permitted by law to enter or remain within the United States.

And they are Chinese officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for pleasure or curiosity. It excludes everybody else, and I may say that such rules and regulations have been made with regard to officials, teachers, students, merchants, and travelers for pleasure or curiosity that they can scarcely come.

Then it provides, in order that there shall be no doubt about it, that a part of the act of 1893 shall be repealed. You remember that that act was passed after the act of 1892, about which we had a long debate, and was intended to make the law more specific. That provision was as follows:

The words "laborer" or "laborers," wherever used in this act or in the act to which this is an amendment, shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled manual laborers, including Chinese employed in mining, fishing, huckstering, peddling, laundrymen, or those engaged in taking, drying, or otherwise preserving shell or other fish for home consumption or exportation.

That law construed it to mean both skilled and unskilled manual laborers. Now they wish to repeal that so far as it defines laborers and to say that every person is a laborer unless he comes under the description of officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for pleasure or curiosity.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that there is no necessity for that. The law as it exists says that laborers, skilled and unskilled, persons engaged in mining, fishing, huckstering, peddling, laundrymen, or those engaged in taking, drying, or otherwise preserving shell or other fish, for home consumption or exportation, shall be considered laborers. It seems to me that we have gone as far as there is any necessity for going in that respect.

Now, take section 9. It appears to me that that is almost unconstitutional. It says that if a person trying to come into this country from China sets up a claim of citizenship—that is, of having been born in the United States—that may be determined by an inspector. I supposed that a person claiming to be a citizen of the United States had a right to go to the courts of the United States to determine the question whether he was a citizen or not. I think he has that right under the Constitution. I think this deprives him of a constitutional right in that it makes the decision of that question, so far as the matter of fact is concerned, to rest with an inspector appointed to administer this law.

Section 10 there is no necessity for. It provides that the act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States shall apply to alien Chinese persons permitted by the Chinese-exclusion laws to enter or remain in the United States as it does to other aliens. That is practiced all the while. If they admit persons of Chinese descent, they can be excluded to-day under the immigration laws. If they are diseased, or paupers, or criminals, or come within the class which are to be excluded, they are excluded. They are excluded for the disease of the eyes, trachoma, I think it is called, and for any contagious disease. So there is no necessity for that legislation.

Now, section 11, it seems to me, is entirely an unfair section. It gives a right of appeal to the United States from the decision of any commissioner or court where the decision is adverse to the United States—that is, where it admits the person coming—and gives a further appeal to the circuit court of appeals and to the Supreme Court of the United States in behalf of the Government; but it only gives the applicant or the person claiming the right to enter a right of appeal to the district court, except that if the district court decides against the applicant he may apply to the Supreme Court of the United States for a certiorari—that is, to have the case certified to the Supreme Court of the United States.

It makes a distinction in the right of appeal between the Government and the person seeking to enter the United States. That is not fair under our laws or any other laws. If an appeal is to be granted, it ought to be an appeal where each party shall have the same right of appeal. It is well known that the Supreme Court very seldom grants a writ of certiorari. It is practically denying to the person seeking to enter the right to get his case before the Supreme Court of the United States when the United States has that right without limitation.

The twelfth section is unnecessary because as a matter of practice the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is doing the precise things now which it is said he shall have the right to do by this section. He is passing upon these questions; he is making the rules and regulations; he is hearing appeals and deciding cases the same as the Secretary of the Treasury formerly did, because the whole matter was transferred from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and it is understood, and has been agreed to and is acted upon, that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has after that transfer, by the act creating the Department, all the rights and authority which the Secretary of the Treasury had before the passage of that act.

Section 13, which is the last section, seems to me to be very objectionable in this—that it shows that the desire to keep out Chinese laborers is not so real a desire after all; because if one Chinese laborer turns informer and testifies against one who is trying to get in, the informer may be permitted to remain in the United States. It is said they have given evidence in smuggling cases; but the real point of it is to offer an inducement to a Chinaman who might be expelled from this country to get a right to remain here by testifying against another Chinaman who wants to get in. I do not think we ought to do that.

I have run hastily over this matter, Mr. President, not for the purpose of arguing it so much as to show that it is a matter we ought not to attempt to deal with at this time. There is no necessity for it. The pretense that there is a necessity for making it certain that the act of 1892 will continue in force after the expiration of the treaty is made a pretext for entering into this legislation, which is so difficult, so delicate, and so doubtful in its propriety.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this is a question that directly affects all of the Western States, and particularly the State that I in part represent here. I can see an element of danger to our country from the importation of Chinese into the canal zone in the nature of an overflow. If they come within the jurisdiction of the United States with its consent, may they not then move to any other part of the jurisdiction? It seems to me that in order to guard against that an amendment something like one I have drawn should be adopted to section 6. I will read what I propose to offer ultimately:

Provided, That where Chinese who are within the class excluded by this act shall be admitted to the Panama Canal zone as laborers or otherwise during the construction of said canal, such admission shall not entitle such Chinese to remain within said canal zone or to claim any right to reside within any country under the jurisdiction of the United States after the completion of the said canal or his employment thereon, but all Chinese who shall be so admitted to said canal zone shall be admitted only under the express understanding and agreement that such admission shall not be a waiver on the part of the United States to exclude or deport at any time all Chinese within the meaning of this bill irrespective of the conditions or circumstances under which said Chinese entered said canal zone; and the fact that said Chinese have been permitted to enter the canal zone and are residing therein shall not be recognized as a residence within the United States; and after the completion of the said canal the provisions of the general law as to the exclusion of Chinese from the United States shall apply to the canal zone.

I apprehend, Mr. President, that it will be necessary to draw laborers from all parts of world in the performance of that work. Some 40,000 or 50,000 men will be employed, and in selecting them the conditions do not exist in regard to that work that exist as to work in a colder climate. It is doubtless true that the contractors, or those having charge of the work, will have to draw from every portion of the world in order to secure laborers who can endure that climate. It is equally probable that they will draw largely from southern China, from those portions where the climate is somewhat similar to that of Panama. If they should bring into that zone 10,000 or 20,000 or 30,000 Chinamen to work upon the canal, they would have been brought into the United States with its consent, and they would reside within the canal zone by the consent of the United States.

Now, the question as to what would be done with those Chinamen after the work of the canal is completed is a serious question, and one that should be left open.

Within a few months the contract will be let, and those who are called upon to make estimates for the performance of this work should have some declaration of policy on the part of Congress as to whether their right to bring Chinamen into the zone is to be recognized. Under the law, in the absence of this amendment, I do not believe that they could bring Chinamen within that zone because the term is general. It says in effect, every country under the jurisdiction of the United States. Now, we have jurisdiction over the canal zone, and they are excluded from every country except as by the provisions of the bill.

If the contractors are not going to be able to draw upon China for labor they ought to know it, because it will make a very material difference; it will circumscribe the field from which they may draw their labor. My amendment recognizes the right to employ Chinamen for that purpose, and it provides that they shall not obtain an excuse for remaining in the country by reason of having been brought in to work upon the canal.

If they may remain there that might be a little China after the canal was completed. It might be that 10,000 or 20,000 or more of the Chinamen would find that climate to their liking and would practically take possession of that country. That is not the intention, neither would it be for the best interests of the country that it should occur. Or it may be that it would raise the question that having been permitted to come within the jurisdiction of the United States they might transfer their residence from the canal zone to some other part of it, and, as has occurred heretofore, they would come to the Pacific coast. That is where the Chinamen do most congregate. We desire that we shall be protected against the possibility of this invasion of the Chinese. We desire that we shall be protected against the possibility of building up a little China within the canal zone. We desire to retain in the Government the right to send these people out of the country or control them just the same as though they had not come in by the consent of the Government.

I have rather lost track of the status of the amendments now pending. I ask whether an amendment to section 6 is now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is. The amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is to strike out section 6, so that the Senator's amendment to section 6 would be in order before the question is taken on striking out.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is it an amendment to section 6?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is an amendment to section 6, the Chair understands. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 6 add the following:

Provided, That where Chinese who are within the class excluded by this act shall be admitted to the Panama canal zone as laborers or otherwise during the construction of said canal such admission shall not entitle such Chinese to remain within said canal zone or to claim any right to reside within any country under the jurisdiction of the United States after the completion of the said canal or his employment thereon, but all Chinese who shall be so admitted to said canal zone shall be admitted only under the express understanding and agreement that such admission shall not be a waiver on the part of the United States to exclude or deport at any time all Chinese within the meaning of this bill, irrespective of the conditions or circumstances under which said Chinese entered said canal zone; and the fact that said Chinese have been permitted to enter the canal zone and are residing therein shall not be recognized as a residence within the United States; and after the completion of the said canal the provisions of the general law as to the expulsion of Chinese from the United States shall apply to the canal zone.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Idaho, as he has offered his amendment to section 6, that if his amendment should be adopted and then the amendment of the Senator from Illinois should prevail, it would kill the amendment of the Senator. Had he not better offer his amendment to some other section?

Mr. HEYBURN. It can be offered again should it meet with that fate, but it is not yet certain as to what disposition the Senate will make of the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I can not think that this amendment is necessary. The law now excludes Chinese laborers from the island territory of the United States and prohibits their immigration from such island territory to the mainland territory of the United States. They will get no right under the law to enter the United States, having gone into the country of Panama and worked in the canal zone, although that country, for the purposes of constructing and maintaining the canal, is within the jurisdiction of the United States. I can not think that there is any necessity for the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, we have gradually become acquainted with the Chinese and their character after many years of experience. I remember very well on the 2d day of July, 1870, an amendment was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Sumner, to a bill regulating naturalization, striking out the word "white," so that all persons of whatever color might become citizens of the United States. So little was known of the effect of such an amendment that I think as much as three-fourths of the Senate, and it may be four-fifths, were in favor of that amendment.

The then Senator from Oregon, Mr. Williams, and myself started in to protest. We kept up the debate on Saturday. Monday was the 4th, and the bill went over to Monday, when, by explaining the effect of naturalizing the Chinese, we gained converts—not a majority, but a very respectable minority. Finally, a compromise was effected extending the naturalization laws to the whites and persons of African descent, thus leaving out the Asiatics.

At that time there were probably 125,000 Chinese in the United States. If they had been allowed to be naturalized and to become voters, there probably never would have been any exclusion, but there would have been great trouble.

As time progressed it was ascertained that the Chinaman was a laborer with whom no white man could compete. He could work longer hours on less food, with less accommodation, and at less expense than a white man, and he was driving the whites from the Pacific coast. In San Francisco they monopolized almost every avocation of labor, and it was very demoralizing. They would have taken possession of the country everywhere, but public opinion crystallized against their coming to this country, and Chinese-exclusion laws have been passed since then, all or nearly all of which I helped to perfect, so as to exclude them.

For the last few years I have heard very little complaint about the execution of existing laws. They are reasonably effective in keeping the Chinese out. We do not want to be harsh; we do not want to legislate on the basis of race hatred. There is too much of that now. We simply want to protect our white citizens from competition with the Chinese and Chinese civilization. That is all we want to accomplish. We have trade relations with China, which we hope will continue. We want friendly relations with all the world, so far as is possible. We do not want to set up ourselves as barbarians by doing unnecessary things which are harsh.

Many propositions have been presented in both Houses of Congress and elsewhere which would be very cruel to the Chinese, but the public sentiment of the country is not in favor of such propositions.

The only evil to be corrected now, as I understand, arises out of the fact that China has given notice that she will abrogate our existing treaty with her. She has a right to do that. The suggestion has been made that if that is done, it will leave our existing laws on the subject of Chinese immigration in an uncertain state. I, myself, believe that existing laws would still be in force; but there ought not to be a doubt as to that, and we should correct the danger of any such evil. I understand that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] presented here some days ago and the amendment suggested by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] will accomplish that object.

If further legislation is necessary it ought to be enacted deliberately; it should not be rushed through on an appropriation bill in the expiring hours of the session. That is no way to deal with this great subject. If Chinamen are coming into the country, or are likely to come in, a bill should be introduced early in the session, be referred to a committee, be thoroughly examined by that committee, and reported to the Senate. We do not want to pass a bill that will exasperate China and seem to the world as though we were inconsistent. We do not want any such legislation as that. I think it is unfortunate that this proposition should have been made.

As to the doubt which has been raised by the suggestion that the treaty will be abrogated, all that is necessary now is to leave the matter stand as it will when the amendments to which I have referred are adopted, and then, as there has been no considerable complaint, the matter certainly can go over until the next session of Congress. If it is then found that there is need of legislation I think every member of the Senate will be in favor of it. We want to accomplish the purpose of excluding the Chinese in a decent, orderly way, so as to protect our people from their kind of civilization and their labor competition.

I hope that this matter will be disposed of by the adoption of only so much legislation as is necessary to remove any doubt. Let us go on and enact a law in a deliberate way. I do not like legislation of this kind. Do not let us come in like boys at the end of the session and do more than is necessary to remove the doubt that has arisen by the suggestion that the treaty will be abrogated.

I think everyone would like to look into the matter so as to understand perfectly what legislation is necessary to exclude the Chinese. I think on so important a subject every Senator would like to understand it and have an opportunity to deliberate upon the various questions with all the information which is necessary, in order to enable us intelligently to amend the law. It is impossible to do so at this time. We should now only do what is necessary to be done at the present time, and let any further legislation be taken up with deliberation at the next session.

The Chinese question is an important question. The Chinese must not be admitted to come here to compete with our white labor; and they are not going to be permitted to do so. That is agreeable to China. She does not want her laborers to come here. It will do no harm to have a friendly understanding with China. All we desire is that our laws shall be ample to accomplish the purpose of the exclusion of Chinese labor. It takes time to frame such laws. I repeat that I think we should only do what is necessary to be done in order to remove the doubt, and then consider the subject at the next session, when we shall have ample time to do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in reference to the bill under consideration, I want to put in the RECORD, first, a dispatch from Amory A. Lawrence, of Boston, president of the Boston Merchants' Association, protesting against this legislation; one from E. G. Preston, secretary of the Boston Chamber of Commerce; one from Hon. Charles S. Hamlin, late Assistant Secretary of the Treasury—those organizations and Mr. Hamlin protesting on the ground that this proposed legislation will be very detrimental to our future trade relations with China; and one from Judson Smith, secretary of the American Board of Missions, protesting in behalf of the missionary interests of the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegrams referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The telegrams referred to are as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., April 22, 1904.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Hope you can prevent any further legislation as to Chinese immigration except what is absolutely necessary to secure continuance of existing laws. All the sections of the amendment to general deficiency bill passed by House except first section constitute new legislation, completely changing present laws. This may seriously injure important New England interests engaged in trade and desirous of increasing trade with China.

BOSTON MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION,
AMORY A. LAWRENCE, President.

BOSTON, MASS., April 20, 1904.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER, Washington, D. C.:

Board directors Boston Chamber of Commerce regard amendment to general deficiency bill passed by House as legislation that may seriously injure important New England interests engaged in trade and desirous of increasing trade with China. First section of bill all right, but hope you can prevent any new legislation as to Chinese immigration except what is necessary to secure continuance of existing laws.

E. G. PRESTON, Secretary.

BOSTON, MASS., April 20, 1904.

Hon. JACOB GALLINGER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Trust you will be able to prevent passage Chinese amendment added to deficiency appropriation bill, or at least all except first section. It will seriously injure trade of New England and the South with China.

CHAS. S. HAMLIN.

BOSTON, MASS., April 22, 1904.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington:

It seems to us that all the sections of the amendment to general deficiency bill passed by House except first section constitute new legislation completely changing present laws. We hope you can prevent any further legislation as to Chinese immigration except what is absolutely necessary to secure continuance of existing laws.

JUDSON SMITH,
Secretary American Board of Missions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I had intended to submit some observations in regard to this matter, but the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has covered the ground so completely and there seems to be such unanimity of opinion in reference to this question that I do not feel warranted in detaining the Senate.

As a member of the Committee on Appropriations I did not give my assent to this part of the bill. I frankly admitted that I did not understand it, as did other members of the committee, but it was agreed that it should be reported to the Senate with the understanding that the members of the committee should reserve their judgment in regard to it. I believe the legislation to be utterly unnecessary. I believe that, if it is enacted, it will be very harmful to our interests as a people, and I sincerely trust that, with the exception of section 5 as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], the legislation may be stricken from the bill.

I was interested a few days ago, Mr. President, in noticing that Great Britain was entertaining some very distinguished citizens of the Empire of China, showing them every possible consideration and courtesy, apparently and manifestly with a view of getting their good opinion for the purpose of extending British trade into that great Empire. The United States needs that trade today and will need it in the future. I see no reason why we should put on our statute books a single line or a single word of unnecessary legislation that will lead to irritation between this country and China.

China to-day is weak and helpless, but China some day will be strong and aggressive; and I hope that the relations of this country with that Empire may be such that when that day comes we shall have the good will and the sympathy and not the hatred of that great people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] has offered an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 5, on page 91, line 14, after the word "condition," it is proposed to strike out "except as hereinafter specifically provided;" and all of sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13 of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 6. That the said laws so reenacted, extended, and continued shall be so construed as to permit the entrance into or residence within the United States, and any territory subject to its jurisdiction, of those persons of Chinese descent who are citizens of the United States by reason of birth and those who are specifically granted by law such privilege, and no others.

SEC. 7. That the words "Chinese person" or "person of Chinese descent" as used in said laws shall be construed to mean any person descended from an ancestor of the Mongolian race, which ancestor is now, or was at any time subsequent to the year 1800, a subject of the Emperor of China; and in any proceeding or examination relating to the exclusion or expulsion of one alleged to be such a person, instituted or conducted by the Government, the statement, under oath, of a duly appointed immigration or inspection officer that he believes such person to be a Chinese person or a person of Chinese descent shall constitute sufficient proof thereof, unless such person shall establish by affirmative evidence to the satisfaction of the officer or tribunal charged with the determination of the question that such is not the fact.

SEC. 8. That wherever the word "laborers" is used in the laws relating to the exclusion or expulsion of Chinese it shall be construed to include all persons of Chinese descent not specifically permitted by law to enter or remain within the United States; and so much of section 2 of the act approved November 3, 1893, as provides that "The words 'laborer' or 'laborers' wherever used in this act or in the act to which this is an amendment shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled manual laborers" is hereby repealed.

SEC. 9. That the officers of the Government shall have the same right to decide questions of fact upon which rests a claim of citizenship set up by any person of Chinese descent as they have to pass upon matters of fact relating to the admission or exclusion of persons conceded to be aliens.

SEC. 10. That the provisions of "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903, shall apply to alien Chinese persons permitted by the Chinese-exclusion laws to enter or remain in the United States as they do to other aliens.

SEC. 11. That the provisions contained in section 13 of an act entitled "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States," approved September 13, 1888, shall be so construed and modified as to give an appeal in behalf of either the United States or the Chinese person within ten days from a judgment of the commissioner of the United States court to the district court of the United States for the district wherein the proceeding took place, and to permit a further appeal on behalf of the Government alone to the circuit court of appeals or the Supreme Court of the United States, according to the nature of the questions involved; but the action of the district court, if adverse to the person of Chinese descent, may be reviewed by the Supreme Court by certiorari if application therefor be made within sixty days after the first day upon which said court would have received the same; but the time between the annual terms of the court shall constitute no part of such sixty days.

SEC. 12. That sections 2 and 3 of said act, approved April 29, 1902, are hereby amended by striking out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" whenever they occur therein and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Commerce and Labor;" and all power and authority heretofore conferred by the laws relating to the admission and exclusion of persons of Chinese descent upon the Secretary of the Treasury shall hereafter be possessed and exercised by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

SEC. 13. That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may, in special cases where he is of opinion that such action is just and right and not contrary to the public welfare, relieve, under conditions to be determined by him, from the operation of the laws relating to the exclusion or expulsion of persons of Chinese descent, any person who came into the United States prior to December 8, 1894, or who has rendered the Government meritorious services.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer at this point the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of the bill as it now stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

All Chinese and other aliens whose emigration is encouraged or induced by the agreement of any foreign government or by any integral part thereof or by any foreign colony or dependency, directly or indirectly, with any transportation company, or who are brought to the United States as passengers by any transportation company having any agreement with any foreign government or any integral part thereof or any foreign colony or dependency, which agreement binds said foreign government to furnish a certain number of emigrants to such transportation company or to make payments to such company or companies in case the agreed number of emigrants are not furnished or do not apply for passage, shall be excluded from admission to the United States.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator from Massachusetts who has offered that amendment would explain the necessity for it. I thought what it provides was practically the law now.

Mr. LODGE. No. I can explain it in a very few words, and I am sure the Senator and I will agree about it.

There has recently been made between the Cunard Steamship Company and the Government of Hungary a contract or agreement to the effect that if the Cunard Company will run a line of steamships from Fiume, a port of Hungary, that the Hungarian Government will see that they have 30,000 immigrants a year. If that number does not apply for passage or is not furnished, then the Government agrees to make payment to the company, as I understand.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that it is absolutely against public policy to allow any government to make contracts of that character with transportation companies for sending immigrants here. The Hungarian Government say that they do not desire their people to emigrate, but if they are going to emigrate they wish them to emigrate from their own ports and under their own control, which will result, of course, as anyone can see, in that Government sending us only the most undesirable portion of their population.

This clause is embodied in the immigration bill which has been reported by the Committee on Immigration. The subject has been carefully considered by that committee, but the bill contains a number of other provisions, and it is not at all probable that it can be passed at this session. This provision has had the careful consideration of the Committee on Immigration, and the agreement as to the necessity for it was unanimous.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I did not understand when the amendment was read exactly what was the import of it, but, on the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I think it is a very proper amendment and one that we ought to enact into law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One or two amendments were passed over.

Mr. HALE. Yes; I am going to call those up.

Mr. PETTUS. If the Senator from Maine will allow me, I wish to say that I made a motion on yesterday to strike out the provision in reference to the Western Union Telegraph Company. The Senator from Maine in charge of this bill communicated with the Secretary of the Treasury, and it has been ascertained from that communication that the law of the United States provides expressly for paying interest on a claim situated as that is. Therefore I withdraw the amendment.

I ask that the communication from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury to the Senator from Maine may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The communication referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 22, 1904.

Senator EUGENE HALE,
Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

SIR: In answer to your telegram of this date addressed to the Auditor for the Treasury, I have the honor to state that the interest in the case in question was incurred under the act of March 3, 1875. (Stat. 18, p. 481.) Judgment was rendered in the Supreme Court on November 18, 1895, on a claim of the Government against the Western Union Telegraph Company for business claimed to have been transacted over a bond-aided telegraph and railroad line. Under the above law the amount of $12,790.60 found due the company on other settlements was withheld by the Secretary after the amount had gone to warrant.

The claim for principal and interest was filed in this Department on February 27, 1904, referred to the Auditor on March 7, 1904, and the principal paid out of outstanding liabilities on March 8, 1904, and the claim for interest certified on March 21, and revised and approved by the Comptroller of the Treasury on appeal April 4, 1904.

A copy of the Comptroller's decision is inclosed herewith.

Respectfully,

H. A. TAYLOR, Acting Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY,
April 4, 1904.

The Western Union Telegraph Company appealed March 24, 1904, from the action of the Auditor for the Treasury Department in settlement No. 46864, dated March 21, 1904, in disallowing $3,669.24, claimed to be due as interest under the terms of the act of March 3, 1875. (18 Stat., 481.)

This case was recently before this office on the question of what auditor should settle this interest account. (28 MS. Dec., p. 977.) As only such facts as were necessary for the decision were there given, the entire case will be stated here.

In February, 1888, the Second Comptroller of the Treasury requested suit to be instituted against the Western Union Telegraph Company for the recovery of over $12,000, which he claimed to have been improperly paid to that company. While the matters were pending which led up to this action by the Comptroller, accounts for current business had been presented by that company to the then Third Auditor, representing services rendered from August, 1885, to June, 1887. These accounts remained unaudited until they amounted to $12,790.66, which sum was subsequently withheld, under said act of March 3, 1875, to offset any recovery in the above suit.

These accounts were transmitted to the Auditor at different dates between October 4, 1886, and April 4, 1888. They were finally audited and settlements made at various dates between November 14, 1889, and April 30, 1890. At the time the various settlements were made the original appropriations had lapsed, but Congress made provision for the payment of these claims in the deficiency acts of September 30, 1890 (26 Stat., 550), and March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 894). Part of the drafts were drawn for the payment of these claims on January 19, 1891, and the remainder on May 18, 1891; but these drafts were retained in the Treasury Department under the act of March 3, 1875, and not delivered to the claimant.

As requested by the Second Comptroller, suit was instituted against the company in March, 1888. This was decided in the circuit court against the United States, was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which, on November 18, 1895 (160 U. S., 53), affirmed the judgment of the circuit court, but the mandate was not filed in the latter court and the suit dismissed until March 1, 1904.

The act of March 3, 1875, supra, provides:

"That when any final judgment recovered against the United States or other claim duly allowed by legal authority shall be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment, and the plaintiff or claimant therein shall be indebted to the United States in any manner, whether as principal or surety, it shall be the duty of the Secretary to withhold payment of an amount of such judgment or claim equal to the debt thus due to the United States, and if such plaintiff or claimant assents to such set-off, and discharges his judgment or an amount thereof equal to said debt or claim, the Secretary shall execute a discharge of the debt due from the plaintiff to the United States. But if such plaintiff or claimant denies his indebtedness to the United States or refuses to consent to the set-off, then the Secretary shall withhold payment of such further amount of such judgment or claim as in his opinion will be sufficient to cover all legal charges and costs in prosecuting the debt of the United States to final judgment. And if such debt is not already in suit it shall be the duty of the Secretary to cause legal proceedings to be immediately commenced to enforce the same, and to cause the same to be prosecuted to final judgment with all reasonable dispatch. And if in such action judgment shall be rendered against the United States or the amount recovered for debt and costs shall be less than the amount so withheld as before provided, the balance shall then be paid over to such plaintiff by such Secretary with 6 per cent interest thereon for the time it has been withheld from the plaintiff."

The only question involved is as to the date upon which payment was "withheld from the plaintiff."

The Auditor for the Treasury Department allowed interest from the dates the several drafts were drawn, viz, January 19, 1891, and May 18, 1891. The claimant contends that interest should be allowed: (1) From the dates the services were rendered; or (2) from such time thereafter as would allow a reasonable time for auditing the accounts; or (3) if neither of the foregoing be authorized, then from the dates of the several settlements.

The claimant's first and second contentions can not be sustained. The established rule of the Government is not to pay interest on claims except in cases especially authorized by Congress, and the delay of the accounting officers in settling the accounts can not operate to change this rule. (8 Comp. Dec., 498; 7 Op. Att. Gen., 523.)

The only authority for the payment of this interest is in the act of March 3, 1875. Under that act it was the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold payment of these claims when they were presented for payment. When were they "presented for payment?" Clearly not until they had been duly allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Government and so certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that it was his duty to pay the claims unless they were to be withheld under the act of March 3, 1875. It is equally clear that as payment could be made only from appropriations available for that purpose, payment of any of these claims could not be withheld until after such appropriations were made.

There is no record of any order by the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold payment of these claims, nor of any specific act to that end, until after the drafts were issued. It was the custom of the Treasury Department to mail such drafts to claimants. This was not done, and their retention must be treated as a withholding under the act of March 3, 1875, from the dates of the drafts.

The action of the Auditor is affirmed.

R. J. TRACEWELL, Comptroller.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A committee amendment was passed over on page 2.

Mr. GORMAN. Before that amendment is taken up I should like to ask the Senator from Maine why the appropriation to meet the annual share of the United States in the expenses of the International Sanitary Bureau, created under a resolution of the Pan-American Conference at Mexico, was stricken out?

Mr. HALE. Provision for that was made in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. GORMAN. It is in the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE. Yes. The first amendment that was passed over is the one on page 2, beginning in line 10, which was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of State, as an act of grace and comity, to reimburse the Compagnie Française des Cables Télégraphiques for expenses incurred in repairing its cables and property, which were cut and damaged by United States forces in Cuba during the Spanish-American war, $77,712.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, in regard to that amendment I understand three or four other claims of the same character have been presented. I have not the list. I had it yesterday for a moment; but the Senator from Maine probably has the document in which they are mentioned. From that document it appears the English Government as well as the French Government have a similar claim, and put it upon the same ground, as a matter of comity. If it is a proper thing to do, why should the French claim alone be selected? As I understand, it is a matter concerning which there exists no right to make a demand. The cables were cut as an act of war, an act that was necessary at the time; but, as a matter of comity, it is proposed to pay the French company's claims to the exclusion of the others. I should like to have from the Senator some statement why that discrimination is made.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this amendment was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations favorably after they had investigated it and it had been recommended by the State Department. This payment is proposed to be made as an act of grace and comity. No legal right is admitted. The purpose of the amendment is simply to reimburse the French company for damage done their cables in the West Indian Islands during the war by our cutting them. As a matter of international comity, I think the claim ought to be paid; and I do not understand that the Senator from Maryland disputes the proposition that as a matter of comity it is reasonable to pay it.

The Senator asks what has become of the other claims. There is one other claim of a similar nature for the cable cut at Manila, which belonged to a British company. That claim was referred to the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, the Committee on the Philippines. I have withheld a report on it. My reason for doing so, and for opposing the payment to the British company, is because there are a number of similar claims of our citizens against the British Government, not so large as this—I had them sent in from the State Department on request—which have been pending many years. Some of them, one at least with which I am familiar, is a very hard case, involving great injustice, although the amount claimed is only $10,000.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if they are claims of similar nature growing out of similar circumstances?

Mr. LODGE. No; they are not identical with this, excepting in the fact that they are mere acts of grace and comity.

Mr. FORAKER. Right there, if the Senator will allow me, I should like to ask a question. Why do we call this "an act of grace and comity?"

Mr. LODGE. Because it is nothing else.

Mr. FORAKER. Why is it not something else? If, as a matter not of war necessity, we see fit to cut a cable of a French company, something we certainly did not have a right to do, are we not under obligations to pay the damages? Of course they could not bring an action, but to say it is a mere "act of grace and comity" does not seem to me to state the case fairly. There is an obligation arising, according to international law, to reimburse where we take property. I have not had occasion to examine the authorities on the subject, for the question has just been brought up, but it seems to me that that is a recognized proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator thinks there is such an obligation, but there is not.

Mr. FORAKER. There certainly ought to be. If in the prosecution of war we see fit to take the property of a noncombatant, of a neutral, cut it and destroy it, and appropriate it, we certainly ought to stand ready to pay for it; and it would be "an act of grace and comity" only in the sense that they could not sue us to recover; but certainly it is an obligation that we ought to recognize and treat as an obligation if the amount of damage done in that way is established.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to argue the question of the nature of this claim, because if we are going to establish it as a matter of legal right there is a great deal to be said. At the time they were cut these cables were in the possession and they were being used for military purposes by the power with which we were at war.

Mr. FORAKER. Of course that altogether changes the case. I understood the Senator to say that these were cables belonging to the French company referred to, and in their use.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. FORAKER. And that we, to prohibit any use of them, had cut them, as we had a right to do, according to international law. I am not proposing to make any opposition on the ground that this is spoken of as a mere "act of grace and comity" rather than as an obligation, but it does seem to me that it is an obligation rather than a mere act of courtesy and grace.

Mr. LODGE. The French cables running among the West India Islands that were not in the control of Spain and were open to us to use we, of course, used freely during the war, and paid for their use; but the cables that were cut were cables running into Cuba, which were being used by the Spanish Government and by the Spanish authorities in Cuba for military purposes, and that was the reason we cut them. It was a military act.

Mr. SPOONER. Why should not the French company be reimbursed as "an act of grace and comity" by Spain rather than by the grace and comity of the United States?

Mr. LODGE. I suppose because Spain did not cut the cable.

Mr. SPOONER. No; but Spain seized the cable and was utilizing it for purposes hostile to us. It was in belligerent use.

Mr. LODGE. Unquestionably.

Mr. SPOONER. We had the same right to cut that cable as if it had been a Spanish cable owned by the Spanish Government.

Mr. LODGE. Beyond a doubt.

Mr. SPOONER. Then, when Spain seized this cable, which was the property of the French company, was not that a question for France to settle with Spain under the principles of comity, instead of for the United States to settle with this French company on principles of comity? We did no wrong. The United States proceeded in entire right, under the rules of war. I can not see quite how the Senator works this out.

Mr. HALE. Does it follow because they might have a legal claim against the Spanish Government they may not also, in just the language used here as "an act of grace and comity," have a claim against us because we were the nation who destroyed the cable, who cut the cable? If we had not done that, the cable would have been restored by the Spanish Government to these people. We intervened and we destroyed it.

Mr. SPOONER. Perhaps it was part of the contract between Spain and the French company, under which this cable was permitted to be landed on Spanish territory, that in the event of war the Spanish Government should have the right to use it.

Mr. HALE. Even that would not affect the question of—I will not say obligation, for that is not consistent in connection with "grace and comity," but a moral obligation, a matter of good feeling and good-fellowship.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. HALE. But we might still be responsible, as we were the intervening parties who cut the cable and destroyed it, even if they did have a claim against the Spanish Government.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course I recognize a moral obligation just as much as the Senator or anyone else does, but I can not exactly see why the United States, if the cable was seized by the Spanish Government and was being used by that Government—a belligerent—had not the right to cut it.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly we had that right.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator will allow me, I quite agree with him in the view he evidently takes of this question.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know enough about it to take much view.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. No; but as you are thinking it out.

Mr. SPOONER. It looks to me questionable.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the cable belonging to the French company was in the use of the Spanish Government, should we not treat it as though it was the property of and belonging to the Spanish Government?

Mr. SPOONER. That was my suggestion.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes; I so understood the Senator. If the cable was the property of the Spanish Government and the title to it was in the Spanish Government, obviously there would be no claim against us, even though we did cut it. If the use of it was in the Spanish Government, although the title was in the French Government, and we destroyed it, it seem to me the French Government must look to Spain and not to the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. That was my suggestion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Supposing it had been a ship instead of a cable?

Mr. LODGE. This cable was the property of a private company—that is, it was not a Government cable.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly not.

Mr. LODGE. And it was used by the Spanish Government and used by the Spanish military forces. This amendment was reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations. I thought we all went over it there.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not present at the meeting of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and if I had been, when the consideration came to my mind that led me to doubt whether the action of the committee was to constitute a precedent I would conceive it to be my duty to indicate it.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator speak a little louder? We should like to hear him on this side.

Mr. SPOONER. I was about to ask the Senator whether he knows anything about the terms under which the Spanish Government permitted the French company to lay this cable? It may easily be, and I think usually is, made a condition of such a concession that in time of war the government granting the concession may use it. If that be a fact, would it not make this provision entirely without any foundation, legal or moral?

I will ask the Senator another question. Does he know of Congress ever having passed such a provision?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think there has ever been a reimbursement for cutting a cable in time of war. That was why I objected to the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio that this was anything but "an act of grace and comity." It certainly can not be described as anything else than that, in my opinion, and to admit that there was any right I think would be a very unfortunate thing.

Mr. SPOONER. There probably will be other wars.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, this cutting of cables——

Mr. SPOONER. And other cutting of cables——

Mr. LODGE. This cutting of cables in time of war is comparatively new. I do not at this moment recall a war in which that has been done, except our own, because the great wars that succeeded the laying of the Atlantic cable and the general use of cables were not wars in which cables were involved—that is, the Franco-Prussian war and the Russo-Turkish war were not wars which involved sea fighting.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose if a ship belonging to a Frenchman or a French company had been lying at anchor in the harbor of Habana and the Spanish Government had taken possession of it and utilized it against us in belligerent operations and we had seized it, captured it, or destroyed it, there would be no possible theory either in law or as a matter of grace upon which the United States could be called upon to appropriate money to the owner of that ship to reimburse him. The ship would be no more private property than the cable, except that the cable could only be laid, because it involved the granting of concessions by the Spanish Government, under some contract with the Government of Spain. It is a doubtful proposition to me, and everything we do of this sort is a precedent.

Mr. LODGE. On that point, if the Senator will allow me, I have not the contract. I have not seen the contract or the concession of the Spanish Government. I do not think it was before the committee at all. The matter came in with the letter of the Secretary of State, stating the undoubted fact that we had cut this cable as a war measure.

Mr. SPOONER. Without doubt.

Mr. LODGE. Of course the cable was in use by the Spanish Government—whether forcibly or not, I do not know—and as we were the party to the war which had caused the injury and the temporary destruction of the cable, it was an act of grace and comity to refund to this company what it had lost. There is no question of the title of the company to the property.

Mr. SPOONER. I am inclined to think that as a matter of grace and favor to the United States we ought to defer action upon this matter until we know more about the facts.

Mr. LODGE. I can get the full report if the Senator wants it. Of course I did not expect there would be any——

Mr. SPOONER. I have not heard of it before. It has just come to my attention.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, this is placed upon the ground of comity, and of course it could not be put upon any other ground. In our own country, recognizing the rule of international law, President Grant vetoed the bill for the relief of Dr. Milton J. Best, of Kentucky. This was a case of destruction of property, of a home of a loyal citizen at the seat of war and as a result of military operations. The President, under the advice of the Attorney-General, vetoed the bill for Best's relief because of the well-known principle of international law that when within the scope of war there is a destruction of the property of a citizen or a subject by act of war, there is no relief. That has been a principle of international law for centuries.

The Supreme Court in several cases of the same sort has applied the same principle to the destruction of the property of our own citizens, and has held that under international law the citizen within the theater of war bears that as the result of war, and under the international view there is no remedy or relief. The question went to the Supreme Court and was decided in respect of the right of an alien, a subject of a neutral power, and it was held that aliens stand as do our own citizens. I remember a case very much resembling the instance supposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, where the ships of another power, a neutral power, were seized. It was in the Franco-Prussian war and occurred on the Seine. The Germans took six or seven British vessels and sunk them in the Seine to prevent the French fleet from getting up the Seine and stopping the German army from crossing that river on its advance on Paris. And Bismarck afterwards made an apology and paid the English not as a matter of right, but as a matter of comity, disclaiming any obligation to do so much.

Now, as we do not in these cases pay our own citizens or aliens who are on our soil, where in the theater of war their property is destroyed, it does seem to me that with respect to the destruction of a cable used by the Spaniards in the Philippines, which was cut as an act of war, it is pressing the doctrine of international comity too far to expect us to pay neutral foreigners for the damages resulting.

When we will not pay our own citizens at home, in the theater of war, for losses as the result of an act of war, and will not pay aliens on our own soil and having an asylum with us, it ought to be an extremely strong case where, for an act of war, as it was in this case, we should reimburse the citizens or a corporation of another country, and especially where our obligation is not direct, but at most is secondary. We were acting against the Spanish belligerents, and incidentally destroyed property whereby French citizens were damnified. We do not pay our own citizens and we do not pay aliens on our soil for the direct destruction of property by our own acts of belligerency. I think we ought not to extend the doctrine of comity so far as, in the second degree, to pay for destruction which, in the first instance, if paid for at all, should be paid for by Spain and not by us. As the French were thus damnified indirectly only by us, we, who do not pay our own citizens or aliens on our soil for destruction by war, are not bound in comity to make this payment to the French injured by a belligerent act against the Spaniards.

Mr. HALE. Let the matter go over for the present. The Senator from Massachusetts has sent for some additional papers.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I have asked that this matter may go over for the present.

Mr. LODGE. I have sent for the papers in the Foreign Relations Committee room.

Mr. HALE. I will call it up again.

I call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to an amendment beginning in line 25 on page 75. It is the amendment upon which he had some question, and as to which I sent him the papers showing why it should be the Auditor for the Interior rather than the Treasury Department.

Mr. GORMAN. I have read the document the Senator has sent me—Document No. 285, Fifty-eighth Congress, first session. The Auditor makes a perfectly plain statement in regard to this transfer. I was not aware at the time that under a provision in some appropriation act or by a law passed by Congress the Auditors of the Departments are to take charge of these claims instead of the Auditor of the Treasury Department. That being the law, there is no reason, of course, why I should object to this particular amendment, although under the original act making the appropriation of more than a million dollars it was provided that the accounts should be audited in the Treasury Department. I will not object to the amendment, but at the same time I desire to make a statement.

Mr. President, I think it is a very great mistake to have the Auditor of the Interior Department audit all the claims that are passed upon or allowed by that Department. I think that system will, not improperly, but necessarily, result in a great deal of extravagance. If the officers of the Department are to determine the amount to be allowed, and are authorized to pay it at once, without any supervision, as has been done heretofore, from the foundation of the Government as I understand, it will naturally lead to extravagance.

Take the matter of appropriations as handled by this body. I think every Senator who has looked into the subject must recognize the fact that since we have transferred many of the appropriation bills to committees which were organized for the purpose of framing legislation in regard to the Departments, the Post-Office Committee, for instance, the Military Affairs Committee, and so on, you find nothing except the influence of the particular Department operating on the committee. I repeat what was said by a very distinguished Member of the House, of long experience as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—the late Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania—when they inaugurated that system in the other branch, that it would result in increased appropriations of from 40 to 50 per cent. I think it has been demonstrated that that is way below the increase which has occurred, and by that I mean the unnatural increase, for, as a matter of course, we yearly increase expenditures in everything.

So I think this system which you have inaugurated in the Departments is an unwise one. I believe the old rule was best. If the volume of work is so great that the Auditors of the Treasury Department are not able to adjust it and determine the questions presented, we had better increase the number of Auditors under the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not believe that economy can be had, or proper expenditure of public money, without the supervision of some one central power.

This claim, amounting to a million dollars, was appropriated for under an old act. The amount of the claim was to be audited and determined by the Secretary of the Interior, and then afterwards was to be referred to the Auditor of the Treasury Department. The only reason for the transfer given by this Auditor now is that there ought to be a full and complete record of this transaction in the Interior Department. That can be easily had and has heretofore always been had. Copies of the papers should be made, and a copy of the award should be filed in the Department.

I do not believe the reason for the transfer is a sound one. But it is useless, as I take it, to attempt to remedy this matter now, when the general rule is the other way. I only call attention to it in the hope that hereafter we may change the existing law and go back to the old system of auditing all of these claims in the Treasury Department.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland a question. I did not quite understand the Senator. Did he say the Interior Department now has an Auditor?

Mr. GORMAN. So it seems by this statement made by the Auditor of the Treasury, in which he says that this particular claim, which amounted to $1,967,000, was appropriated for in the deficiency act of 1900; and under the provision of the law as it then stood the Interior Department simply passed upon the claim, and after the amount was ascertained the payment was made through the Treasury Department after passing through the Comptroller of the Treasury. But now, under a more recent act, all claims that are allowed in the deficiency act go through the Auditor of the particular Department—the Interior, or the Post-Office, or whatever it may be. The Post-Office Auditor, however, is an officer of the Treasury Department.

Mr. TELLER. He always has been.

Mr. GORMAN. He is now. So the Auditor of the Treasury, Mr. Timme, recommends the provision which is contained in the bill, transferring the final audit from his office to that of the Auditor for the Interior Department.

Mr. HALE. I appreciate the force of what the Senator says, but we are confronted with a condition, as the Auditor says. The matter does now come under the Auditor——

Mr. GORMAN. It is impossible on this side to hear one word that the Senator says. It is not his fault.

Mr. HALE. I was going to say that I do not think this payment, and I think the Senator will agree with me, ought to be longer delayed, and the Auditor of the Treasury himself has furnished the reason why the provision should be as it is in the bill. Therefore I hope the Senator will not insist upon any amendment to it. The money ought to be paid, because we appropriated it long ago.

Mr. GORMAN. I take it for granted it was impossible to hear on the other side what I said. As I said a moment ago, after this statement of the Auditor of the Treasury Department, I suppose I ought not to object.

Mr. HALE. I so understood.

Mr. GORMAN. I merely wanted to make the statement and to call attention to the fact that I think the recent provision in the law changing the whole system of auditing these accounts is an unfortunate one.

Mr. TELLER. It ought to be changed.

Mr. GORMAN. It ought to be changed. I recognize, however, that it can not be done upon this bill.

Mr. HALE. No. I am afraid it is an unfortunate change.

Mr. GORMAN. I think so.

Mr. HALE. But we can not repeal that act here.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand this is not the place to do it, although it appears that we are putting all sorts of provisions on appropriation bills, some of them most extraordinary.

I do not refer to the bill that is now being considered—the deficiency bill. I think it is within the rule and limit. But we have been having on appropriation bills—and it is likely from what I find on my desk that a little later on we are going to have others—general provisions of legislation changing the whole system of law. I merely call attention to this case. It appears that this matter has been remaining unadjusted, with the money appropriated since 1900, and I take it for granted it ought to have been adjusted. So I shall not make further objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 75, line 25, after the word "expired," it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That in the settlement by the accounting officers of the Treasury of the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the New York Indians, rendered by said court on November 22, 1898, contained in House Document No. 223, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, and appropriated for by Congress in the deficiency act of February 9, 1900, the distribution of the award to said Indians shall be made on settlements of Auditor for the Interior Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 88, line 3, the blank should be filled in by inserting the figures "289."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I offer an amendment to be inserted at the end of line 2, on page 4.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Mr. HALE. On page 4, after line 18, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Mr. HALE. On page 12, after line 21, to meet a law which has just been passed, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

For additional services required during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, by authority of an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate electrical wiring in the District of Columbia," approved April —, 1904, namely, for electrical engineer, $2,500; for two electrical inspectors, at $1,200 each; in all, $4,900.

Mr. HALE. On page 16, line 16, after the word "fifty-two,"

I think a committee amendment was adopted. The correct number of the document is 298. I move that it be inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 24, after line 12, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

ARMORIES AND ARSENALS.

Rock Island Arsenal: The Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to rent such portion of the electrical power generated by the power plant of the Rock Island Arsenal as may not be needed for purposes of the United States, and to apply the proceeds to the maintenance and operation of said plant, the surplus to be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HALE. On page 23, after line 5, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

For packing and transporting a model of the Capitol building, which represents the said Capitol building as it now is, to and from the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis and there exhibiting the same in the Government building and as a part of the Government exhibit at said exposition, $3,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which sum shall be immediately available and shall be expended under the direction of the superintendent of the Capitol, who is hereby authorized and directed to superintend the packing, transportation, and exhibition of said model and the return thereof, and for that purpose is authorized to employ such person or persons as may necessary.

Mr. HALE. On page 57, after line 13, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

Office of the Secretary: The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $49,840 made in the deficiency appropriation act approved February 18, 1904, "For such number of clerks of class 4, clerks of class 3, clerks of class 2, clerks of class 1, clerks at the rate of $1,000 each per annum, clerks at the rate of $900 each per annum, clerks at the rate of $720 each per annum, messengers, assistant messengers, and for the services of such other persons, at a rate of compensation not exceeding $1,000 each per annum, as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may deem to be requisite and necessary in his office and in the Bureaus of Manufactures and Corporations, in addition to the employees transferred from the office of the Secretary of the Treasury," remaining unexpended June 30, 1904, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to know of the Senator how much is reappropriated here. I notice any number of items where we reappropriate or make available unexpended balances. Of course on the face of the bill such items would not enable any of us to ascertain what the appropriations are. As near as I can gather it from what I have heard, it is an indefinite amount. The authority is given to employ so many persons at a thousand dollars and then some other indefinite number of persons. Is not that unusual? In all the Departments do we not, as a rule, fix the number and not leave it to the discretion of the Secretary, except upon his estimate and then the scrutiny of the committee?

Mr. HALE. The general policy of the committee ought to be to make direct appropriations and not reappropriate unexpended balances. But as the Senator, with his large experience in years past upon the committee, knows, we do occasionally make just such a provision as this. It comes in late. The Secretary of the Department yesterday sent in a letter saying it was the only way that the Department, which is a new one, just adapting itself to conditions, can get the benefit of the $10,000 in its clerical force, and the Secretary in a brief way states that that is the reason. If the Senator is very determined about the matter and believes it to be bad legislation I shall not push the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I think we ought to deal with this matter a little more deliberately. I do not say this for the purpose of criticising the Secretary. I have no doubt he is like all Secretaries—he wants all he can get for his Department and all he thinks is necessary. But I do believe there ought to be a check put somewhere on this system of legislation. I think Congress ought to determine these matters, and I trust, coming in as it does, without any estimate, the Senator will withdraw the amendment and let it go over and consider it hereafter.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HALE. The special committee which made a personal investigation has sent in a small item for clerical work, which I offer as an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, after line 6, insert:

To pay Edward C. Goodwin for extra services as clerk to the special committee appointed to investigate into certain charges respecting Hon. CHARLES H. DIETRICH, a Senator from the State of Nebraska, under a resolution of the Senate of February 1, 1904, from February 1, 1904, to April 14, 1904, $420.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 77, lines 10 and 11, I move to correct the amount by changing the total so as to read "$129,889."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 49, line 14, the word "thirty" should be "forty," to cover a provision already in the bill. It should be included in this total.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, line 14, after the words "Geological Survey," strike out "thirty" and insert "forty" before "thousand;" so as to read:

For additional amount for analyzing and testing at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition the coals and lignites of the United States in order to determine their fuel values and the most economic method for their utilization for different purposes, under the supervision of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, $40,000, to be available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. That is all I have to offer, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. The cable amendment has not been disposed of. That is a committee amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. That amendment has not been disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments have been disposed of, except one.

Mr. HALE. That is the cable amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the cable amendment. The question is on agreeing to that amendment, on page 2 of the bill, inserting lines 10 to 15.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have the papers from the Committee on Foreign Relations, Senate Document No. 16 and House of Representatives Report No. 292. The papers are given very fully in Senate Document No. 16, beginning on page 15.

The case can be summed, I think, in the letter from the Secretary of State to the French ambassador in 1900, in which he says:

In this case, as in the instance of similar claims preferred by British companies, it is held as a general proposition and as a matter of right neutral telegraphic cables are exposed to the same vicissitudes in time of war as other neutral property, a proposition which finds conventional confirmation in the fifteenth article of the convention, signed at Paris, March 14, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables, which article provides that the stipulations of that convention shall be understood to affect in no wise the liberty of action of belligerents. It is, however, unnecessary to discuss this point as a proposition of right according to the consensus of international authorities, inasmuch as the Government of the United States is disposed, as far as its constitutional limitations permit, to regard claims of this nature from the point of view of equity. In two instances arising from injuries to foreign-owned cables during the war with Spain the President has been pleased, as a matter of gracious equity, to recommend to Congress the favorable consideration of their claims for actual damage suffered.

It is thought that the claim of the French Trans-Atlantic Cables Company rests on no less reasonable grounds of equity than those mentioned of the other companies, in view of the valuable services rendered by it after its Cuban stations were occupied by the forces of the United States.

Then the Secretary says:

It is earnestly hoped that, "as an act of grace and comity," Congress at its next session will authorize the Secretary of State to reimburse the above-named cable companies the amount they expended in repairing their cables which were cut and damaged by United States forces during the Spanish-American war of 1898.

I have been looking over the total of damages to the French Cable Company. I had not looked at it for some time. I find that they had a good deal of property destroyed besides the cutting of cables:

Property lost by bombardment of Aguadores cable house: Testing instrument, batteries, line connections, and furniture destroyed, rebuilding Aguadores cable house.

Property lost by bombardment of Playa del Este houses—

That amounts to some $25,000 of the $77,000. The company rendered considerable service to the Government during the war. As was stated, the principal proportion of this loss resulted from the cutting of the cables. I do not myself think the money can be given in any way except as an act of grace and comity. I do think it can be given properly in that way. It is undoubtedly true that the cables were used by the Spanish. That is why it was a military necessity to cut them.

As to the distinction between this and the other cable companies I have never seen any amendment for the British company, the Cuba Submarine, and as to the Manila company I wish to restate what I began to state when the Senator from Maryland first asked the question—that this and others are acts of grace and comity. They rest on equity and nothing else, and a nation that wants equity must do equity. If it is to have comity it can not be all on one side.

We have several cases here, just as good as these, for acts of grace on the part of the British Government, to which no attention has been paid for years. Whatever grant is made as an act of grace and comity, I for one certainly should never assent to any such payment to the Government of Great Britain unless we receive similar comity for similar claims by American citizens. That explains why the Philippine-cable claim is not here.

As to this particular claim, I know of no such case in regard to France. I think it is a case in which grace and comity might be reasonably exercised. The company rendered us valuable services. Many of these cables were cut in neutral waters beyond 3 marine leagues. Some of the claims are for damages merely incidental to the bombardment, not because they were in the enemy's hands. I thought at the time it passed the committee that as an act of comity it was a desirable appropriation to make.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, a few moments ago I made an inquiry as to why this claim should be put upon the ground of grace and comity instead of the ground of obligation——

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to hear the Senator from Ohio. I hope he will suspend until we can have order in the Chamber.

Mr. SPOONER. I was recognized by the Chair, but I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). There is too much confusion in the Chamber. The Chair recognized the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. He did not hear the Senator from Ohio address the Chair.

Mr. FORAKER. I beg the Senator's pardon; I thought the Chair recognized me.

Mr. SPOONER. I shall not take much time.

When one looks a little more carefully at this claim it becomes a more serious question than I thought it was. It is easy enough to call a matter a claim—one that ought to be put upon principles of comity and grace. It is always a nice thing to be in harmony with comity and do things that are gracious between ourselves.

But I see from these papers that there are three claims the granting of which upon the principles of grace and comity is recommended by the President, all growing out of the Spanish-American war. They are the claims of the Eastern Extension, Australasia and China Telegraph Company, a British corporation, amounting to £912 5s. 6d.; of the Cuba Submarine Telegraph Company, a British corporation, amounting to £8,174 17s. 9d.; and of La Compagnie Française des Cables Télégraphiques, a French corporation, amounting to $77,712. That is the amount proposed to be appropriated in this bill.

From these papers it appears that the claim was put forth as far as the British Government was concerned as to the first two claims with the opinion of counsel and referred to the Attorney-General. He gave a very careful and able opinion upon it in which he held that on principles of international law there was not the slightest foundation for the British claims; and these British claims are clearer claims than the claim of the French company is. It all depends upon one principle. These cables were not cut on the high seas. They were cut within territorial waters.

Mr. LODGE. Some of the French cables were cut beyond 3 marine leagues.

Mr. SPOONER. That does not appear here, but I think it makes no difference.

Mr. LODGE. I think it does not have any effect at all.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not observe that any of them were.

Mr. MONEY. May I ask the Senator at what port they were cut?

Mr. SPOONER. I am reading from Senate Document No. 16, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session.

Mr. MONEY. I mean to ask what was the name of the port where the cables were cut? You said they were cut in interior waters.

Mr. SPOONER. The cables were cut between Guantanamo and Caimanera, Caimanera and Playa del Este (island of Cuba), and between Playa del Este (island of Cuba) and Mole St. Nicholas (Republic of Hayti). All of these except the Mole St. Nicholas (Republic of Hayti) were cut in the territorial waters of Spain, at that time engaged in war with the United States.

Now, it amounts simply to the case of neutral property, this cable within territory of a belligerent in war and under the lawful operations of war was injured and destroyed.

There is nothing peculiarly sacred about the property because it happens to be a cable. Of course a cable is constructed as a money-making enterprise. It is valuable as property because of its earning capacity, but it is property, no more so than the stations on land, no more so than the houses of neutrals within the theater of war, or other property in the harbor or on the land. All such property is acquired in the first instance, and that is peculiarly true of a cable, with full knowledge that war may come, and that if it shall come neutral property in the theater of war must be subject to the vicissitudes of war.

There is no possible theory that I can see upon which the principle underlying this amendment can be applied to one sort of property belonging to a neutral situated in the theater of war and damaged or destroyed and not be applied generally to the property of neutrals which can be utilized by a belligerent as a cable. If ships and ammunition belonging to other and neutral governments had been seized by the Spanish Government to be used against us and we had destroyed it or captured it, no one would pretend that there was any theory of comity or law upon which we could be asked to reimburse a foreign government, much less a neutral subject or citizen of a foreign government.

If we begin this, where are we to end it? If this cable had been seized by the Spanish Government, as it had, that was a wrong done by the Spanish Government or a right exercised by the Spanish Government. It is conceded by the Queen's counsel of Great Britain or the British bar which gave the opinion found in these papers that as to the Philippine cables which were cut—and it is equally true as to the cutting of this cable—the United States was entirely within its right as a belligerent. Now, where will we draw the line if we once begin it? That is not all.

Property lost by bombardment——

Mr. LODGE. I called attention to that.

Mr. SPOONER. I will call attention to it. It is included in this proposed appropriation.

Property lost by bombardment of Aguadores cable house:
Testing instrument, batteries, line connections, and furniture destroyed	$7,280
Rebuilding Aguadores cable house	4,860
Property lost by bombardment of Playa del Este houses:
Testing instruments, batteries, line connections, and furniture destroyed	5,350
Property destroyed at Playa del Este by sailors from the United States war vessels, who broke open the Playa del Este cable houses and damaged testing instruments and other property therein contained	2,972
Rebuilding of Playa del Este cable houses	3,545

Twenty-four thousand dollars of these $77,000 was either destruction caused by a bombardment or by the acts of our sailors, and that is a very small part. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts tell me upon what theory or principle of comity the United States can pay to a neutral for property destroyed by bombardment when war——

Mr. LODGE. I never suggested that there was the slightest shadow of legal right. I opposed that entirely.

Mr. SPOONER. There was property of citizens of different countries destroyed by bombardment, by the military operations in Cuba.

Mr. LODGE. We are paying constantly claims of that sort during our own war. We are paying all the time for private property destroyed in the theater of war.

Mr. SPOONER. We have not paid, to my knowledge, any such claim. I sat as chairman of the Committee on Claims for some years, and thousands of such claims came to Congress, but in every instance within my knowledge the line was drawn when we reached the claim for damages for property injured in battle or by military operations strictly such.

Mr. LODGE. On what basis did we make payment to William and Mary College of Virginia?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. On the basis that the Senator's colleague pressed it so hard.

Mr. LODGE. I think that was one reason.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Wisconsin is correct in his general proposition of consideration given to property destroyed in war. Of course we have paid some claims for the occupation of buildings for the sick and wounded. Most of those, however, were where they were used after the war was properly over, along in 1865 and 1866.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I do not think, while the Senator has very grave doubts upon this matter, any more time on it should be taken, because it is very important that the bill shall be passed to-night. If we can have a vote taken upon it now, let that be done; if not, I will not press the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. On this amendment?

Mr. HALE. I do not press it further. I have not the right to withdraw it, because it is a committee amendment; but so far as I have that right, I will withdraw it, so it will not be before the Senate. But the same effect can be had if it is voted down.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, this seems to be an important matter. Why should not we fully discuss and intelligently dispose of it? I think there is a great deal to be said in behalf of the amendment. I do not think there is any legal obligation to pay it. When there was something said on that point a few moments ago it was because the impression then prevailed that the cables had been cut, independently of the fact that they were in the hands of the enemy and being utilized by the enemy.

Now, it turns out to be a case where of course there can not be any obligation, but I think there is a principle of equity involved, and so far at least as the cable is concerned there ought to be compensation perhaps. It is an important matter, and I do not see why it might not go over until we have taken time to fully discuss it.

Mr. HALE. That is what I propose.

Mr. FORAKER. I thought the Senator wanted us to vote on it now.

Mr. HALE. I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know how I will feel about it when I come to vote as at present advised.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. PETTUS. I offer an amendment to the bill, on page 53, after line 25.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, after line 25, insert:

To the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railway Company, for transportation of the mails under its present corporate name and under its former corporate name, the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad Company, over postal routes Nos. 24018 and 137018, during the period between July 1, 1876, and June 27, 1896, both inclusive, the sum of $21,039.75, as ascertained by the Auditor for the Post-Office Department and shown in Senate Report No. 2143 of the Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, accompanying bill S. 5436, to be immediately available.

Mr. HALE. I do not know about this amendment. It is a private claim, undoubtedly, and I make the point of order that it is a private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PETTUS. What is the point of order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That it is a private claim.

Mr. HALE. That it is a private claim, which the rules do not permit to be placed on an appropriation bill.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Maine will not urge his point of order. There are divers private claims in this bill, a great many of them, and they have been reported by the Committee on Appropriations, too. This claim has been regularly audited. It has been reported by the Cominittee on Claims. I will say that such claims have generally gone on, and I have known a half dozen of them that have gone on this same bill in exactly this same way. This bill contains an appropriation to which I objected; but I found I had made a mistake about it and withdrew my objection. I refer to the claim of the Western Union Telegraph Company. Is not that a private claim? What is it doing in this bill?

Mr. HALE. That was regularly audited, reported, and estimated for by the Department.

Mr. PETTUS. And this amendment has been audited by the Department; it has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims; it has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and not noticed.

Mr. HALE. The fact that it is reported does not make it in order; but it has been sprung upon me, and I have not had an opportunity to examine it. If it is a regularly audited claim then it is in order to go on the bill.

Mr. PETTUS. It is a regularly audited claim.

Mr. HALE. Then I withdraw the point of order against it.

Mr. PETTUS. It has been found to be due by the Court of Claims also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 15, on page 20. It provides for an extension of the time in which claims may be filed under the act referred to for two years from the date of the passage of the pending bill. I spoke to the Senator from Maine about the amendment and he understands it. The appropriation has already been made. It is recommended by the Secretary of War and by the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. HALE. It only provides for an extension of time.

Mr. BATE. That is all—an extension of time.

Mr. HALE. Then I do not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, at the end of line 15, it is proposed to insert:

The time for filing the claims under the provisions of the above-entitled act and amendment thereto and for the payment thereof is extended for two years from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the effect of that amendment?

Mr. HALE. It is to give two years' more time for these claims to be brought in.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What kind of claims?

Mr. HALE. For property destroyed. It is under a special act. We have been appropriating from time to time and extending as we do in all such cases. We extended the Private Lands Claims Court from year to year; and claims come in here, I do not know how many, but perhaps some hundred, which are good claims, and they are barred only by time. That is all that is asked here.

Mr. BATE. As I have stated, the money has already been appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUARLES. I send to the desk an amendment which I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will not object to.

Mr. HALE. I will see what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 90, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to reopen and adjust the claims of New Jersey and Wisconsin, for which appropriation was made by act of Congress approved March 3, 1903, on the basis of like claims of Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky, Maine, and Pennsylvania, with the same force and effect as though appropriation therefor had not been made or accepted by the said States.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I want to say in regard to these State claims that they have passed through what I may call an eventful history, so far as they involve appropriations from the Treasury. They have all become much larger than anybody ever expected to pay, or than any State originally ever expected to collect; but by reason of decisions from time to time of the accounting officers, the Court of Claims, and the Comptroller, certain bases have been fixed for certain States. We have already embarked upon the proposition and appropriated money that where a particular basis applies to a State, and the Comptroller has practically passed the accounts and paid the money, other States in like condition shall have the benefit of the decision and of the precedents set by payment. There are several cases now before the committee. If this proposition is adopted by the Senate, I shall move that as to the other claims, which are on the same basis, like conditions shall result in like appropriations. Then the matter will have to be considered by the accounting officers, the auditors, and the comptrollers, who will report to Congress. I simply wish to say in regard to this case that if this amendment is adopted it seems to be only fair that all the States shall be treated alike, and I shall move that the other States may be put upon the same basis.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If I remember correctly we in Connecticut thought that we had a right to have our claim adjusted on the same basis as were the claims of Indiana, New York, and perhaps those of some other States.

Mr. QUARLES. The States of Maine, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But a different rule prevailed. I was consulted as to whether Connecticut should accept the settlement as it was made, or take an appeal from it, or try to get more from Congress, and I advised the State of Connecticut to take the settlement as it was made there. If, however, any other State is coming in to have its claims opened and readjusted, I want Connecticut to be along with the rest.

Mr. HALE. I shall move an amendment that will cover all the States, for it would not be fair to make fish of one and flesh of another.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I only want to say, following the example of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], that the State of Ohio is in like manner interested, and if this amendment is adopted I hope what the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] proposes will be also done, because otherwise it would be unjust. If we are going to settle on this basis we ought all to be provided for at the same time. I had an amendment which I intended to offer, but in view of what the Senator from Maine says it is not necessary to offer it.

Mr. SPOONER. Just a moment, Mr. President. The case of New Jersey and Wisconsin, to which this amendment relates, is not invoking an enactment by Congress of any rule which did not apply in the settlement of the accounts of Connecticut, Indiana, and other States. It rests upon merely a technicality. The accounts were examined, the allowance made by the Auditor under the existing law, and Congress appropriated money sufficient to pay the claim of Wisconsin, when allowed, and also the claim of New Jersey, and perhaps the claims of one or two other States. The agent of the State of Wisconsin—a draft for $458,000 having been drawn, payable to the governor or the State—inquired as to his right to appeal to the Comptroller to review the accounting by the Auditor. He was informed that that could be done at any time before the draft was cashed. The State agent went home to consult the governor. Upon consultation it was decided that there were some manifest errors made by the Auditor, and that it was to the interest of the State, in order to keep the State on the same basis as these other States, and that it was its right, to secure a review of that audit by the Comptroller. During the absence of the agent the Comptroller made a decision that the appropriation by Congress took away the right of appeal for review to the Comptroller, and therefore the State was shut out from having a review, which all the other States had been allowed. The agent had been misled, not by any misrepresentation of the Comptroller, but because he changed his decision, and thereby precluded the State from having the review.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there are some other States, certainly the State of Massachusetts, who want to have a review of the decision in regard to their claims, which are partly provided for in this bill. I did not suppose they would be shut out.

Mr. SPOONER. This does not shut them out.

Mr. LODGE. No; but the Senator said that Wisconsin and New Jersey were shut out.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; and in my judgment Massachusetts is shut out——

Mr. LODGE. I, too, think Massachusetts is shut out.

Mr. SPOONER. If Massachusetts has accepted the settlement——

Mr. LODGE. She has not yet.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well; then she is not shut out.

Mr. LODGE. But I do not want her to be shut out from her proper claim.

Mr. SPOONER. As I understand, she would not be shut out, but upon that change of decision Wisconsin is surely entitled to the relief which this amendment proposes to give.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if, when this bill passes, Massachusetts will be shut out from the right of appeal?

Mr. SPOONER. You can take an appeal on Monday if you want to. You have a perfect right to do that.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he has asked a review by the Comptroller of the case of Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. No; none has been asked as yet.

Mr. SPOONER. You have a right to ask for it now.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that the claim of Massachusetts was on the same basis practically as that of the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. LODGE. There is an appropriation in this bill, as the Senator knows, to pay the claim of Massachusetts.

Mr. ALLISON. I know.

Mr. LODGE. There were certain items disallowed.

Mr. SPOONER. That was under the decision.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; and on those items an appeal ought to be allowed.

Mr. SPOONER. We have lost our right because of this decision, which only gives us a right——

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, since Wisconsin and New Jersey are to be included in the bill, I wish also to include California. Although California is some distance from the center of population, certainly justice should also be done to that State. We have upon the Calendar a bill that my friend from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] objected to a few weeks since, giving to the State 5 per cent on the net cash sales of public lands in California. Every other State has received that percentage except California, which has contributed, I think, to the Treasury of the United States, in the way of internal revenue, customs duties, and other taxes, its full quota.

I want my friend from Maine [Mr. HALE] to remember California not only in accepting an amendment in her favor here in the Senate, but—I have been a member of several conference committees with that Senator in times past—I should rather have his friendship in a conference committee than to have it on the floor of the Senate, although I desire it in both places. Therefore if New Jersey and Wisconsin are to be included I want my friend from Maine to stand loyally by the Golden State, the land of sunshine, fruits, and flowers.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Has the United States the proceeds of any land sold in California?

Mr. PERKINS. There were a great many hundreds of thousands of acres of land in California that were sold, the proceeds of which went into the Treasury of the United States. We are entitled, by reason of exempting our lands from taxation, to 5 per cent upon the net proceeds of the sales of such lands.

Mr. SPOONER. Will not the Senator from California, who has just made such a beautiful peroration, withhold any further observations until Wisconsin has first succeeded?

Mr. PERKINS. We want to travel right up alongside of Wisconsin. While my colleague and I do not talk as much as our friends from Wisconsin, yet we are thinking very loudly to-day on this question. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 21, on page 90. That seems to be rather an elastic place in the bill, which will stand the insertion of almost anything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 21, on page 90, it is proposed to insert:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to ascertain the principal sum or sums heretofore allowed to the States of Massachusetts, Maine, New York, and Pennsylvania, for money expended in behalf of the United States during the war of 1812 to 1815 with Great Britain, and upon such principal sum or sums so reimbursed to said States to allow interest according to the method adopted under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, authorizing the payment of interest upon like expenditures to the State of Maryland.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observe that New Hampshire has been omitted. I move to insert "New Hampshire" after the word "Maine." The New Hampshire claim was adjusted on precisely the same basis as that of Maine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Maine" it is proposed to insert "New Hampshire."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. After "New Hampshire" I move to insert "California."

Mr. KEAN. California did not engage in the war of 1812.

Mr. PERKINS. She would have been willing to engage in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. Iowa has been omitted. I move that it be inserted.

Mr. KEAN. Iowa did not engage in the war of 1812.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After "New Hampshire" it is proposed to insert "Iowa."

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to insert "Rhode Island" after "Maine."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After "Maine" it is proposed to insert "Rhode Island."

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. It is very easy to see the object of this performance; but I want to say that the adoption of the amendment of my colleague [Mr. QUARLES] simply removes a technical obstruction——

Mr. ALDRICH. That is a different thing.

Mr. SPOONER. I am talking about a different thing. The adoption of the amendment offered by my colleague simply removes an obstruction to the consideration of the claims of Wisconsin and New Jersey. The same privilege has already been accorded and executed as to all these other States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted it is proposed to insert:

To pay amounts found due the several States for expenses incurred and paid by them under act of July 27, 1861, as recommended by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury November 21, 1892, and December 2, 1892, and reported under resolution of the Senate (Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, Senate Document No. 75) by the Auditor for the War Department, $195,230.43.

That the amount found due the respective States in the foregoing appropriation shall be considered as a payment in full of all claims or demands of the several States for reimbursement of expenses incurred by them in the raising of volunteers to aid the United States in the war of the rebellion under act of Congress approved July 27, 1861, and acts amendatory thereto. And before payment to the respective States is made under the foregoing appropriation the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to take from the governors of the said States, respectively, a receipt in full for all claims and demands of said States against the United States growing out of the war of 1861, so far as the same relates to expenses in the raising of volunteers for which reimbursement is claimed under act of July 27, 1861, etc.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to hear the first part of that amendment again read before it is agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will again be read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 81, after line 16.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 81, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall debar the State of Massachusetts from appealing to the Comptroller for review or from prosecuting in the Court of Claims of the United States those portions of its claim under the act of July 27, 1861, which were disallowed by the Comptroller of the Treasury and the Auditor for the War Department.
